The meaning of this language is unmistakable. It provides a full and a sufficient remedy, and having provided it by the express purpose and will of the Constitutional Convention, because other methods were debated in that Convention and discarded—methods similar to this one were proposed and considered, and, having provided this one method of removing from office the officers of the United States, it impliedly excludes all others.

When anyone professes to find in the language of the Constitution a hitherto-undiscovered method or the authority for such a method, I submit to you that he is going against not only the express language of the Constitution but its generally accepted interpretation by the courts and constitutional authorities universally.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this measure. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I, too, regret that I must oppose the views of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary on this bill. I have always appreciated his opinion on all matters with reference to constitutional questions, and know that his judgment on questions of legislation has won the profound respect of our membership.

This bill provides that a United States district judge may be charged by resolution in the House of Representatives with misbehavior in office, and the House may hear the resolution in the same manner as provided for impeachment cases. If the House finds there are reasonable grounds for believing the judge committed the acts of misbehavior, then his case shall be tried, by three judges of the United States circuit court, who are appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The Attorney General prosecutes the case, with the assistance of Members of the House that he may choose to assist him. If the judge is found guilty of misbehavior, he would be removed from office, except that he may have a right to appeal to the Supreme Court.

I do not believe this measure, if enacted into law, would be constitutional. However, I am not going to argue that point. Even if this measure is constitutional, I do not believe it should become a law. The Constitution does provide that the President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes or misdemeanors, and that the United States Senate shall try such impeachment cases.

This particular bill is directed to the section of the Constitution that has to do with the question of good behavior, of whether or not judges are guilty of misbehavior. The bill says that if—

In the opinion of the House of Representatives, there is reasonable ground for believing that the behavior of a judge, within the meaning of section 1, article II, of the Constitution, has been other than good—

Then the judge shall be subjected to a trial by three judges of the United States circuit court. Certainly, all district judges should be men of good behavior. They should be above reproach. We do not have a given criterion as to the meaning of "good behavior" as interpreted under this bill.

It is my candid judgment that if we enact this measure into law and put it into effect we will have all kinds of questions raised about the misbehavior on the part of the judges of this country. Any person who becomes aggrieved at a district judge may charge that he is guilty of misbehavior. Any kind of a charge may be brought against a judge, a resolution proposed to the House of Representatives, and it would be for the House to determine whether the charge made against the judge affects his good behavior. The House would then have to define the term "good behavior" as it applies in that particular case. Of course, if the House finds there is reason to believe the judge may be guilty of misbehavior, the case is submitted to a court of three circuit judges appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. They may or may not have any feeling or interest in the trial of the case. Generally speaking, I hardly believe it is good practice for one set of judges to determine what is "good behavior" on the part of another.

If there is need for such a law, then why not make provision concerning the good behavior of the judges of the United States Circuit Court as well as the members of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Since the adoption of our Constitution hundreds of district judges have come and gone. Only 12 have been impeached and tried during this period, and a smaller number were convicted. Mr. Speaker, I see no demand for such legislation at this time.

We have always tried to keep the three departments of our Government as separate and distinct as possible. We have also tried to keep our courts free from undue pressure of all kinds. Today you are giving consideration to a bill that will provide a little more chance for individuals to bring pressure against our judges because they may be aggrieved on account of decisions that a particular judge has rendered against them.

This bill is an innovation, but not an improvement. I think this legislation is harmful and opens the way for legislation that might be still more harmful. It may be possible that our present method of trying judges for misbehavior in office is rather slow. All democratic processes are comparatively slow, but that does not mean that they are not right.

Some criticism was made by the author of this bill that when impeachment cases were tried in the Senate not all Members of that body were present. Mr. Speaker, that is not a criticism of the law. It is a criticism against the Members of the Senate who have not taken the interest they should in the trial of these judges.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, if this procedure is fundamentally right, it should include all of the other judges of the courts of the United States. Throughout the entire land—in all of the 48 States of the Union, where provision is made for the impeachment of judges in our State courts—we have nothing of this kind.

This legislation, in my judgment, is not in the interests of our democratic form of government. It is unwise. It might be subject to abuses of all kinds, and it is unnecessary. The bill should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely, speaking for myself, satisfied with this bill, the consideration of which the pending rule is intended to make in order. The bill raises a most interesting question. I am particularly eager that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary have full opportunity to develop his thoughts on the subject, and I trust that there will be no determined opposition to the pending rule.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5939) to provide for trials of and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5939, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate tremendously the generous remarks of my friends on the committee. I like to be bragged on, but I would a little rather they would vote with me and brag on me privately. We have a great committee and we get along well. I believe we may proceed to consider this matter, understanding thoroughly that everybody in the Chamber wants to do what is right about it.

I have a very deep conviction, both with reference to the constitutionality of the proposed measure and with regard to the necessity for its enactment. I do not know how anybody can attend upon the Senate, and I mean no disrespect—and I speak of the Senate now not as a part of the legislature, but as a high court of impeachment—I do not see how anybody with common sense can go over there and attend upon the Senate trying an impeachment and feel that the proceeding there is in any way to try any issue where the interest of the individual or the public is involved. That is the first proposition.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I am just getting started.

Mr. CHURCH. I think we ought to have such a Senate.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know whether you would help it or not, but you might.

Mr. CHURCH. I thank the gentleman from Texas, our distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I regard him as one of the leaders of the American bar, and have always enjoyed his friendship, his ability, and leadership.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I say this as not any reflection upon the Senate, but we are asking the Senate to do a perfectly ridiculous thing. It is not fair to the Senate. We are asking the Senate of the Unted States to turn its back on all of its general responsibility and sit and try an issue that ought, of itself, to be tried in a court in the first instance, and the Members of the Senate—and I say this not in criticism, but to state a fact—they take a solemn oath to try that case and if they were trying any judge before them who would try a case before him as the Senate would try an impeachment case, they would all impeach him right away. I do not say this in criticism. I say it in criticism of the legislative branch of the Government that has a chance to do something else besides standing here and talking about "the fathers." We need some sons that have as good sense as our fathers who sat in the Constitutional Convention had and do our job as well as they did theirs, and then we would stop that perfect farce in the Senate.

Now, what would you feel like in this situation? Suppose you would go over here to the Supreme Court to argue a question before the Supreme Court and you would look up and there would be one judge sitting on the bench, and then directly he would move off and two more would come on, and you would look up directly and those two would be gone and there would be a couple more sitting there. You would know, as a matter of common sense, something ought to be done about it if you could do it. Now, what is the use of being foolish about this. As a lawyer, suppose you were trying a case before a jury and they would all walk out except one or half of them walk out, moving in and out. We introduced evidence over there in the Senate from witnesses whom we had brought from California, from across the continent, and three Senators were sitting on the floor. Can we then get up here and brag about that as a method of doing business? We ought to be ashamed of ourselves. I cannot say that about my colleagues who brag on me like they have. They have cut me off from that. They are the finest fellows on earth. I would swim the river for any of them.

I am convinced that something has got to be done about this and sooner or later it is going to be done. Do you mean to tell me that the common sense of the Nation, looking on a farce like these impeachment trials, will continue to stand for it? I want to continue to repeat I am not holding the Senate primarily responsible. It is just a situation where human beings, these Senators with their many duties, have imposed upon them an additional responsibility which it is unfair and ridiculous to impose.

Those men in order properly to try one of these cases have got to turn their backs on the business of the Nation while they sit there and try to act as judges, when they are not. Their duties will not permit them to do other than set a bad example for the judges over whom they have the power to try and to impeach.

Now, can we do anything about it? This is the first question.

Something has got to be done about it, sooner or later. Now is the time to act. We are going to move from where we are either toward a greater control of the judiciary over the judges or we are going to move toward a greater control of the Department of Justice over the judges. We are moving in that direction now. I say this without any reflection on the Department of Justice. Government is an agency of human beings, but human beings are the agents of government and have got to do its business. Whenever the people who are clothed with the power to do the job will not do it, government turns to some other agency to do its business. There will be no use to complain if Government, moving away from its present instruments which are inadequate, moves in the direction we do not like if we give to Government no other choice. I realize the difficulties confronted in trying to have this bill considered on its merits. In the first place there is the inherited notion that there is some provision in the Constitution about judges being removed by impeachment. The average person in America believes there is something said in the Constitution about impeaching a judge. If I should ask this audience, largely made up of lawyers, if there is anything in the Constitution in regard to the impeachment of judges, many of them would answer yes. There is, however, not one single word in the Constitution about impeaching judges.

This is the applicable language:

> The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

If this language means that judges may be removed only by impeachment, it means that other civil officers may be removed only by impeachment.

The converse of it is true, of course. If other civil officers, despite that language in the Constitution, may be removed by means other than impeachment, then that language in the Constitution does not prevent other judges being removed by methods other than impeachment. That is as sound as can be, and none of my distinguished friends on the committee or elsewhere will be able to controvert that statement.

I am not unmindful of the difficulties we confront in trying to get the Members really to consider on its merits this proposed legislation. We have inherited the notion in this country that judges may be removed only by impeachment, and that notion is in our heads, or rather in our systems, just as our inherited religion and our inherited politics. We have inherited it. You never figured it out for yourself. There are very few, if any, lawers here who ever figured it out. It is harder to get out of your head a notion that has been acquired like that than it is to get out of your head some error that got in there by an erroneous functioning of your own mind. Gentlemen continue to talk about impeachment and changing the methods of impeachment. We are not talking about impeachment. I make this statement, and you examine it.

Impeachment never was one of the ordinary regulatory processes or powers of any government, and, what is more, it never can be. Impeachment arose in the fourteenth century as a method of bringing to justice great offenders in England who were greater than the ordinary processes of government could deal with. When this process was put into operation in England by the House of Commons it was a real trial before a real court. Do not forget that. Never in all the history of England was impeachment other than a trial before a court the highest court of the realm, the House of Lords. It was a real trial with the usual processes and the procedure of a trial by a court. The Commons appeared at the bar of the court, appearing in behalf of the people of the realm before the highest court of the realm, against some great offender who was bigger than the ordinary machinery of government could deal with. That was not a procedure in some foreign realm under some alien constitution. That was our Government. That proceeding was in our court under our Constitution.

Mr. CHURCH. Does the gentleman from Texas want the English method? I want the American method and under its Constitution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Let me make a statement about that. I want to get this proposition across. The Constitution of the United States was not fashioned on the American Continent. Our Constitution has come down through the ages. The so-called revolution in America was not a revolution in any explosive sense; it was a territorial secession on the part of the American people and a resort to arms, to preserve their own Constitution, which they claimed King George and the Parliament were violating. This very provision in our Constitution with regard to good behavior of judges was put in our Constitution in 1701 in the act of settlement of the succession with William and Mary.

I want to say something else to the lawyers in this House. There is nothing better understood than when a provision in the law of a people is brought from any other jurisdiction—as a matter of fact we did not bring it from any other jurisdiction, it was ours as much on this side of the Atlantic as it was of those on the other; anyway, when we came to write our Constitution, we wrote into the document the arrangement with regard to impeachment and of good behavior and many other provisions, if we may use a figure, around which the battles of the Revolution had been fought. The fathers did a good job, because they did not try to mess up what had been proven by the ages. [Applause.] They brought this identical provision into our Constitution, and when that provision came into the American Constitution, it came in with the construction which had been placed upon it in the jurisdictions from whence it was taken, or rather Great Britain, when we were yet a part of that government.

This is that construction. Before the Acts of Settlement, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has stated, notwithstanding the power of impeachment, it was the construction under the British Constitution, from which the applicable provisions of our Constitution were taken, that any office, including judges, could be ousted by conviction of crime in the ordinary courts, by conviction in the highest court, the House of Lords, impeachment; removal by a judgment of a civil court establishing bad behavior. The acts of settlement destroyed the arbitrary power of the King and left conviction of crime, impeachment, joint address, and civil suit on account of bad conduct as the grounds for removal.

Thus construed, the applicable provisions of our Constitution now being considered were written into our Constitution. It would help us in this consideration to bear in mind that only as a civil officer may a judge be removed by impeachment and that the impeachment powers apply equally to all civil officers.

You gentlemen come from States having constitutional arrangements, speaking generally, identical with these Federal provisions. You know that under these identical provisions you can impeach a public officer or you can oust him for bad conduct by a civil suit in an ordinary court.

Not one of you comes from any State but where the State may by an ouster suit by quo warranto or scire facias oust any public official notwithstanding the fact that he may be impeached also. I wait for anybody to rise in this Hall, who comes from a State with an identical constitutional arrangement, who will contend that because of that provision in the Constitution that is the sole method of removing a public officer.

Now, let us look at this good-behavior provision for a minute. Here is a contract between the judge and the people that the judge will behave himself well. Judges in America are not appointed for life. They are appointed during good behavior, and their right to hold office every single day is dependent on whether they behave themselves well or not. There is not a lawyer here who does not know that good behavior is a justiciable issue.

It is the sort of issue that is being tried in the courts every day. It is the sort of issue that ought to be tried in the courts. This pending bill makes it possible to try that issue where it ought to be tried, except in extraordinary circumstances where some official may be too powerful to try in a court, except the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment. Such a situation would justify asking the Senate to turn aside from their usual duties to try the matter. It was triable in the court in the jurisdiction from which we took that provision in our Constitution, and it is triable in the court now. There is no force in the statement as against this bill that we have not heretofore attempted to avail ourselves of this provision or power in the Constitution. Constitutions are for all the ages. The powers in the Constitution, it is expected, shall be brought into operation as generation after generation comes to responsibility, and as changing conditions may require. Changed conditions make desirable that which this bill is proposing. There is not anybody who does not know that the Senate of the United States does not have the time to try these impeachments that could just as well and better be tried by a court. I submit it is ridiculous to ask the Senate to do it as a matter of orderly sensible governmental procedure.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield? The gentleman asked for a reply.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. If the gentleman would only respect the Senate. The people want it to take the time, and the gentleman should respect the Senate. To take away its responsibilities would take away its importance and place in our American form of government under our Constitution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Never mind about lecturing me. I do not yield for a lecture, Mr. Chairman. Let the gentleman lecture out in his own State where he is trying to be elected Senator.

Mr. CHURCH. The primary is today.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. What are you fooling with me for now? It is too late.

Mr. CHURCH. I am not fooling. I am right here with you, and I have the highest regard for the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I cannot agree with him on this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank my friend. There is nobody who can say the Senate has got the time to try these impeachment cases except in most extraordinary circumstances as I have indicated. There is nobody who has followed one of the recent impeachment trials in the Senate who will say the Senate discharges properly that responsibility.

I say that not in criticism of the Senate. I criticize the Congress for not having done the sensible, practical thing of trying these ordinary impeachments in a court where ouster suits by their nature are universally sent by the intelligent public policy of our States for trial.

Now, why not do this thing? The issue is justiciable. Why not establish a court to try the issue like it should be tried? I realize the opposing sentiment today, but it is a sentiment to which judgment should not yield. We had better do something about this situation when calm judgment can control.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a little information?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. KEEFE. Would you be kind enough in this splendid statement you are making to explain your conception as to just what article II, section 4, includes, under the heading "Civil officers"? Who are the civil officers that you contend are contemplated by that section?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is a very difficult thing.

Mr. KEEFE. I, of course, asked the question, I think the gentleman will realize, in view of the citations of authority that were presented.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is very difficult. I could name many who I know are civil officers but they shade off to where it is difficult to say whether a given Federal employee is an officer within the meaning of the impeachment provision or merely an employee.

May I direct your attention to the fact that recently we enacted legislation providing for administrative officers, with the machinery under the control of the Supreme Court and the presiding judges of the circuit court. Those officers, among other things, check in on the courts.

This proposed legislation fits in with that legislation. If enacted, it would go far not only to more firmly establish an independent judiciary without lessening in any degree the power of the House and Senate under the impeachment provisions but would strengthen the judiciary in its great duty and interest to keep the judiciary fit to be independent. There is nothing more dangerous now to the independence of the judiciary than to swing to a great extreme in a mistaken zeal for a so-called independence of the judiciary.

I am giving you my views and the reasons for them. I have worked out the best bill I can. The responsibility is yours. We want to preserve the independence of the judiciary, but we want to—and I think all agree we have got to—keep the judiciary fit to be independent if it is to remain independent. I do not think there is any doubt about that. One or two people, just a few bad people on the bench can do great hurt to the confidence in the bench. That is a bad thing. I do not like to take time to repeat but I feel that, in this case, I should say again that we know the present method of getting rid of judges who ought to be gotten rid of is a perfectly ridiculous sort of method. The procedure is not a procedure that any judge, on trial, has the right to have, or that the Government has a right to have, and I say this in no criticism of the Senate, as I have tried to make clear. The Senators sitting as a high court of impeachment under their oaths responsible largely for the standards of judicial conduct among the judges have a duty which ought not be required. We have got to do something about it, sooner or later. You all know it. There is not a human being on this floor who does not know that we have got to go somewhere from where we are; somewhere from these senatorial proceedings as the only remedial possibility. Public necessity and the common sense of the people will compel it. That is the proposition before us, as I see it. This is not unfair to the judges.

In the bill we make provision, first, that before the judge can be harassed by anybody, before he can be compelled to go to his defense, the House of Representatives, which is the nearest that can be had under our form of government to all the people assembled—we are the people of the Nation assembled here as nearly as so populous a people can assemble—that the House of Representatives shall initiate the proceedings. That is right. It ought to be provided somewhere in this machinery that the people of the Nation should have a right to complain with reference to a Federal official whom they cannot get at through an election, as they can get at us. Not only that, but the judges ought to have a buffer between them and the possibility of a disgruntled litigant forcing him to his defense. We interpose the House of Representatives as that buffer. When the House of Representatives have concluded that the matter ought to be litigated, we send the judge to have that issue tried before three judges. That is moving in the direction of a chance for judicial control over judicial conduct. There is no surrender of the power to impeach. We want to try that out and see how it works.

I believe in the three coordinate branches of government. I believe that the judges ought to be given an opportunity to do the thing that the Senate cannot do properly either to the Government or to the judges or in fairness to themselves or the Nation, which needs their time as legislators, instead of doing a poor job trying to act as judges while innumerable matters attract and divert their attention.

Then we provide that after these three judges shall have acted, an appeal lies as a matter of right to the Supreme Court, made up of nine judges.

I do not see how any judge fit to be on the bench who makes a contract with his people that he will behave—and that is a condition in that contract if there ever was a condition in any contract—I do not see how any judge fit to be on the bench would deny to the people with whom he has made the contract an opportunity to litigate the question before the judges. I would be suspicious of any judge who was afraid of that. We give him a chance to go to the Supreme Court, not to have a chance to go to the Supreme Court, but we direct in this bill that he may as a matter of right go to the Supreme Court on both the law and the facts.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield, but because of the limited time I hope the gentleman will not revert to the question of civil officers.

Mr. KEEFE. No; this is a different question. Is it the gentleman's conception that the House in initiating procedure would act in the character of an examining magistrate to ascertain whether there were reasonable ground for believing the behavior of a judge to be other than good behavior?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Very closely akin to it, I would say.

Mr. KEEFE. That would mean, then, that a resolution would be adopted in the House, would it not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; we would vote on it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Does the gentleman maintain that there is no constitutional provision for the removal of a judge because of the character of his behavior?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not.

Mr. GAVAGAN. That is the crux of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are setting up here—and I think I ought to make this statement in view of the gentleman's question—the thing that we are trying to do is to supplement the powers of impeachment. This bill is not a substitute for it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Then where is the power to remove a judge of the circuit court or of the Supreme Court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The circuit court judges are included. We do not touch the Supreme Court at all.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Then, where is the power to remove a judge of the Supreme Court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is not in this bill. The exclusive power would remain with the Senate.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Would not this be true? One Member of Congress might move to impeach a judge, and if the House saw fit they would send the case to the Senate under the impeachment provision of the Constitution, which the gentleman concedes we cannot touch without a constitutional amendment. Another Member of Congress might offer a resolution of impeachment in the case of another judge, charging exactly the same grounds of misconduct, yet the Congress could send that judge to this court that is set up in the pending bill. There is nothing in the law anywhere to define what behavior is. So a court of judges sitting in California would determine one standard there and the Senate might determine another standard here for the other judge.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think the control is within the people as they are represented in the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; briefly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Bad behavior on the part of a judge may not rise to the dignity of treason, bribery, a high crime, or misdemeanor. Is that right?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then as a matter of fact, if there is no connection between the two, there is no connection between article III, section 1, and article II, section 4.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is not any connection at all between article III, section 1, and what goes before.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then, as a matter of fact, does not this bill simply vitalize or give life to section 1 of article III?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank the gentleman for that question. This is a test which anybody who knows anything about our Constitution agrees to. Everybody agrees there are no dead words in the American Constitution. Nobody doubts that unless a court vitalizes the words "good behavior" in our Constitution they are dead.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to take very little time, but will defer to the other members of the Judiciary Committee in this respect. I sympathize with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who tried these impeachment cases before the Senate. I was one of the board of managers. The trouble with those cases was they were based upon sort of petit larceny, and you could not expect the Senate to sit there and listen like a justice of the peace to a petit-larceny case. These judges should never have been impeached. It reminds me of Tom Heflin's story about the two horse traders. They looked at the horses' eyes. They knew all about horses. So they traded horses. One of the horses ran into three trees in about a half minute after he was turned loose. The other fellow says, "Your horse is blind." "No; he is not blind," was the answer, "he just don't give a damn." That is the way with the Senate about those cases. They were based on trivialities.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman would not stand up here and say that a judge who is guilty of petit larceny should continue as a judge?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. If a judge is guilty of petit larceny, he can be impeached by this House. There never has been a judge charged with misconduct here that the House has not voted to impeach since I have been a Member of Congress. It requires very little provocation to induce the House to vote for impeachment.

I regret, like every member of the Judiciary Committee, to differ from the viewpoint of our distinguished chairman. This is not a personal matter, of course. We all love him, and as far as we can we are going to forget everything we know about law and depend upon common sense, as he suggested.

First, I oppose this bill because I believe it is repugnant to the Constitution. Second, I oppose it, even if it were constitutional, because it is a bad method. The Government of the United States was founded upon the principle that we have three separate and independent departments of government, which means that the judiciary shall be independent. Our fathers so framed the Constitution with its checks and balances that the judiciary could be independent. It is a good thing to remember what old John Marshall said about the independence of the judiciary, because it was he who galvanized the judiciary department of the United States into the greatest legal system in Christendom.

He said:

> Is it not to the last degree important that the judge should be rendered perfectly and completely independent with nothing to control him but God and his conscience? * * * I have always thought from my earliest youth till now that the greatest scourge an angry Heaven ever inflicted upon an ungrateful and a sinning people was an ignorant, a corrupt, or a dependent judiciary.

That is what you are going to do if you pass this bill. Of all the commentators upon the Constitution, none of them has referred to any other manner of taking care of a bad judge except by impeachment. Alexander Hamilton, who had a mind that was as quick as an electric flash, would have found it if there was any place for it.

This is what happened in the Constitutional Convention:

> Mr. Dickinson moved as an amendment to sect. 2 art. XI after the words "good behavior" the words "provided that they may be removed by the Executive on the application by the Senate and House of Representatives."
> Mr. Gerry 2ded the motion.
> Mr. Gov. Morris thought it a contradiction in terms to say that the Judges should hold their office during good behavior, and yet be removable without a trial. Besides it was fundamentally wrong to subject Judges to so arbitrary an authority.
> Mr. Sherman saw no contradiction or impropriety if this were made part of the constitutional regulation of the Judiciary establishment. He observed that a like provision was contained in the British Statutes.
> Mr. Rutledge. If the Supreme Court is to judge between the U. S. and particular States, this alone is an insuperable objection to the motion.
> Mr. Wilson considered such a provision in the British Government as less dangerous than here, the House of Lords & House of Commons being less likely to concur on the same occasions. Chief Justice Holt, he remarked, had successively offended by his independent conduct, both houses of Parliament. Had this happened at the same time, he would have been ousted. The Judges would be in a bad situation if made to depend on every gust of faction which might prevail in the two branches of our Gov.

Page 474:

> Mr. Randolph opposed the motion as weakening too much the independence of the judges.
> Mr. Dickinson was not apprehensive that the Legislature composed of different branches constructed on such different principles, would improperly unite for the purpose of displacing a judge.

On the motion to agree to Mr. Dickinson's motion, all the States except Delaware and Maryland voted "no."

Let us examine the second objection to the proposed court for the trial of judges on the question of "good behavior." If the Congress can set up a tribunal of circuit judges to try district judges, it certainly has power to set up a court of district judges to try circuit judges. In fact, if the Congress may set up a court of one set of judges to try other judges, it can with equal constitutional authority set up a court consisting of justices of peace, or of members of the N. L. R. B., or any other persons it is disposed to appoint. You answer that Congress would not. But if you set a precedent, who can prophesy what future Congresses may do? It seems to me an easy short cut to reduce the district courts to an abject status of subserviency and dependence which would constitute a most calamitous retrogression. I can think of nothing more to be avoided than a court that bows in abject servility to a small group of circuit judges in whose hands has been placed arbitrary power to separate district judges from their positions because these three judged certain behavior bad or not good. I can think of nothing more calculated to destroy the independence of the judiciary. Even if convinced of its constitutionality, which I sincerely doubt, I could not favor this act.

This Government is based upon the sound principle of three separate and independent departments. That is a fundamental principle of our Government and upon it we depend for a balanced government where no person or group of persons may ever trample upon the rights of the individual. To preserve that form and system of free government, the people decreed fidelity to the Constitution. The Constitution provided a method of disposing of bad judges and in doing so duly protected the rights of the judges.

Having done that in the Constitution by the provisions of impeachment by the House of Representatives and trial by the Senate requiring a two-thirds majority before a judge could be found guilty, For 150 years, that method has been adequate both for the independence of the judges and the safety of the country.

We have no adequate time to go into the argument concerning the constitutionality of this proposed law. But we insist that the Constitution provided impeachment as the method of trying the matter of the conduct of Federal judges, and that this is the sole method within the Constitution. Many other plans were proposed but all were rejected except impeachment, in which the House of Representatives "shall have the sole power of impeachment" and the Senate "shall have the sole power to try all impeachments."

In all the discussions in the Federalist no attention to the disposal of judges charged with misconduct is paid to any process except impeachment. Had there been other available methods contemplated they would hardly have escaped the minds of Hamilton, Jay, and Madison.

Mr. Chairman, I can think of nothing that would tend more to render our judges dependent than the enactment of this revolutionary method of holding a sword of Damocles over the head of every district judge in the United States. In my opinion, the only constitutional method of obtaining such an innovation is by means of an amendment to the Constitution. There should be no short cuts to the abrogation of the Constitution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose that a judge's conduct does not amount to a high crime or misdemeanor, but he does get drunk; he is seen drunk on the street and his behavior is bad, or suppose it is something else; would the gentleman feel that in order to rid the bench of such a character the Government should be put to the expense of going through a trial by impeachment, as contemplated by article II, section 4?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Coming from a dry State, I should say he ought to be impeached. In such a case the judge would probably resign as soon as the House had passed impeachment charges. I must admit that in times past some very good judges got drunk—but not in Kansas.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman feel that the punishment provided in article III, section 1, is entirely disconnected from the punishment provided in article II, section 4?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I see no connection.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GAVAGAN. What is the gentleman's opinion as to the constitutional power of removal of a judge for violation of section 1, article III?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. By impeachment.

Mr. GAVAGAN. That is the only one?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Aside from the question of the constitutionality of the measure, I am very much concerned about the wisdom of the policy of judges trying judges.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I am too. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Who is to try them, then? Who better could try them?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. In my opinion, the Senate of the United States is the best place, if you have a case against them.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BARNES. Is it not true that you can still follow the old procedure as well as this procedure if this bill is passed?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Yes; you cannot take away the power of impeachment unless you amend the Constitution. That is true.

Mr. BARNES. Then it is still up to a resolution of the House of Representatives as to which method they will proceed with?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Yes; the Senate might fail to convict by a two-thirds vote and after that, by a majority vote, be removed by the proposed court of three judges.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am very much interested in the statement of the gentleman about the independence of the judiciary. I should like to hear the gentleman discuss his reasons for making the statement that this is an attack on the independence of the judiciary. What independence of the judiciary is lost under this bill, if it is enacted into law?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. If this Congress can constitute a court of three circuit judges to try a judge, they can constitute a court of three justices of the peace to do it. Who can foretell what future Congresses may do?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] remarked that it was an incongruous proceeding for the Senate to try a case when the Members were often absent. It seems to me it is no worse to try the case of a judge, whose only object is to retain his job and his prestige, while Members are absent, than it is for the House or the Senate to try the rights of entire groups of people while Members are absent from the Chamber.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. In conversation with the late Senator Borah, who was not going to vote on the Lauderback impeachment case because he had voted against his confirmation, I said, "What do you know about it, Senator? I have not seen you on the floor." He said, "I read every word of the evidence the next day in the morning before the case comes up at noon, and I know other Senators who do." They can do that and I found that most of them read the record of the trial which was before them each morning.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. JONKMAN. Assuming that good behavior cannot be defined by legislative enactment and is a term on which various bodies might differ, is it not true that the Constitution has under its germane provisions designated the Congress as the sole arbiter to determine what is not good behavior?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I think so. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, like every other Member of this House, I have the highest respect and the deepest affection for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. I dislike very much to take issue with him on any question, and when I do I doubt my own judgment.

I have talked about this bill with the gentleman from Texas many times and discussed it with other members of the committee and of the House. I just cannot persuade myself that this bill is constitutional, that it is wise, or that it is necessary to accomplish the purpose the gentleman from Texas has in mind.

Probably it is reaching into the grave, as my friend from Texas says, to quote the authors of the Federalist on the point at issue, but I do not believe there are any higher authorities, living or dead, on the intent and meaning of the Constitution than the three great American statesmen, Madison, Hamilton, and Jay. As to the exclusiveness of the remedy of impeachment for the removal of judges let me quote the Federalist:

The precautions for their responsibility—

That is, the judges—are comprised in the article respecting impeachments. They are liable to be impeached for malconduct—

Not high crimes and misdemeanors—

by the House of Representatives and tried by the Senate; and, if convicted, may be dismissed from office and disqualified for holding any other. This is the only provision on the point, which is consistent with the necessary independence of the judicial character.

The proponents of this bill have focused their minds on the section of the Constitution which provides that a judge shall hold office during good behavior. They ask you to concentrate on that provision and to divorce your thoughts from any other provision which touches upon the tenure of office of judges. It is not good sense and it certainly is not good law to try to construe any instrument or any letter or any speech by a single phrase in it without regard to the context. If you are going to reach a proper construction of any document, including the Constitution of the United States, you must consider all the provisions touching on the same point and fit them together.

It is the thought of the proponents of this measure that, since the judges hold office during good behavior, their tenure of office ceases when good behavior ceases and, therefore, some court must be set up to determine the issue of good behavior.

Did the framers of the Constitution use the words "good behavior" in the sense of the dictionary's definition?

Do they mean good manners, good deportment, good demeanor? Would anybody contend that a judge could be removed for eating potatoes with his knife, or for violating any of the other conventions of polite society? Obviously those words do not mean good behavior in the dictionary sense.

Will anyone contend that the crimes and misdemeanors that are referred to in the previous sections of the Constitution, the last section of article II, include only indictable offenses, crimes, and misdemeanors as specified in the penal code? We know that is not so. Judge after judge has been impeached for malconduct in office amounting only to a violation of the code of judicial ethics. One was impeached and removed from office for insanity, which has never been regarded as a crime, a misdemeanor, or a misdeed.

There may have been a judge or two impeached for actual crime, but I do not remember such a case. The only judge I can recall in recent years who was convicted of a crime was Judge Manton, and he resigned from office. I do not remember any impeached judges who were fined or imprisoned for the offense charged against them in their impeachment trials.

In my estimation, and I would hesitate to advance this if it were not fortified by substantial authority, the two provisions for the termination of a judge's tenure of office mean exactly the same thing as used in the Constitution, that is, bad behavior has the same meaning as high crimes and misdemeanors. It cannot mean any more. If it does, you get to this situation. Obviously, if a judge is guilty of accepting a bribe, he comes within the provisions of section 4 of article II, and he must be impeached. There is no gap in the law there and there is no alternative. He must be impeached. But suppose a judge is guilty of trying a case in which he has bias or in which he has an interest. That is not a high crime or misdemeanor within the understanding of the proponents of this bill, but it is misbehavior, and therefore a judge could be tried by a court of three circuit judges if this bill becomes law. If we prefer, we can set up a court of one judge and make that offense triable by one judge. So you have the ridiculous situation, if the logic of my friends on the other side is correct. A judge accused of accepting a bribe must appear before the Senate and be declared innocent unless found guilty by two-thirds of that body, whereas a judge guilty of a minor offense could be removed from office by the judgment of a single judge. In other words, you would make it far more difficult to convict the serious offender than the minor one, although the penalty for both is the same, namely, removal from office.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose this bill were amended to apply only to section 1 of article III, then would the gentleman have any objection to it?

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not quite get the gentleman's point.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose the bill was made positive and clear that it applies only to cases of misbehavior and has no connection at all with treason, bribery, high crimes, or misdemeanors, and I will instance a case of this kind. Suppose this bill was directed simply at a person who is a district judge and whose conduct would not amount to moral turpitude but at the same time be contrary to what is generally accepted as good behavior, such as being seen on the street drunk to the extent that it would affect his competence to serve as a judge. Confessedly he is not guilty of treason, bribery, high crimes, or misdemeanors.

Mr. HANCOCK. I think he is. I think he is, within the meaning of the Constitution as interpreted by the commentators, by the interpretation given to such conduct in impeachment trials, and in the light of the historic background of the section we are discussing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then let us get at it in this way——

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not think article III, section 1, enlarges the power of impeachment or removal from office at all, and if the gentleman will permit me, I would like to read some authorities on that point.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If I may make just one observation, I am not clear on this point. If I thought that bad behavior was involved in section 4, article II, I would not be for this bill, but on the surface it appears to me that this bill simply tries to put life into section 1 of article III by giving some sort of machinery whereby a man can be removed from office even though he is not guilty as provided in section 4 of article II, and yet his conduct is such as to amount to bad behavior.

Mr. HANCOCK. I contend that he can be impeached under section 4 of article II.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is no doubt about that, probably, but what I am getting at is that it does not seem to me that this bill invades, if I may use that word, the right of the Senate to impeach for treason, bribery, high crimes, and misdemeanors. My thought is it does not seem to invade that territory.

Mr. HANCOCK. I cannot agree that "good behavior" are dead words. I think you must read section 1, article III, in connection with section 4, article II, and I do not believe that the former affects the jurisdiction of the Senate in impeachment trials one iota.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I call the gentleman's attention at this point to his statement that if you could provide for removal by trial by three qudges you could by one judge just as well?

Mr. HANCOCK. That is, if we can pass a statute to that effect.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; and in that case the man who is charged with a crime would have to have a two-thirds vote of the Senate against him in order to be found guilty, whereas in the case of bad behavior just one judge would have the power to find him guilty. In other words, you are imposing a different procedure in respect of crime than bad behavior.

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes.

Let me quote from a scholarly study of this subject, written by Judge Otis, of the United States district court, and I wish everybody in the House had time to read it. It has been very helpful to me in understanding the questions involved in the pending bill. And may I also commend to your careful reading the minority report prepared by our able colleague from Iowa, Mr. GWYNNE?

> Section 4 of article II, "The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors" makes it clear that within the constitutional meaning of the word "impeachment" is a charge of "treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors." But only those who have read the Constitution superficially have ever thought that the words "high crimes and misdemeanors" as they are used here, refer only to offenses against positive criminal laws, to murder, burglary, embezzlement, and the like.

And that is the argument for this particular bill. To continue with the quotation:

> The framers had no such narrow view. Said the author of the Federalist, speaking of the Senate as the Court provided in the Constitution for the trial of impeachments: "The subject of its jurisdiction are those offenses which proceed from the misconduct of public men or, in other words, from the abuse or violation of some public trust."

Then he quotes from a speech made by the late Chief Justice Taft, and these are his thoughts on this point:

> Under authoritative construction by the highest Court of Impeachment, the Senate of the United States, a high misdemeanor for which a judge may be removed is misconduct involving bad faith or wantonness or recklessness in his judicial actions, or in the use of his official influence for ulterior purposes. By the liberal interpretation of the term "high misdemeanor" which the Senate has given there is now no difficulty in securing the removal of a judge for any reason that shows him unfit.

If I am right, it clears up some of the doubt which may be in your minds. The power of impeachment is not a narrow restricted authority given the Senate to remove judges for such offenses only as treason, bribery, high crimes, or misdemeanors as defined in penal codes; it is something much broader. It embraces the misconduct meant when "good behavior" ends. Therefore the impeachment authorized by section 4, article 2, is an exclusive remedy, and the argument of the proponents falls to the ground.

The framers of the Constitution gave a great deal of thought to the question of the removal of judges and other civil officers. They considered lodging that power in the Chief Executive, and rejected the plan because it would tend to make the judges subservient and make it possible for the President to become an absolute monarch. They considered giving that power to the Supreme Court of the United States, but they rejected that proposal because it would tend to make the Court an oligarchy without any accountability to the people or their representatives. They realized that somewhere the power must lie to remove an unfit judge, and they said, Let us give that power to the representatives of the people themselves; let the House, which is directly responsive to the people, make the charge, and let the Senate, which is a conservative body, be the court. At that time gentlemen must realize the Senate occupied a higher, or at least a different, place in the estimation of the general public than it does today. The Senators were the ambassadors of the States, they were the conservative body, they were thought to be immune from the influences of pressure groups, the passing whims, prejudices, and demagogic appeals of the moment. Therefore, the framers deliberately put the power of impeachment and the power to remove judges in the hands of the Senate of the United States alone.

Mr. Chairman, we all sympathize with the objectives of our good friend from Texas. He wishes to provide a more expeditious way of getting rid of bad judges, but that is perfectly possible without any legislation whatever. The remedy lies in the hands of the Senate. When the Senate tries an impeachment case against a judge or any other official, they are not acting in a legislative capacity, but they are acting as a court, and as a court they have the attributes and rights of a court. Furthermore, they can make their own rules. There is no reason in the world why the Senate could not do as every other court in the land does, appoint referees or commissioners or special masters to take testimony and make findings of fact as a guide and help to the Senate, and report back to the Senate. So long as the final judgment is made by the Senate of the United States, the Constitution is not violated. It might be desirable to have simpler means provided for getting rid of bad judges than that provided by the Constitution, and I am not entirely convinced in my own mind about that, but I maintain that we cannot do it without amending the Constitution. I would like to follow the way my chairman points out, because I am genuinely fond of him and I have the greatest admiration for his legal ability, but according to my logic, this bill is unconstitutional, unwise, and unnecessary. [Applause.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Can the gentleman state why judges of the circuit courts of appeals, for instance, are eliminated from this bill?

Mr. HANCOCK. A new draft has been prepared, I understand, which will be offered as a substitute, and it includes the judges of the circuit courts of appeals. Of course, if we can impeach district judges in this manner, we can impeach circuit judges, the President of the United States, the Supreme Court, and every other civil officer of the Government.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Does the gentleman not think it makes for stronger character in the judiciary if impeachment should lie in the Senate of the United States rather than with fellow judges of the judge accused?

Mr. HANCOCK. I think so, and I think the present procedure insures, so far as it can be safeguarded, independence of the judiciary, without which our form of government cannot long survive. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, in studying the provisions of the bill before the House, H. R. 5939, and the provisions of the Constitution, I find it difficult to reconcile the language of the bill with the provisions of the Constitution if we are not to transfer some of the powers that are conferred upon the Congress of the United States. I say "transfer," when it really is a surrender. The language of this bill, as I read it and interpret it, is a surrender of the power that is conferred upon this House of Representatives, which under article I, section 2, of the Constitution, provides that the House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment. I wonder how the eminent gentleman from Texas reconciles that language with the language of his bill on page 4, section 5, line 10, where it reads:

> Such appeals shall be subject to and governed by the rules of practice and procedure now regulating appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, or such rules as may hereafter be adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States. The judgment appealed from shall remain in full force and effect, and shall be final and binding, unless or until it be reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal.

Now, what appeal is there from a final judgment by the Supreme Court of the United States, and what power will the House of Representatives have for impeachment if this bill is adopted and found to be constitutional? I submit that proposition to the Members of this House in all sincerity. We have seen a gradual surrender of the powers conferred on the legislative branch of the Government, and now it is proposed to surrender the power to impeach corrupt Federal judges to Federal judges; we are to ask lawyers to convict lawyers. The legal machinery for removing venal judges from the Federal bench is clumsy enough, but in extreme cases it can be made to work as it has worked since I have been a Member of this House, and as difficult as it is to remove a corrupt Federal judge, I am firm in my conviction that plans devised by the Constitution are better and safer than the plan proposed in this bill and shall adhere to the plan laid down in the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot support this bill. I consider it to be unconstitutional. I shall make a very brief statement outlining the reasons why I believe it to be unconstitutional, and I shall be pleased to yield for any questions or suggestions as I go along.

The constitutional provision for this type of legislation is said to depend upon this phrase: "The judges shall hold office during good behavior."

If it does not hang there, it hangs nowhere in the Constitution. We are told by the proponents of this bill that unless we construe the Constitution the way they construe it, the words "good behavior" are dead words in the Constitution. But nothing could be further from the truth. The tenure of a judge is fixed nowhere in the Constitution except in those words that "he shall hold office during good behavior." In other words, it means that he shall hold office after he is appointed until he dies or until removed by impeachment proceedings. Of course, it is clear that the framers of the Constitution meant that a judge should hold office as long as he behaves well. That is clear, and it is my firm conviction that the method of deciding whether or not he has misbehaved, and the method of removing him is completely contained in this impeachment provision.

The first reason which leads me to believe that impeachment is the sole remedy for removal of a judge is a matter of legal construction. All lawyers know of the principle, and you can read it in a thousand cases, that where in a statute or in a constitution a certain obligation is laid down and a certain remedy provided for the enforcement of the obligation, that remedy is deemed exclusive. That is a well-known principle of law. Another well-known principle of law is that all provisions of a constitution are not directory but mandatory. In order to have this principle of legal construction applied, we must first determine whether or not the remedy is as broad as the obligation. In other words, may a judge be impeached for everything which is not good behavior? The gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] has given the correct answer to that.

We are confused a little bit by the words "high crimes and misdemeanors." They were not used in the Constitution in their ordinary criminal sense. They were used in a social sense. They mean that a judge may be removed from office for any malconduct or for anything which renders him unfit to hold the office of Federal judge. He may be impeached if he is insane, and we have impeached a judge for insanity.

The next reason is historical and has been gone into, so I will simply pass it over with a single statement. If you will read the debates in the Constitutional Convention and the Federalist, and the debates which took place in the legislature of every Colony on the question of ratification, you will not find a single person who said, or even intimated, any such power was given to Congress to pass a law of this character.

Bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, impeachment is not legislative. It is entirely judicial. May I remind you of the fact that in giving this impeachment power to Congress, it was not given without restriction. They laid down carefully every plan and every procedure under which we would operate. The only legislative power of removal given to Congress you will find in section 2, article II, where it says that if we give to the President, for example—and we may, of course—the right to appoint a certain official without his being confirmed by the Senate, we may set up the machinery for their removal of that officer. That is absolutely the only legislative power of removal vested in this Congress. Of course, the House and Senate individually has the right to remove its own Members and its own officers.

Mr. Chairman, what would we do if we passed this bill? If we adopt the principle contained in this bill—that is, that we have legislative authority in this matter—what governs or what limits our authority? Nothing but the judgment of the Congress, that is all. The constitutional ambition to provide for three separate and independent branches of government is gone forever. Make no mistake about that, because if we can pass this bill we can pass any kind of a bill on this subject. For example, we could pass a bill creating a special court to consist of one judge who had only one duty, and that to roam up and down the land to see whether or not judges were behaving properly or not.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I have a great deal of confidence in the gentleman's ability to discuss this question. I would like to have him speak a little bit on one point. The Constitution, of course, provides that tenure of office shall be on good behavior.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is right.

Mr. MASSINGALE. There is no provision that I know of anywhere in the Constitution which defines good behavior as used in section 3, I believe it is. Does the gentleman think it would be beyond the province of the Congress to put the breath of life in the Constitution itself by defining or making provision for determining what shall constitute good behavior?

Mr. GWYNNE. You would not be putting the breath of life in the Constitution if you did that. You would be giving it the kiss of death. The framers of the Constitution were very careful to give very limited legislative authority to Congress in the matter of removal of officers.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman may be clear, but I am a little bit confused along that line, because there is a vast difference between removal from office and the right to hold office and impeachment in the discharge of your duties as an individual.

Mr. GWYNNE. May I say to the gentleman that they meant, of course, that a judge should hold office during good behavior, and they themselves set up the machinery by which that question would be determined and by which the judge could be ousted. This machinery is all-exclusive. It has been argued here that it is not exclusive, and the case of Myers against United States has been cited. It is true the Court has held that the executive branch of the Government, having the right to appoint certain appointees, has the right to remove them. That is all in the Constitution. The legislative branch has the right to remove its employees. But the point I make is that there is nothing in the Constitution which indicates any intention on the part of the framers to give this Congress any legislative authority with reference to removals from the executive or judicial branches, except that set out in article II, section 2.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let us assume for the sake of argument that the gentleman has placed the proper interpretation upon this bill. Does not section 1 of the bill afford protection to any judge charged with misbehaving?

Whenever a resolution of the House of Representatives is directed to the Chief Justice of the United States stating that in the opinion of the House there is reasonable ground.

The House must first find there is reasonable ground for impeachment. Up to that point under this bill we have the same machinery that covers impeachment proceedings now. In other words, this House must pass upon the merits of a given case before the resolution is adopted. It is true that convictions in the Senate do not always result where the House votes the articles of impeachment, but under this bill the House stands between the accused and the forum of trial. Under these circumstances are the rights of the person accused of misbehaving protected?

Mr. GWYNNE. Yes, indeed; that is some protection, but the point I make is that if we can pass this kind of a bill some future Congress can pass a different kind of a bill. They may pass a bill which may absolutely destroy the independence of the judiciary. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON].

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 5939 is a most vicious and unconstitutional piece of legislation, which, if passed by Congress, should bring about public revolt against the Congress of the United States.

It is the beginning of a kind of legislation that will, step by step, remove the power of Congress in order to make it obsolete. It is the first step toward dictatorial government, and I hope to God that Congress will realize what it is doing today.

This legislation is no doubt promoted by the same interests that are now busily engaged in sabotage and destruction of this Government in order to bring about a so-called democracy under a despotic ruler. The masses might think that they rule in a democracy, but such is not the case, for all such governments end, like Russia, in a most vicious form of oligarchical despotism. Such governments are ruled by the firing squad and imprisonment of those who believe in the freedom and rights of the people.

H. R. 5939, a bill which is introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] and reported out from the Judiciary Committee, is a piece of legislation that rightfully belongs in the wastepaper basket and is certainly not evidence that would lead one to believe that the proponents had knowledge of constitutional law. It is instead far from that, for the legislation attempts to do something that can only be done by a constitutional amendment.

I have often said that if we keep on enacting legislation we will in such procedure finally convert this Nation into a totalitarian state, along a road paved by the legal talent in Congress. I hope, as I have already said, that the bill will not pass, and that Congress will arise in full cognizance of its responsibility to the people of our Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, at the outset of what I have to say may I express my deep appreciation of my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, Judge SUMNERS of Texas. Sometimes all of us err respecting the matters which we promote. It is but human to err. In this particular matter which is presented by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee before this body this afternoon, I am confident this legislation which is sought, if it should be passed, would be wholly unconstitutional.

There are two or three observations I should like to make. In the first place, I am thinking of the particular group of judges to whom the bill now before us applies. If this measure should be passed as written it would apply to the inferior judges, the district judges of the Federal courts of the United States of America; it would not apply to the judges of the circuit courts of appeals, by reason of section 6, nor would it apply to the Justices of the United States Supreme Court. May I ask the Members of this body why we should have legislation which provides a new and distinct course of procedure with respect to a certain class of judges but does not apply to other judges of our Federal courts and to the Justices of the United States Supreme Court? Is there any reason for this variance respecting our judges and their removal? They are all in the same status, except the inferior judges conduct the trial of cases, and the judges of the circuit courts of appeals and the Justices of the Supreme Court are the appellate divisions.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. I can see a distinction in regard to the district judges, because the district courts are entirely creatures of this Congress, and if Congress can create the courts, inferentially, therefore, the Congress has the right to make rules and regulations with regard to their removal.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, but may I suggest that the judges of the circuit courts of appeal are appointed in the same manner as the district judges are appointed. They stand in the same situation, and they are responsible to this body respecting their behavior and to the people of this country in the same manner and in the same fashion as the district courts themselves. There is no difference existing respecting the judges. If the pending bill relates to one class of judges, it should relate to all Federal judges.

In this connection let me make this further observation: When we think of the appointment of our Federal courts we realize they are appointed not for any particular period of time, "but during good behavior"; that is the one standard which is before those courts and which is the determining power with respect to their term of office.

When we think of the two constitutional provisions which were written on the board which was before us, and which all the Members of this Committee could read, I think of the provision which relates to the power and authority of the House and the Members of this House. Our Constitution provides that the sole power of impeachment is vested in the House of Representatives.

There is another point that I desire to express respecting the power of the House of Representatives. Just immediately preceding the sentence which gives the sole power of impeachment to the House of Representatives there is a provision which states that the House of Representatives shall have the "sole right to elect their Speaker" and to "choose their officers." Would any Member of this body or any Member of this Committee raise his voice and say that we could pass legislation, which would be constitutional, which would give to this body the right to delegate to some one individual or to some group of individuals, regardless of number, the right to elect the Speaker of the House of Representatives or to select our officers?

There is another thought that impresses me, and I want to refer to it just briefly, in connection with that section of our Constitution which relates to the power of the United States to try all impeachment proceedings. The language of this section reads, as you will recall it, that—

> The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments.

I wonder what the word "sole" means in that connection? Can anyone say that these provisions of the Constitution are not clear? Can anyone say there is anything ambiguous with regard to the language? We realize that impeachment is difficult; but the framers of the Constitution knew of the very high importance involved in impeachment proceedings. They made it difficult because of that fact. An impeachment must pass through the two bodies. Our forefathers so provided when they wrote the fundamental law. The House impeaches by providing the indictment, and the Senate hears and tries the impeachment proceeding and determines that question. These are the functions of the House and the Senate. Are we ready to surrender this constitutional power to some other group or some other body? Are we ready to transfer that inherent right to a court composed of three judges—and thereby take that right and power away from the representatives of the people?

If this bill should pass creating this three-judge court, to be appointed by the Chief Justice, this court would then have the sole right to hear, try, and determine the question of behavior of judges. What is that question of behavior? It is the basis of the impeachment; that is all. In other words, this bill would transfer to this three-judge court the right and power to hear, try, and determine impeachments, whereas our Constitution, in no uncertain terms, vests in the United States Senate the sole right and the sole power to hear, try, and determine impeachments. Thus this right would be taken away from the representatives of the people themselves. May I say, as a succeeding step in this connection, that if this power were taken away from the United States Senate, where it is vested under the express provisions of our Constitution, this bill, which seeks to do that, would be in direct violation and in contravention of our constitutional provisions. To my mind, this bill, if it should pass, would be entirely and wholly unconstitutional.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Can the gentleman find anything in the provisions of this bill which would, if it should become law, deny the right of a Member of this body to rise in his place, on his own responsibility and impeach a member of the judiciary?

Mr. SPRINGER. I believe perhaps the gentleman is right in that respect, but let me say that our Constitution was written in no uncertain terms. The framers of the Constitution adopted those provisions many years ago, and during all these intervening years we have marched, step by step, following these positive and certain constitutional provisions, because every Federal judge who has been tried in the past on the question of misbehavior, has been tried under our Constitution and under the method prescribed thereby. The House has instituted the impeachment proceedings and the United States Senate has tried and determined the case. I cannot lend my voice or vote to aid in the passage of any legislation which is, in my opinion, in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I must confess I am one of those that the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, refers to who upon first impression had the idea that the only way we could get rid of improper judges was by impeachment. I think it is a splendid thing that we have a chairman of our Committee on the Judiciary like the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, as well as others in the House, who will analyze and reason about the meaning of our Constitution in order to make it meet a present-day situation.

In the first place it must be fairly apparent that if the framers of our Constitution had had in mind that the only way for removal of a Federal judge was by the impeachment process, then they would have defined article II, section 4, which relates the matters for which you can impeach a judge, the same as they did with respect to good behavior in article III, section 1.

You will notice that article II, section 4, recites the specific crimes for which a civil officer may be impeached. If they had meant to limit the removal of a judge to those matters, they would have named the same ones in connection with good behavior and said, "Good behavior shall mean this."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Rather than conjecture about what they thought, has the gentleman read the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, and is he familiar with the fact that they discussed these various things and reached the conclusion that impeachment was the course that they preferred and the one which they intended?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I have read a good many of the proceedings, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan, but I have never heard anybody contend that you must be guilty of treason, bribery, or high crimes and misdemeanors in order to be guilty of bad behavior.

Mr. MICHENER. But right there, the Senate of the United States—way back yonder—held, and repeated in the Archbald case, and every case they have had with which the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, has been connected, that the bad behavior or misbehavior does come within the purview of "high misdemeanors."

Mr. KEFAUVER. Of course, no one would say that high misdemeanors and treason would not be bad behavior. Certainly the gentleman from Michigan would not say that in order for a judge to be of such behavior that he should not try cases that he must be guilty of treason, high crimes, and misdemeanors.

Mr. MICHENER rose.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I cannot yield further.

Here is another point you cannot get away from in considering this matter. The only right of removal of any civil officer, as specifically provided for by our Constitution, is by article II, section 4, the impeachment process, and yet if you will examine the statutes passed by the Congress, you will find some twelve or thirteen instances where the right of removal of civil officers has been provided for, and I may say that in those instances they have been sustained by our Supreme Court. As one instance, an act was passed in 1877, which gave the President of the United States the right to remove a district attorney, even though that district attorney may have been appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the same manner that a district judge is appointed, and the Supreme Court in the Parsons case, in One Hundred and Sixty-seventh United States Reports, sustained the right of President Cleveland to remove that district attorney. Now, if a law is constitutional which gives the President the right to remove a district attorney, who comes under the same classification as a civil officer, why is not a law constitutional that will enable the legislative branch to set up some other agency to try the issue of good behavior of judges?

However, we do not have to guess about the matter. Our own Supreme Court has already said that a law like this would be constitutional, and I refer to the case of Shurtleff v. United States (189 U. S. 311).

In this case the Supreme Court had before it the power of the President to remove an officer under the Customs Administrative Act of June 10, 1890. The point was raised that inasmuch as definite impeachment proceedings were set out in the impeachment clause of our Constitution, the law which gave the President the right to remove this customs officer, who was a civil officer, was unconstitutional.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Peckham, had these words to say:

> By the fourth section of article II of the Constitution it is provided that all civil officers shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Now, that is the basis for the impeachment of a judge, just as it is the basis for the impeachment of any other civil officer. Quoting further from the Court:

> No one has ever supposed—

I might add, parenthetically, that evidently this judge had not been in the House, because apparently some people have supposed otherwise, but he said:

> No one has ever supposed that the effect of this section was to prevent their removal for other causes deemed sufficient by the President. No such inference could be reasonably drawn from such language.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the legislative branch can give the President the right to remove a civil officer, and if that does not violate the impeachment clause of the Constitution, how, by any stretch of the imagination, can you say that a court set up to try a district judge, who is of the same classification or legal position as some other officers, cannot constitutionally remove a district judge from office? [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I believe I am the only Member of this Congress who ever tried an impeachment case. I was convinced at that trial that after the House of Representatives had found cause for trial and the matter came before the Senate, it was more of a political trial than a judicial trial. I find in the Constitution of the United States this language:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

In other words, we have established the district courts and the circuit courts long after the Constitution referred to was adopted.

The Congress shall have power—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

If we can create district courts and circuit courts, there is no question in my mind as a lawyer but that we can make these rules and regulations because of the implied power I have just read, and it seems to me as a general proposition there would be less political convictions if the matter were tried before judges than if tried before the Senate. From my own experience I know that to be true. It seems to me there should not be a judge in the United States unwilling to be tried by his own class if cause is found to make a charge against him. I know that no State in the Union ever got anywhere with the removal of objectionable lawyers until the State turned that job over to the lawyers themselves; and today I think that in about 40 States the conduct of a lawyer is tried by the other lawyers, and as a result the profession has increased in power and respect before the American people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I was not a member of the committee at the time this matter was discussed and did not have the benefit of the constitutional argument presented at that time. However, it is most interesting to hear the difference of opinion on the floor today between such eminent members of the bar and students of the Constitution. I have an amendment which I shall present at the proper time and explain more fully when I do present it, which I believe might clarify the question on the constitutionality of the law. In the limited time I have I shall speak on the practical angle of this particular bill and the situation as it now exists. In the stress of economic conditions of the country, the attorneys of the House will agree with me, I know, that litigation has increased perhaps 10 times over that of former days, and with the increase in litigation naturally everyone who loses a lawsuit is dissatisfied. According to that person, it cannot be because of his attorney or of his case, but it must be the court, and with the criticism that is naturally coming upon the courts through the losing of lawsuits and the increase in litigation, I feel we should with all possible expediency cover the courts with some cloak of security so that they will not be the brunt of passion or prejudice. I know many times in my own experience in appearing before the courts I have felt very much aggrieved because of some decision of that particular court.

On the other hand, we do not want to have the judges on such a high pedestal they feel that they can, to use a vernacular phrase, ride roughshod over some litigant. A judge who is appointed for life is beyond the question of being tried every time someone is dissatisfied. In the Committee on the Judiciary, in the short time I have been there, there have been many letters presented by litigants who in some instances have not completed their right of appeal and yet they complain about the court and the action of the court in trying their particular case. If we make a judge easily accessible through some similar tribunal, because of some whim or passion or because of some erroneous judgment, the trial of the judge alone would be a dreadful blow to his integrity and his character, even though he might be absolved of the charge brought against him. Under the present provisions, where it is necessary for him to be impeached by this House and the Senate, he can do his duty, knowing that there is an appellant tribunal in case he should make error, and feel that passion or prejudice will not affect him. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to join in with the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND]; continue from where he has ended. I want to compliment him. I appreciate the attitude of the gentlemen of the opposition. I wish I had time to thank each of you personally for the kind things you have said about me.

I have no feeling of responsibility for results. I am only responsible for doing my best, just as you are. I have no pride of authorship. If I could, I would persuade nobody against his best judgment. If I can help, I should do it. That is what I am trying to do.

One of our distinguished colleagues has just said that if we could pass this sort of law we could pass laws of a similar sort, the argument seeming to be that we might go to extremes. I have the same danger in mind. I do not want extreme things done, but my observation has taught me that the way to avoid such measures is to do the practical, sound thing required when it ought to be done. Extreme measures, extreme attitudes usually result from the failure to do what ought to be done when it could be done deliberately and sanely.

Therein is the danger in not doing something, at least attempting to provide a better method of enforcing the good-behavior condition in the judiciary tenure clause of the Constitution than impeachment affords. I would like to see Congress attempt to do that when it is under no pressure about the matter. I am certain in my judgment that if Congress does not pass this sort of law—some sort of law like this—now when we have a chance, and give to the judiciary the responsibility and power which this bill confers, retaining the degree of control and supervision which this House now proposes under this bill to reserve, you are going to have a radical swing, and you will not be able to control it. You mark my word. I want to put that in the RECORD.

We had a situation like this before when we had the big row about the Supreme Court. That row had its genesis in the legislation of 1919, when we denied Supreme Court Justices the right to retire instead of resign, and in the act we passed when Justice Holmes resigned when we cut his salary in half.

By the same sort of combination of opposition we have here today, a bill to correct that condition was defeated in the House in 1935. It was passed 2 years later, but under great pressure of circumstances. We have made a good start with a judicial administrative agency, located over in the Supreme Court Building. This is needed, supplementary legislation. We do not do away with the power of impeachment. What more could a decent judge want? The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND] is correct about it. There ought to be a buffer between the judge and the necessity to go to trial. We provide that now in this bill. The time may come when it cannot be done. We can do it now. As I see it, it is an inexcusable thing, a failure of duty not to do it now. We can put the House of Representatives between the judges now and the necessity to make any defense. In addition to that, we provide that those judges may be tried by judges. At the same time we give to the House the right to initiate proceedings just as they have in the Senate in impeachment. We leave to the Senate its impeachment powers intact. We protect the Senate against the necessity to turn aside to exercise them except in circumstances which would warrant the House to go to the Senate, and which would warrant the Senate in really trying the matter as a court would proceed.

The proposed arrangement might not work perfectly, but we could change it. We would have to do a little experimentation; but this is the soundest proposition I can work out. I have not been trying to work it out for myself, but I have been trying to work it out for my country; for the independence of the judges of this country; for the benefit of the public interest, which requires a clean as well as an independent judiciary. I want to turn over this duty to the judges as nearly as we can, giving them a chance at it; retaining the power of impeachment, of course, and reserving in the House of Representatives the power to initiate the proceedings and leaving the House of Representatives also as a buffer between the judge and the necessity of even having to go to a court of judges to be tried, just as we have the House with reference to impeachments. Nobody can get to a judge, under this bill, to the court made up of three judges, until this House of Representatives exercises its sworn responsibility and says in its judgment that the judge ought to be tried. What more can anyone want? What better arrangement can you make if you want an independent judiciary? An independent judiciary does not mean a judge that can do just as he pleases.

It means a judge that cannot be harassed and that cannot be controlled, that cannot be dominated; but not a judge that can violate his contract with the people to behave himself well, and be beyond the reach of even the courts to enforce that contract to behave himself well. I cannot understand some of the argument of the opposition. Some of them seem to be so enthusiastic over the independence of the judiciary, so sold on the idea that they are not willing to trust to the integrity and ability of members of the judiciary to try these judges. How can it be held that we are imperiling the judiciary now when we propose to turn the opportunity to control judges over to judges, let them see what they can do about it, with the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, made up of judges? I cannot understand it. I cannot understand how gentlemen, in their responsibility today, when we can do the job and do it deliberately, and have time to observe and correct any mistakes, imperil the independence of the judiciary, by waiting until some radical movement sweeps into this country and finds no arrangement, no machinery to enforce the condition of good behavior except a perfectly inadequate, ridiculous arrangement.

We have the pressure coming into our committee a little stronger and a little stronger, to cut down the tenure of the judges. It is valuable to have a judge on the bench for life, subject to good behavior. It makes him independent. I want to retain the independence of the judiciary. But these judges cannot be kept on the bench for life without some efficient, sensible method of enforcing that condition of good behavior. We do not have it now.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes, I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I wish the gentleman would advise me particularly, and I am sure other Members of the House, is there not confusion in the arguments we have heard here today between the two remedies of getting rid of a judge——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; I get the point. Impeachment and this remedy have no more to do with each other than if one existed and the other did not. We all know that every State of the United States has this power to impeach. Yet there is also recognized the power to oust by lawsuit.

I do not know of a single jurisdiction where that is not true. The power to impeach never was any part of the ordinary functioning machinery of any government. As I said earlier, it had its origin under a situation which made it necessary to reach and punish certain individuals too powerful to be dealt with by the ordinary machinery of the law.

I am not trying to do a partisan thing. I am trying to save an independent judiciary and preserve for the people at the same time the opportunity to clear their judiciary of the few men who are not fit to be on the bench and who are the real threat to an independent judiciary. [Applause.] It is nothing to me. I have worked for years, I have figured this thing out for years, trying to see how it could be done, and this is the best I can do. I cannot force you to accept it. I would not if I could.

Men of America sitting under the dome of the Capitol, you have a chance to make the judiciary of this country independent. Turn the inquiry as to the conduct of judges over to judges. Why do you hesitate?

At the danger of being tedious I emphasize that power to impeach never in the history of any government was an ordinary power of government. It was never depended upon to do the ordinary work of government. It had its birth in those conditions when powerful persons were beyond the reach of the ordinary functioning machinery of government, and as a matter of last necessity it was appealed to. They have not exercised it in the land of its origin six times in two centuries, yet we are still hanging onto that perfectly absurd remedy in America. Absurd! You know it is absurd. These Senators do not have the time.

It is going to get more and more impossible. You know and I know that the Senate is getting busier all the time. Every session we are adding more judges, and the jurisdiction of these judges is extending deeper and deeper into the affairs of the American people. We have got to do something about it. It is just a question of your doing it now, when you can do it deliberately, or waiting until some wild-eyed sentiment sweeps this House. You take the responsibility. I have done the best job I can. I have given years of time to work this thing out, and I bring you today the results of the best efforts of which I am capable.

No man yet, nobody yet, has stood on the floor of this House and at all challenged the statement that if the language in the impeachment provision of the Constitution is exclusive with regard to judges it is exclusive with regard to all the other civil officers, because the word "judge" is not mentioned in those provisions. A judge can be impeached only because he is a civil officer. If a judge may not have any other proceeding with reference to him because he may be impeached, no other civil officer may be ousted except by impeachment; and if there is anything in human language that conclusion cannot be shaken. They can stand here from now until doomsday, and it cannot be done. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a resolution of the House of Representatives is directed to the Chief Justice of the United States, stating that in the opinion of the House there is reasonable ground for believing that the behavior of a judge to whom this act applies, as provided in section 5, has been other than good behavior within the meaning of that term as used in section 1 of article III of the Constitution, the Chief Justice shall convene, or cause to be convened, the circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the judicial district of the judge—

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry at this point, if the Chair will permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand it the Clerk is reading the bill H. R. 5939.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is reading the bill H. R. 5939.

Mr. MICHENER. I understood that the gentleman from Texas had asked unanimous consent that H. R. 9160 be substituted in lieu of H. R. 5939.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not heard any such request.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The bill, H. R. 9160, contains provisions which the members of the committee agreed might be considered in lieu of the bill made in order by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to make this statement in reply to the observation made by the gentleman from Michigan and what the Chair anticipates will be the request of the gentleman from Texas.

The rule, House Resolution 237, adopted by the House makes in order consideration of the bill H. R. 5939. Certainly the Committee of the Whole would not have authority to change that action of the House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would it be in order to submit a unanimous-consent request that the bill, H. R. 9160, may be considered in lieu of the bill the Clerk is now reading?

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole would not have authority to change the action of the House by making in order a bill different from the one the consideration of which was provided for by the rule adopted by the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Would not the gentleman be able to obtain the result he desires by offering an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the body of the bill H. R. 9160?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman might do that by unanimous consent.

Mr. MICHENER. That would save going back into the House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may make the motion to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill (H. R. 5939) and to insert in lieu thereof all after the enacting clause of the bill (H. R. 9160).

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it my understanding that only the last paragraph of these two bills differ?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is not quite correct. The bills differ in that there is an inclusion of circuit judges in the bill (H. R. 9160).

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is in the last section?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is the only material difference, I may say to the gentleman. I think that is true.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to make an observation at this point. The Congress is the court of last resort for the American people. I am wondering whether it is the purpose of this bill to deprive the people the right to be heard through the Congress, and I am sorry I was not here at the time the distinguished gentleman from Texas expressed himself on the bill. Is it intended to put the matter of control over the Federal judiciary into the hands of Federal judges or is the Congress to reserve this function and right of impeachment unto itself? We must in order to protect the people exercise some measure of control and exercise some restraint over the Federal judiciary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It does not disturb that right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever a resolution of the House of Representatives is directed to the Chief Justice of the United States, stating that in the opinion of the House there is reasonable ground for believing that the behavior of a judge to whom this act applies, as provided in section 5, has been other than good behavior within the meaning of that term as used in section 1 of article III of the Constitution, the Chief Justice shall convene, or cause to be convened, the circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the judicial district of the judge is situated in special term for the trial of the issue of good behavior and the right of such judge to remain in office. The Chief Justice shall designate three judges of the circuit courts of appeals (one of whom shall designate as presiding judge) to serve on such court. Any one or more of such judges may be judges of circuit courts of appeals of circuits other than the one convened in special term, but, if the judge whose good behavior is in question is a judge of a circuit court of appeals, no judge from the same circuit shall serve. Such designation shall be made only after the Chief Justice has notified the judge whose good behavior is in question of the names of the judges whom he intends to designate to serve on the court and has given the judge notified an opportunity to present to the Chief Justice a statement of reasons why any such judge should not serve. If such reasons appear adequate to the Chief Justice he shall notify the judge of another intended designee and the foregoing procedure shall be repeated until three judges can be designated to serve on the court.

"SEC. 2. Thereupon it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause to be instituted, on behalf of the United States, a civil action in such court to determine the right of such judge to remain in office. In any such action the United States shall be a party to such controversy and shall have all the rights and duties of a plaintiff in a civil action in the Federal courts and the judge shall have all the rights and duties of a defendant in such an action. In any such action the Attorney General is authorized to avail himself of the services of such Members of the House of Representatives as may be designated by resolution of the House of Representatives to aid in the prosecution of the action. All matters of procedure in any such action shall be governed by rules prescribed by the Supreme Court, but the trial shall be without a jury.

"SEC. 3. If the court determines that the behavior of the judge has been other than good behavior within the meaning of that term as used in section 1 of article III of the Constitution, the judgment of the court shall be that of removal from office, but no other penalty shall be imposed by the court. Upon rendition of such judgment and until such judgment is reversed on appeal as provided in section 4, the defendant shall cease to have any power, authority, or right to act as judge, but his salary shall be paid him until the expiration of the 30-day period allowed for an appeal under section 4 if no appeal is taken, or until the determination of such appeal, if appeal is taken.

"SEC. 4. From the judgment of any such court, either the United States or the defendant may, within 30 days after its rendition, but not later, appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Notice in writing of the taking of such appeal must be filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court and also of the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, and a copy thereof must be served on opposing counsel. Such appeals shall be subject to and governed by the rules of practice and procedure now regulating appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, or such rules as may hereafter be adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States.

"SEC. 5. (a) This act shall apply to all judges of courts of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories and possessions, who hold their offices during good behavior, except the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"(b) For the purposes of this act, the term 'circuit court of appeals' shall include the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and the District of Columbia shall be deemed a judicial circuit."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VREELAND: On page 3, line 10, after section 3, strike out down to the period in line 21, page 3, and insert "Upon completion of the trial the court shall certify to the Senate of the United States, with a complete transcript of the proceedings, the findings and recommendations. The Senate shall thereupon proceed as in an impeachment under the provisions of article I, section 3, of the Constitution."

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, as I stated in general debate, some question was raised on the floor as to the constitutionality of taking away the right of impeachment, that sole power given in the Constitution to the Senate. At the same time, we must realize that the judges at the present time know they have that safeguard of trying to get by both Houses before their integrity can be questioned. I know of nothing that would make persons tend to radicalism more than to believe a judge was beyond complaint or criticism in dealing with some action of theirs. We have seen considerable in the newspapers lately of the few judges in the country who have been tried.

Under the bill as presented by our eminent chairman, as I understand, upon passage of a resolution of the Houses of Congress the Chief Justice appoints three circuit judges who shall try the particular judge concerning whom complaint is made. In the bill as it now stands their judgment shall be that of removal, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. My amendment merely proposes that these three judges instead of sitting in sole trial of the conduct of the defendant judge will merely sit as masters at a hearing, to take testimony and report to the Senate their findings and their determination and recommendations, which the Senate may reject or accept and go through with the impeachment proceedings.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. Does not the gentleman believe that under the present set-up the Senate has authority to refer this question to the masters substantially as the gentleman's amendment provides?

Mr. VREELAND. I am not familiar enough with the Senate's rules to state, but the wording of the Constitution is such that they have the sole right to try the issue. After all, any defendant, whether he is a judge or a layman, has the right to be confronted by his witnesses and tried before a court that is impartial. We all know in transacting the business of the Senate the Senators do not have time to sit in during an entire trial and listen to all the witnesses who may be presented against the defendant.

Under my amendment the judges who may be defendants will have the opportunity to be heard by three judges of the circuit court, to be heard impartially, and to have the judges sit during the entire trial, and not have the present system under which Senators may, if they feel the occasion warrants, run over to the Senate Chamber to listen for a few minutes.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. In order to make the gentleman's amendment effective, will it not be necessary to strike out section 4 as well?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes; it will; and that is another amendment I have on the Clerk's desk. I believe my amendment does away with the question that has been raised by the minority as to the constitutionality of taking away from the Senate that right and that safeguard of our judges as the buffer between the public and the courts. After all, our courts should not be in a position to be criticized by anyone who decides they should be criticized; neither should a judge be on such a high pedestal that he cannot be reached by a citizen who may justifiably feel aggrieved at some decision.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Would the effect of the gentleman's amendment be to make this trial board of three judges advisory to the Senate in an impeachment proceeding?

Mr. VREELAND. It is the same as in a court of law, where the judge refers a matter to a master to take testimony and make findings.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is there any authority in law now to delegate the power of the Senate to three judges, or even to one judge, to sit as a master in a case?

Mr. VREELAND. Of that I have no knowledge.

Mr. DONDERO. If there is no such authority, of course, the gentleman's amendment would be wholly invalid as unconstitutional.

Mr. VREELAND. I really do not know. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am in great sympathy with what my distinguished colleague has in mind, but I am compelled to oppose the amendment for this reason: When the House and Senate operate under the impeachment powers, they do not function as a part of the legislature; they each are entirely separate entities. The House of Representatives as a part of the Congress cannot at all control the machinery brought into play by the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment. As I say, I have much sympathy with what my friend has in mind, but this is an attempt on the part of the Congress to select a master in chancery for the Senate, which has the responsibility of trying this matter.

I mean that Congress absolutely has no power over either the House or the Senate as they exercise their constitutional powers with regard to impeachment.

If I have not made myself clear, I shall be pleased to yield for any question on that point, because I believe there is no uncertainty about it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. As I understand, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] provides a new method of trying such cases, whereas the amendment now before the House would mix the impeachment method and this new method.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My point is that there is no power in the Congress to designate a master in chancery for the Senate in discharging its constitutional responsibility under the impeachment provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Would not the Senate be obliged to pass this bill in order to make it applicable?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The point I am trying to make is that neither the House nor the Senate, nor the House and the Senate and the President combined, can at all control the Senate in the exercise of its constitutional powers under the impeachment provision.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Does the Senate, as has been contended here, have the authority now to delegate that power?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe the Senate could appoint an agent. Of course, I cannot go into that. I must devote myself to the amendment now pending. I believe that when my friend who has offered the amendment, who is a very excellent lawyer, thinks about the matter from that standpoint, he will agree that the Congress cannot control the Senate, exercising its impeachment powers. In the Constitutional Convention when they came to determine where the impeachment powers should be lodged, all sorts of places and agencies were suggested where these extraordinary powers should be lodged, and finally they were lodged in the persons who constitute the House and the Senate, but not in the House and the Senate, and when the House functions under its impeachment powers it is entirely independent of the Senate and independent of the Congress. The same is true of the Senate.

It gets its warrant directly from the Constitution. When the Senate sits as a trier of the issues presented to it under an impeachment by the House, it sits as a body that entirely controls its procedure, except as the Constitution directs, and neither the House nor the Senate nor any other agency can interfere in the exercise of its discretion.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. And neither the House nor the Congress has any authority to change that right.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. They cannot do it; neither the House nor the Senate nor the House and the Senate and the President. The House could vote for this thing unanimously and the Senate could vote unanimously and the President could approve it, and it would have no effect upon the Senate, sitting not as a part of the legislative branch of the government but as a trier of the issues involved in an impeachment.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is with some trepidation I step in here at this time in opposition to the judgment of able lawyers with whose premises and conclusions I disagree, but as a lawyer of some 35 years of experience, I think we are putting a lot of feathers onto a bird that do not belong on that bird.

The question which confronts us today is whether, as the Congress of the United States, we will undertake to delegate a nondelegable power specifically reserved to the Congress under the Constitution. It never has been done. It never can be done under the Constitution and under the decisions of the courts. You cannot amend the Constitution by statute. There is an orderly way to do it, if it should be done. I doubt if this bill accomplishes its desired purposes. I am sure it does not insure the integrity of the court. I know it is unconstitutional. [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, again I rise with trepidation to make any suggestion to this eminent group of lawyers concerning a constitutional matter, but I submit to you that this whole matter can be decided by the use of the power of the Senate, inherent in the Senate, to delegate to committees of its own Members and of its own choosing the power to take testimony, to make findings of fact, and report conclusions of law and recommendations to that body.

As I understand it, the basis for this whole bill is the fact that the Senate, as a body, does not attend hearings on impeachment. What is to prevent the Senate from delegating to a committee of three of its Members the power to sit and take the testimony of witnesses, make findings of fact, and report conclusions of law back to that body, who thereupon should consider the whole matter upon the record made by this special committee of the Senate, with the right reserved to both the managers on the part of the House and to the accused to appear on final hearing before the entire Senate when the matter is submitted to the entire Senate, either in person or by attorney, or both, and submit the matter finally to the judgment of the entire body?

To make use of the power to submit testimony to a special committee is only to do what is familiar legislative procedure in every legislative body in the world, and especially in this body, and to decide such matters after a record has been presented to such a special committee is not new, either to legislative procedure or to the jurisprudence of our country. Special masters are customarily designated by courts for the taking of testimony in intricate matters, such as in actions for accounting and other equity matters, and such special masters report back to the court. The judgment of the court is based upon the record so made. If my plan were followed, the judgment, after the report of its special committee, would be the judgment of the Senate of the United States, which body, under the Constitution, has the sole power to try and convict on a bill of impeachment.

I submit that this matter can be handled in that way within the terms of the Constitution without crosscutting the corners, as this bill would do, and without resorting to hidden powers that have remained hidden, according to the proponents of this measure, for 150 years and have been but recently discovered, and would be within the terms of the Constitution of the United States and within the generally accepted procedure of legislative bodies everywhere.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, this is the way to proceed on this matter. This is the method to be used in solving the difficulties here presented, and it can all be done within the limits of the Constitution and by an exercise of the inherent powers of the Senate.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to my friend that I appreciate the spirit in which we are considering this matter. Does it not occur to the gentleman that this matter is so closely akin to a criminal action in its consequences that the judge has the right or ought to have the right to have the persons who are to render judgment look at his witnesses when they testify? I may say, if I may take just a little time, I have considered that very thing and I suggested one time that the Senate appoint a committee of its own. If the Senate would appoint a committee of its own to take the testimony and then the Senate would feel itself bound to follow the judgment of, say, a dozen Members, that is getting pretty close to what I have tried to do.

One difficulty is that you have to get a two-thirds majority. It is a pretty bad thing to have a judge serving on the bench when more than a majority of the Senate has said that he probably ought not to be there.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, may have 3 additional minutes, because I have taken up his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. And the question is, inasmuch as we are dealing with this informally in a way, do you not think a judge has the right to have his triers look at his witnesses when they testify?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. In answer to the gentleman, I wish to say that either this is a criminal proceeding or it is not a criminal proceeding. I understood the gentleman's statement in his opening argument on this bill to be that impeachment is not a criminal proceeding, and with that statement I agree. Now, if it is not a criminal proceeding, then no constitutional right of the accused has been violated by this method.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My question is whether or not, sitting as a policy-fixing agency of the Government when we can vote in either direction, we ought not to make not only possible but certain that the judge who may be kicked out should have a trial with the opportunity for his triers to look into the faces of the witnesses who appear against him.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman. Of course he would have that right before the committee. I suggested that when this matter is finally submitted to the whole Senate by the special committee, the accused, as well as the managers on the part of the House, shall have the right to appear in person and present their arguments for and against the impeachment, and I think that such procedure would preserve certainly every right that any judge who is accused could reasonably ask.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. My concern in this debate is that the Congress shall not hastily take a bypath away from the traditional method of judging judges which was the wisdom of our forefathers. Great authorities on jurisprudence have said that the quickest way to wreck a democracy is to abandon too hastily the wisdom of the ages. For that reason I point out to the gentleman that this does not involve the question of a criminal trial; it is a question of whether the people of the United States through their agents, the Senate and the House of Representatives, wish to dismiss a judge because his behavior is not sufficiently good. The real question is whether this type of trial urges on and encourages integrity in judges because they fear public exposure in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I agree with the gentlewoman entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This bill has intrigued me very largely because it includes a number of matters that ought to come before this body for free and fair discussion. Legally, I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has answered any possible legal objection, when he called attention to the fact that the judges of the United States outside of those on the Supreme Court are created by act of Congress under provision of the Constitution. The Congress of the United States under this provision has created 265 judicial offices by statute, which are filled by Federal, district, and appellate judges, and it seems to me perfectly clear that if we have the right to create the office we have certainly the right and the power to remove the man who fills that office. It would be contrary to all reason, as I understand it, if that is not true. Therefore, I have referred to the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] as complete justification of this bill H. R. 9160, now under consideration.

But there are other things that I desire to call to the attention of the House that seem to my mind to meet completely and entirely the contention of the author of this proposed amendment, the gentleman from New Jersey, because we have this right, and have the right to follow our own judgment and our own methods and plans in relation to carrying them cut. It seems to me that when we raise any objection on the part of judges themselves to being tried by their fellow judges, that we forego completely and entirely our own contention about the entire jury system. Because, as I remember, it provides that a man shall be tried by a jury of his peers. That is the intention of the entire jury system, and if a judge is judged by judges, he is being tried by a jury of his peers. And there can be no possible contention against that insofar as I am able to see.

Some of us apparently look upon the Constitution as an instrument to provide for remaining in status quo, and for no other purpose. Is it not the universal rule that all constitutional provisions are carried out by statute both in the Nation and in the States? It seems to me that this is perfectly evident. Why then may not courts apply this rule to this question as well as to all others?

There are 82 percent of lawyers in the House and the Senate and have been on an average for the past 150 years. I hope you will note that fact and permit me to make this comment upon it: Of the most of the men elected to Congress, 82 percent then are elected because they are or are supposed to be the best lawyers in their districts.

They are the best lawyers because they have devoted their whole time and attention to the study and practice of the law as it is. That simply means that they have devoted their time to what the law is and have devoted practically no time to what the law ought to be. But when a man is elected to this body, that order ought to be reversed, and the men who make up this body ought to be not only willing but anxious to devote their time to the study, not of what the law is but what the law ought to be. I present this thought for the most serious consideration of my colleagues, because, when an intriguing legal point is raised on the law as it now is on the floor of this House, 50 men sometimes respond and an intelligence distinguished for its unusual keenness and ability often ensues. But when the question as to what we are going to do to provide jobs for men comes up on this floor, these same highly developed legal-minded men often sit open-mouthed, apparently without an idea of what action may be taken to remedy this condition. I cite this fact, not in criticism, but because I believe that the mind that can traverse the intricacies of legal lore can, with the same effort, undoubtedly go far toward the solution of this our No. 1 responsibility in American Government at the present time—that of unemployment.

This question of unemployment can be solved—it must be solved. It will be solved. And it can only be solved by the Congress of the United States. I repeat that I believe that if these lawyers of paramount legal ability will devote themselves as ardently and as intelligently to consideration of the question of what the law ought to be for providing jobs for men as they did in learning what the law was, that they can go far in solving this paramount problem. I appeal to them in behalf of suffering humanity to make this one supreme effort in the service of their country.

I am for this bill because it does "mess up" that old, worn-out custom and practice for the past 150 years, ending up with the picture of 2 out of 96 Members of the Senate sitting solemnly listening to the presentation of testimony against an unjust judge.

Every lawyer knows that generally too much consideration is given to the importance of judicial precedent. They seem to forget that the principal advantage to be had from judicial precedent ought to be the fact that it establishes a stepping stone from which we may step forward for new precedents and new legislation to meet conditions as they arise in a changing, growing country like our own.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. COX. In the event that the pending measure should become law, does the gentleman understand that it would be obligatory upon the House of Representatives to take the procedure set up under the bill, or would it be optional to employ the old constitutional method of impeachment before the Senate?

Mr. KELLER. I think that clearly we may follow either course we see fit. I see nothing against that. That seems to be the legal and constitutional decision that ought to be made on that subject. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to correcting the procedure as regards impeachment and the trial of Federal judges, but, because it is fundamentally wrong, I have a very definite objection to this bill. I think if we are going to change the procedure at all we should do it within the structure and within the practice now existing. I think if there is any reform necessary, if we are going to make more efficient the practice of trying impeached judges, it should be done through and within the Senate. We can provide by law for the selection of three or five or seven Senators to act as a trial court, but I do not think the right and privilege should be taken out of the hands of the Congress. It may be necessary, on occasion, to discuss the behavior of a certain Federal judge in your district. And there are some who are mighty arrogant and haughty, who care naught about the average citizen or public official, who ought to be talked about. My distinguished friend from Texas can now go and talk to his Senator, on behalf of a constituent as regards a grievance pertaining to an accused judge, but only God Almighty will be able to talk to a circuit judge sitting in a trial of this kind.

I personally am not going to give up any rights or privileges that I might enjoy in this particular instance. I am going to insist that the present practice continue, with such refinements as might help in carrying out the procedure intended by the Constitution.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. In just a moment I will yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman stated——

Mr. DINGELL. I do not care to argue the matter. I might yield later.

Here we have presented to us for consideration on page 2 a provision which is to permit judges to sit in judgment of accused judges. We also grant the impeached judge the very special and unique privilege, after the Supreme Court Justice designates the trial judges, to exercise veto over this panel or to disapprove of any one of them. The judge—the accused judge, mind you—passes upon his own court and jury. They must be to his liking. An ordinary citizen does not have that right. Is that not a fine state of affairs? Is it not a joke? It cannot be a serious proposal. For this great committee to bring in a bill like this before this House and plead for its adoption I think is ridiculous. Just imagine the idea of submitting a list of the trial judges for approval to the impeached judge. I have taken part in impeachment action on this floor more than once. I have taken my part seriously. I have cast my vote, very reluctantly. The most priceless possession of an official, his reputation, was at stake. I remember one judge who sat in that gallery. Judge Ritter I believe was his name. I gave him every benefit of any doubt. I did not vote to impeach him the first time. They had to convince me at the second time that he should stand trial. Whether or not he was convicted by the Senate was no concern of mine. The fact of the matter is, the Senate should not have its privileges abridged. The House does not or ought not to originate a curb against the Senate. I do not think the Senate will submit supinely to the abridgement of its rights.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, this is the people's forum. This is the last stronghold of the people. Let us not go back to our districts and tell our people that we have given up and surrendered the people's rights to a group of judges to run wild and then permit them to try themselves. This is where control belongs. This is where the fathers of the Constitution placed it. We have the right of impeachment and the Senate should have the right of trial. The accused will get a fair trial in the Senate, even more. The liberal and experienced Senators will give those impeached miscreants every benefit of doubt. If things are not being done properly, then in my estimation we should put certain refinements into the procedure, but the trial should be at the hands of the Senate and judges should not be passing upon the misdeeds of judges. I, for one, will not permit it. I will not go along with it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: It is set out on page 3 that the President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of so-and-so. As I understand it, the court that is set up does not have the power of impeachment but merely the power of trial.

Mr. DINGELL. That is right; I understand that.

Mr. MAY. But the Constitution originally placed it in the Senate.

Mr. DINGELL. That is right; the right of trial was given to the Senate; and that is exactly where it should continue to remain. As I said, if it is a crude method which we employ in impeachment, if the Senators are not satisfied with the method or finesse in trial, they can change their procedure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. If the procedure is wrong, if the Senate is neglectful of its duties, then I think the procedure should be changed so that a thoroughgoing, prompt, and fair trial might be had by any judge who is impeached; but it should not, even if possible, be taken out of the hands of the Senate. I say to you again, this is the last stand of the people. This is the people's forum, and this is where that power should remain.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Michigan stated a moment ago that he might be able to talk to a Senator but only God Almighty could talk to a circuit judge.

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does he think it would be ethical for a Member of this House to talk to a Member of the Senate about a case when the Senator was sitting as a judge?

Mr. DINGELL. It is always ethical for a Member of the House to talk to a Senator, and it is well that it should continue to be.

Mr. COCHRAN. Under such condition?

Mr. DINGELL. Under any condition, I will say to my friend.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DINGELL. That is where the gentleman and I differ. When the people's interests are at stake, I will talk to my Senator any time.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman not agree that since the Congress has the power to create these judgeships it ought also to have the power to dismiss the judges?

Mr. DINGELL. Precisely. There is no argument here about that. The gentleman and I are in agreement on the point.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. I think a clear distinction should be made between the creation of an inferior court and the removal of a member of the court. If Congress has the power to create an inferior court it likewise has the power to eliminate that court; but when it comes to removing a single member of the court for misbehavior that is an entirely different thing. Congress does not appoint the judge, it merely creates the office.

Mr. DINGELL. I am sorry I do not have the time to debate the fine points of law with the gentleman, but I have expressed myself quite thoroughly and clearly on what I believe. [Applause.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going into any of the technicalities of this bill but shall make a few general observations. We are not living under the Constitution that was adopted by the fathers. The Constitution as adopted by them would never have been ratified by the States. We all recall how certain rather progressive gentlemen of that day insisted that there should be certain amendments to the Constitution before it should be the supreme law of the land. Consequently we have the Bill of Rights. In that Bill of Rights are at least 25 personal liberties, many of which have been fought for, and bled for, and died for through the centuries. Our courts were set up to protect those individual liberties. That was their function in large measure.

I think we can all congratulate ourselves as free men and free women that the Court has functioned so well for 150 years, that the citizens of the United States of America enjoy more liberties, more individual liberties, more security than can be found in any other nation on the face of the earth today. I think we should respect our institutions, our Constitution, and our courts. I believe that our liberties are safe if we keep well within the procedure laid down, and the powers laid down, and the restrictions laid down in the Constitution of the United States. We saw this Nation rise almost as one man when an attempt was made to increase the size of the Court. It is not necessary to question the motives of any person or any official, and I know of no man who stood on the floor of this House and fought more desperately against the attempt to stack the Court than the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the whole Nation applauded his effort.

I am satisfied that in all the chaos of the world today where courts have gone down and people have lost their liberties, that the people of this country will be most impatient and intolerant of any act of Congress that even hints at going outside of the four corners of the Constitution to set up procedure that in any respect would weaken the independence of that guardian of their liberties. It was said more than a century ago—and I am not sure but what it might not have been prophetic:

> When any set of men shall entertain designs against the Constitution, either to overwhelm it in the anarchy of simple democracy or to found on its ruins a usurpation of monarchical power, they will commence their operations by an open or insidious attack to weaken and destroy the judiciary.

Let us make no gesture at this time of such disordered world affairs that will show a tendency to weaken by either open or insidious attack the guardian of our liberties which has served us so well for 150 years. I say that now of all times, in this period of more or less mob psychology sweeping the world, let us stay within the Constitution until calmer moments when we can exercise careful judgment. The present is no time to tamper with what has served a mighty people and protected their freedom and their liberty for a century and a half. [Applause.]

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas with regard to a matter that seems to me is rather confusing, and this might happen: Let us suppose, for instance, that there is a resolution agreed to by the House with regard to impeachment according to the method now provided by the Constitution. The offending judge is brought before the Senate and he receives a vote in his favor, but less than a majority. He would therefore be found not guilty, because it would take two-thirds to find him guilty. Yet there is in the House and in the Senate a majority of the Members who believe that the judge ought to be removed.

What is there to prevent our going through the method provided by this bill and getting a majority of the House and Senate to refer it to the three judges, then having the Senate do by this method what it refused to do by the method provided in the Constitution? Would there not be considerable confusion, and could that happen?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman is asking me in regard to what would be done?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes. Would there not be confusion in jurisdiction? The Senate by its action absolves the judge, because it takes a two-thirds vote to convict him, then it passes the question to this tribunal that perhaps might convict the judge. Where does the final jurisdiction lie?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may say to the gentleman that the question would probably be decided as matters of jurisdiction of the United States Government, and the various States are decided. The one that assumes jurisdiction first would cover it.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am afraid the gentleman does not understand the question. The House passes a resolution, according to the present constitutional method of impeachment. The Senate tries the judge, but it finds him not guilty by less than a two-thirds majority. Yet there still exists a majority in the Senate and in the House who believe that the judge is guilty. Now, what is to prevent them, after going through the first procedure and finding the judge not guilty by a less than a two-thirds majority, from using the majorities they have in the House and Senate, and referring the same question on the same facts to the three-judge tribunal, and perhaps get a different verdict?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This bill supplements but is not in substitution of the power to impeach.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to say that in the event impeachment should fail before the Senate, it would then be in the competency of the Congress to proceed by the method provided in this present bill?

Mr. MARSHALL. That is the question.

Mr. COX. Thereby subjecting the judge to two separate and distinct trials.

Mr. MAY. For the same offense.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Frankly, I do not think the House would be precluded, insofar as power is concerned, from proceeding. I do not think the House would do so, and if the House would I think it would be time to fold up. However, I do not think it would be precluded from proceeding.

Mr. MARSHALL. It seems to me that there is something inconsistent in those two methods of procedure.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I venture to say that in the gentleman's own State the power to impeach under quo warranto obtains with reference to all public officials?

Mr. MARSHALL. That is true.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not see how people coming from these States in which this thing is in practice are so afraid when it is sought to put it into operation by the Federal Government.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not think the gentleman has answered the question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think I did. I told the gentleman it would not preclude the House from proceeding. Is that an answer?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last few words.

Mr. Chairman, if I were a Member of the United States Senate and read tomorrow morning's RECORD, I would probably cast the whole proposition in terms of syllogism something like this: A majority of the House Committee on the Judiciary feels that there are bad judges in office; that perhaps some of these bad judges ought to be impeached; that the mode of impeachment consists in a large measure of the Senate shirking its duty; therefore there should be a new device invented to expedite the trial of impeachment cases. Then, continuing in the role of a hypothetical Member of the Senate, I would scratch my head and would probably say: "Well, the House's own doorstep is not so clean, after all, in that respect."

If you will go back to the impeachment resolution involving Mr. Lauderback, a judge from California, you will find that in the last session of the Seventy-second Congress there were 183 yeas and 142 nays on that impeachment resolution. The odd part of it was that 97 Members of the House were not even present to vote. I think that any attorney knows that when 20 percent of the grand jury is absent you can attack the validity of the indictment. That is No. 1. Perhaps the Senators took judicial notice of that fact.

Mr. Chairman, this bill ostensibly is before us today because it is alleged that the Senate has been shirking its duty. What about the 100 Members of the House who were not here to vote in the first place on the Lauderback impeachment resolution? There were 35 less than a clear majority of the House Members who finally approved of that impeachment resolution and if I were a Senator I would say, "You clean your own doorstep first before you cast the aspersing finger on the Senate's appreciation of its responsibilities."

In 1936, this House passed an impeachment resolution against Judge Ritter, of Florida. There were 181 yeas and 146 nays. There were seven Members of the House who voted present and there were 96 Members of the House who were absent. If you are putting the tenure and the character of a district judge in jeopardy and 20 percent of the grand jury returning the indictment is absent, I believe, as a Member of the United States Senate, I would say, "Perhaps first you had better send us a good impeachment case and then find out how the Senate will discharge its constitutional responsibility."

A tremendous record was made on both of these impeachment resolutions. They were available to every Member of the Senate. All the details were fully stated. I think, in my capacity as a hypothetical Senator, having in mind the prospect of sitting as a member of an impeachment court, that I would first say to the House of Representatives, "Before I entertain any proposal to change the constitutional impeachment system of this country, you had better send us a valid case and see how we operate, and make certain that all, or substantially all, of the members of the grand jury returning the indictment are in their seats at that time, so that any Federal judge for whom an impeachment resolution goes through this body gets plenary consideration before he is put into jeopardy." That would be my answer, as a Member of the Senate, to the bill which is pending before the House of Representatives today. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. On the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio and the admission made by the chairman of the committee, I am just a little bit disturbed in this matter. It was stated here by the gentleman from Ohio and was agreed to by the chairman of the committee that if the Senate failed to have a two-thirds majority for the conviction of a judge under an impeachment charge, he could again be brought before this tribunal for trial.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I rather agree with the gentleman from Ohio that he could be tried twice unless there is some express provision in this bill which denies that power to the Congress.

Mr. MAY. Would not that be an invasion of the guaranty in the Constitution that a man shall not be twice tried for the same offense?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If it is not a criminal proceeding, then he is not in jeopardy twice, and I expect that there is no objection other than that of procedure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I should like to withdraw the other two amendments that were sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. What is the situation now and what is pending? I understand that several amendments have been withdrawn. I frankly do not know the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may be permitted, the situation is that the gentleman from Texas has offered an amendment to strike out everything after the enacting clause and to insert a new bill. To that amendment the gentleman from New Jersey offered an amendment, which was not agreed to. The gentleman from New Jersey had two other amendments pending at the desk which obviously would have been necessary had his first amendment been adopted. The first amendment not having been adopted, the other two amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this proceeding in the House reminds me very much of the proceeding 4 years ago when a bill which I had introduced, giving members of the Supreme Court the right to retire instead of resign, was defeated. We got in here on the floor of the House and ran into a combination between the two extremes, on the conservative and the liberal side. We have one crowd here who do not want to pass this bill because they are very concerned about preserving the independence of the judiciary. They think so much of the dependability of judges apparently they are afraid to trust judges to try a judge; and my dear friend from Michigan does not like the bill because under it judges try judges. Two years after the bill referred to was defeated, it was passed, but there was much heat and pressure then. I have done the best I can; but if those two extremes get together, the bill is going to get licked.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The remark was made a moment ago that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has always fought for the independence of the courts, and I know that to be the case since I have been here. He and I have had very similar views concerning the need of judicial reform and the proper nature of it. That was true back in 1937, when he was opposed at one time to a certain bill known as the President's Court bill. I have agreed with him in trying to preserve the standards and independence of our Federal courts. My stand was fully stated at that time. On June 22, 1937, the gentleman's committee introduced and we passed in this House a bill very similar to this one, did we not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, we passed a bill.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Does not the gentleman believe the judiciary ought to be responsible to somebody other than to themselves, entirely, once in a while? Are they entirely without fault? Let them take their chances with the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We do not disturb that, but I never have believed that, in this country, where we are talking about the independence of the judiciary, anybody can object to judges trying judges as disturbing the independence of the judiciary. That is just something I cannot quite get in my head. Here we arrange that the judges shall try the judges in the first instance, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

You mark my word, I do not want to play the role of prophet, but if we fail to provide some better method than we have now for trying judges who ought to be off the bench, we are going to have a situation that we cannot control, I do not have the slightest doubt.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Would the gentleman ask me to vote for this bill as a matter of expediency if I were satisfied under the Constitution that it is wrong?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I would not; I would not ask the gentleman to do that. It would not do any good if I did. I do not want anybody to vote for this bill who does not believe that it is constitutional and that under all the circumstances that it is the best thing to do, but I do not want anybody to vote against this bill, either, because he just has his head kind of set against it, and does not exactly know why. I have not, personally, the slightest doubt about its constitutionality. There are some interesting things about the psychology of the men here. There is not a human being who sits before me today who does not come from a State where you can either impeach a public official or oust him by quo warranto or some similar proceeding.

Mr. GWYNNE rose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Do you?

Mr. GWYNNE. In my State we have that provision in our constitution. The constitution itself allows certain officials to be removed by some other proceeding, but requires judges to be impeached.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I know that, and I am not talking about judges. We are talking about the fact that it seems to be horrible to the minds of some of my friends here that because you may impeach a judge, it is a terrible thing to try to get rid of him in some other way, when common experience in all of the States has proven that that is a ridiculous way to deal with public officials who ought to be gotten rid of. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5939) to provide for trials of and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges, pursuant to House Resolution 237, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment agreed to in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 236, answered "present" 2, not voting 87, as follows:

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to a letter I have just written to the gentleman from Texas, Congressman MARTIN DIES, chairman of Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, and ask unanimous consent to insert a copy of the letter in the RECORD.

As I stated in my letter to the gentleman from Texas, Congressman DIES, I am in accord with the efforts of his committee to advise the country as to the persons and organizations who are engaged in the dissemination of propaganda in the United States designed to undermine the people's faith in our system of government.

During the 1938 campaign the Daily Record, an official Communist Party paper published in Chicago, issued a "Tenth District" edition and distributed same in my district in support of my opponent.

The people responded by giving me a 40,000 majority. Nevertheless, I feel it would be well for the Dies committee to investigate the source of the funds to defray the expense of such a special edition. The printing and distribution of this particular edition involved considerable expense. The money for the purpose came from some source, either within the United States or outside our borders. I simply desire that the people know how and in what manner the Communist Party and all the other organizations advocating foreign ideologies operate in our elections.

APRIL 9, 1940.

Hon. MARTIN DIES,
Chairman, Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DIES: I am in full accord with the view of your committee that the American people are entitled to know what persons and what organizations are engaged in the dissemination of propaganda in the United States designed to destroy public faith in our system of government, and I wish to take this opportunity to express my personal support of you and your committee in this work.

Enclosed you will please find a copy of the October 30, 1938, issue of the Daily Record published in Chicago, on page 5 of which will be found an extensive advertisement of the appearance of Earl Browder, general secretary of the Communist Party, at a meeting in Chicago on November 4. On the same page will be found the "platform" of the Communist Party. There is no question but that this particular newspaper is an official organ of the Communists.

You will note that the enclosed issue is stated in the masthead to be the "Tenth District Edition." On the front page and throughout the edition prominent mention is given to my opponent in the 1938 election, together with praise and commendation for his platform as a candidate for the seat in Congress I am privileged to hold. This particular edition was distributed in the district and, obviously, both its publication and distribution involved considerable expense. Someone provided the funds for this purpose, and I think your committee might advisedly make an investigation as to the source of those funds. I hope your committee will see fit to do so.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

RALPH E. CHURCH.

THE GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to the Government in business, and I direct my particular attention this afternoon to the Virgin Islands Co., a Government-owned rum bottling and manufacturing organization. Every taxpayer, every churchgoer, every truck driver, every farmer, every citizen regardless of his occupation is a stockholder in the rum-manufacturing business owned, controlled, and operated by the Federal Government of the United States.

This corporation was formed in the year 1934 by the New Deal administration. It would not make any difference to me whether the Government was in the rum business or any other kind of business, I would be opposed to it on general principles. I believe the people of this country should be allowed to operate the business of the country free of competition from the Federal Government. That is socialism or communism, depending on the form it takes.

On April 26, 1937, I received the following letter from Secretary Ickes when he donated to me a bottle of Government House rum, because I happened to be a member on the subcommittee having the appropriation under the Interior Department. The letter is as follows:

THE VIRGIN ISLANDS CO.,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RICH: I am sending you herewith a laboratory sample of Government House rum manufactured by the Virgin Islands Co. in St. Croix.

This is the same rum which is about to be marketed through a distributing agency in the United States. It is distilled from pure sugarcane juice under the most modern conditions. The cane was raised by natives of the Virgin Islands in connection with the rehabilitation program, which has been most successful in improving the standard of living on the islands.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Chairman, Board of Directors.

That rum has passed out of my control, I may say in passing, because some of the New Deal Members of the House relieved me of it at that time.

Let me call attention to the fact that this corporation cost the taxpayers of this country $2,600,000 under the National Industrial Recovery Act. That is the exact time they formed this corporation. They acquired some 5,000 acres of land, two old broken-down sugar refineries, a rum plant, and a bottling works. It would be bad enough for the Government to be in the sugar business, competing with our sugar refiners—and they should not—but for the Government to go into the rum business is for the Government to participate in corrupting the morals of its own citizens, as well as competing with the rum manufacturers of this country, such companies as Fountain's Pilgrim Rum of New England, the Siboney Distilling Co. of Philadelphia, the Bacardi rum sold by the Schenley Importing Co. of New York, the Carioca rum manufactured by the American Distilling Co. of Peoria, Ill., and many other rum manufacturers.

Let me call your attention to the operations of this Government rum plant as set out in the report made by Boyd J. Brown, president of the Virgin Islands Co., on April 8, 1939. On page 10 of the report the following statement appears:

The Virgin Islands Co., which is a corporation, does a general business. It grows and buys sugarcane for the manufacture of raw sugar and sells this sugar to United States refineries; it manufactures and sells light and heavy Government House rum for sale in the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, and the Virgin Islands; it manufactures and sells a special distillate to the Angostura-Wuppermann Corporation in St. Thomas for the making of bitters; it has a poultry farm and sells chickens and eggs in St. Croix and St. Thomas; it crushes rock and sells this to the Government for the construction of St. Croix roads; it rents tractors, farm equipment, land, trucks, and other equipment to the people of St. Croix; it sells cane seed; it does general repair work at its machine shops; and it sells cattle and milk. It sells alcohol to the Government hospital.

The corporation, although it cost over $2,600,000, is capitalized at $30. Think of it, costing $2,600,000 and capitalizing it for only $30. Is not that ridiculous? Did you ever hear of any private company doing such a thing? Incorporated for 1/86,600 of its cost. One share par issued to Secretary of Interior Harold S. Ickes; one share par issued to Assistant Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman; one share par issued to Governor of the Virgin Islands Paul M. Pearson.

That corporation is nothing more than the establishment of communism in the St. Croix Island. Think of this New Deal starting communism in our island possessions. It is terrible, I think.

Let me read from Mr. Brown's report:

This business has continued to demonstrate that the once-famous Virgin Islands rum has a definite place in modern-day interstate commerce and is gradually regaining the market captured by Cuban rum during prohibition while the Virgin Islands rum business was forced to shut down.

The amount of rum furnished by the Virgin Islands Co. is 34 percent of the business of this corporation. On page 16 of this report of the president of the Virgin Islands Co., Mr. Brown, there are given the losses of the Virgin Islands Co., and I want you to get this because corporations that do business ordinarily make a profit, but this one is losing money all the time; then they come back here for more appropriations and we have to tax the people of the United States to keep up this corporation—tax my people and yours. Is it fair? Is it just? I say "no; it is not."

The Virgin Islands Co. sustained a loss of $23,211.90 in 1935 and a loss of $11,370.64 in 1936, which were the 2 development years when the land was being reclaimed prior to the establishment of sales. In 1937 the company made a profit of $6,035.85 before paying $1,881.77 Federal income and capital-stock taxes. During the fall of 1937 a severe and prolonged drought set in and lasted until the fall of 1938, causing heavy losses for this year, which amounted to $86,420.66.

I have a report from the Virgin Islands Co. dated June 30, 1939, and it also shows a loss for last year of $23,002.37, always on the losing side.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is my information that the Virgin Islands Rum Co. send all their rum to this country in old kerosene barrels.

Mr. RICH. I do not know how they send it here, but I call attention to the fact that the Government House rum has a label like this on the bottle [displaying label]. They are supposed to have the date on there showing when the rum was made, but that date is not on there. May I say that this label is owned by W. A. Taylor & Co., of New York City, a private corporation. They own the label under which Government House rum is being sold. If there is any advantage to the Government House rum label, then they get the advantage of it. The Government does not, for they cannot control it.

This label shows, by the way, the ships and the house on there, and it is said that the diagram or the drawing was made by the President of the United States. You see, therefore, that it is quite a pretty label; but if the President thought he was doing something for the country he was only creating advertisement for W. A. Taylor & Co., because they have the label copyrighted in their own name. Why did it happen that way? Mr. Ickes probably can explain.

Mr. KNUTSON. The reason they do not put the year that the rum was distilled on there is because the older the rum got the more it tasted like kerosene.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I inquire, in connection with dating the barrel, if it would not be well to follow the procedure that Charlie McCarthy's boss follows of dating the package? Charlie McCarthy advertises that every Sunday night.

Mr. RICH. That might be O. K., too. Let me tell you about the deficit of the island of St. Croix and the amount that the Government of the United States appropriated to keep that island going down there. In 1938 we paid out of the Treasury $51,000 to St. Croix. In 1939 the deficit was $35,000. By June 30, 1939, the actual deficit was $95,000. Every year we appropriate money for the island of St. Croix in order to keep up this Government House Rum Corporation. I want to bring out this one fact, that notwithstanding the Government is selling this rum through W. A. Taylor & Co., of New York City, somebody evidently is taking a loss, because they sell 500 cases of rum, and with that 500 cases of rum they give away 200 cases free.

That is a terrible situation and will lead to the ultimate ruination of the distillery business in this country besides bankrupting the Virgin Islands Co. or the Government. I have affidavits from men up in New England who will corroborate the statement that with 500 cases of rum they give away 200 cases free. That will ruin the industry of people in this country. No one can afford to do it. They cannot afford to do so either when we see that they are going in the red each year and when we note the wages that are paid their employees down in the Virgin Islands who compete with the rum manufacturers of America. In 1921 first-class labor received $1 a day and second-class labor $1 a day. In 1938 first-class labor received $1 a day, second-class 80 cents, third-class 65 cents a day, and fourth-class 55 cents a day. They pay those wages to the labor of the Virgin Islands to distill this rum to compete with the rum dealers of this country who have to pay $5, $6, $7 or $8 a day for their labor. Some comparison. Like the difference between Japanese or Chinese labor and American labor.

Now, what is happening? I have the report of Mr. Brown, president of the Virgin Islands Co., and in it he suggests the legislation that he wants this Congress to pass. I think it is the worst thing that could possibly come at a time like this.

Let me read you from page 24 of the report:

At the Virgin Islands Co. board of directors meeting held September 19, 1938, the president of the company proposed the following resolutions which were adopted by the board:

"Be it, and it is hereby, Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to consider and recommend legislation to the Congress which will repeal the $6 per ton export duty on sugar shipped from the Virgin Islands.

"Be it, and it is hereby, Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to consider and recommend legislation to the Congress which would extend the participation in the sugar processing tax to St. Croix on the same basis it is extended to Puerto Rico and for the benefit of the sugar industry."

They say nothing in the resolution about rum, but in the bill they want the rum tax to go back to the island.

They also want to have the island of St. Croix eliminated from all taxes. They do not mention rum. They are afraid to say anything about rum because they do not want the people of this country to know they are in the rum business, yet they want to eliminate those taxes so that the people of St. Croix can have that money without coming in here and asking the Federal Government to support them to such a large extent.

It would not be right and if any rum dealer can justify such a procedure I do not know how. His conscience must be made of rubber and his eyes of glass.

I think that if there is anything that is dastardly it is the idea of trying to get the Government to give to Government corporations power the Government will not grant to the individual corporations of this country. I believe it is dirty and downright mean legislation they are trying to have enacted. I hope there will be enough sound Democrats and enough Republicans to keep the new dealers from enacting such legislation as that, and I am hopeful that will be the case.

Mr. Speaker, there are other parts of a report that I should like to include in my remarks, and I ask unanimous consent that I may insert them in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOLAND). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The entrance of the United States Government into the rum business, through the operations of the Virgin Islands Co., producers of "Government House" rum, has been characterized by the use of tactics not only contrary to the spirit but also the letter of the various laws of the Nation bearing on fair trade and also the regulations of the liquor industry. It is difficult enough for private corporations to compete with what amounts to a governmental agency whose losses can always be covered by a deficiency appropriation from a generous Congress, but it becomes practically hopeless when the Government agency itself, in the marketing of its product, resorts to measures involving activities not only on the border line of legality but actually in violation of the laws by which their competitors are governed, and which their competitors must obey or be subject to the revocation of their licenses to do business issued by that same Government.

To obtain results and competitive advantages which these very laws were passed to prevent, every effort seems to have been made to find interpretations and subterfuges to evade the intent of these laws, and finally we have violation of them, either in the expectation that no complaints would be made or that no vigorous prosecution might be feared.

We shall detail below specific instances in their chronological order, culminating in a most recent and what we believe to be a flagrant violation of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, as well as the Robinson-Patman Act, and which has resulted in irreparable harm to ourselves as competing rum distributors.

In the first place, for the purpose of marketing the rum, a private corporation, W. A. Taylor & Co., of New York, was made sole agent for the United States of America. This concern buys and takes delivery of the rum produced and bottled by the Virgin Islands Co., and in turn sells the product to distributors. The label used on the package, Government House, was developed and is owned by the private corporation, W. A. Taylor & Co. Regulations No. 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration, which are based upon the provisions of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, read in part as follows:

"SEC. 41–6–e. Statements, seals, flags, coats of arms, crests, and other insignia: Statements, seals, flags, coats of arms, crests, or other insignia, or graphic or pictorial or emblematic representations thereof, likely to mislead the consumer to believe that the product has been endorsed, made or used by, or produced for, or under the supervision of, or in accordance with the specifications of, the Government, organization, family, or individual, with whom such seal, flag, coat of arms, crest, or insignia is associated, are prohibited on any label of distilled spirits."

One of the purposes for which this was designed, in accordance with the law, is to prevent private corporations from stating or implying that any liquors which they might produce and sell were endorsed by the Government or any agency thereof. Here, however, we have a label owned and a product distributed by a private corporation enjoying the privilege of Government sanction of the use of the name Government House with other insignia and statements, bringing to the consumer the endorsement of the Government—something which no other private competing company is allowed by law to do. In other words, the distributors of Government House rum have taken every possible advantage of this unfair situation to the detriment of competition which has not and cannot obtain Government endorsement of their products.

While the Federal Alcohol Administration was aware of this discrimination, it took refuge in the technicality that the product was in fact produced by a Government project and ruled in favor of the use of the name Government House and other data, as covered by letter from Phillip E. Buck, general counsel. The Administration ignored the misleading impression gained by the consumer that the rum was produced under Government specifications (presumably of the highest quality) and that other rums, which are not produced under Government specifications, are not necessarily of as good quality.

In the second place, the initial advertising of Government House rum contained misleading statements as to age when no age appeared on the packages as required by law.

In the third place, within the past 2 or 3 weeks, the agents for Government House rum have offered to jobbers in the State of Massachusetts a "free goods" deal in violation of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act and the regulations promulgated thereunder. Copies of complaints and supporting affidavits to the F. A. A. reporting on this vicious situation are attached. This offer of 200 cases free with each purchase of 500 cases of Government House rum is in our opinion in violation of section 5 (b) 3 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act and section 2 of regulations No. 6 of the F. A. A., which reads:

"Except as provided in these regulations, it is unlawful for any industry member to induce, by furnishing, giving, renting, lending, or selling any equipment, fixtures, signs, supplies, money, services, or other thing of value, directly or indirectly, or through an affiliate, any retailer to purchase any products from such industry member to the exclusion in whole or in part of such products sold or offered for sale by other industry members in interstate or foreign commerce, if such inducement is made in the course of interstate or foreign commerce, or if such industry member engages in the practice of using such means to such an extent as substantially to restrain or prevent transactions in interstate or foreign commerce in any such products, or if the direct effect of such inducement is to prevent, deter, hinder, or restrict other industry members from selling or offering for sale any such products to such retailer in interstate or foreign commerce."

The effect of this has been to bring sales of our competing rums in Massachusetts to a standstill, and this effect will continue until the "deal" is discontinued and the glutted market has had a chance to absorb the overstock of merchandise resulting from this "dumping" operation. In this process competition is now being destroyed and, if continued, will be almost completely wiped out in this State.

The Federal Alcohol Administration upon receiving these complaints has not as yet expressed in writing their attitude in the matter. However, they are investigating the evidence for the purpose of determining a violation of the law but have warned verbally that due to the method used by the "Government House" agents—namely, to give free goods to the jobbers, who in turn passed on a reduction in price to the retailer—it might be difficult under the wording of the existing law to prove a violation of the letter of the law. There is no doubt in our minds, and we suspect, also in the minds of the officials of the F. A. A., that the intent of the law has been violated and direct liability has been avoided, if it is so ruled, by a hair-line technicality.

This "free goods deal" or "dumping" is also in violation of section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, which reads, in part: "It shall be unlawful to sell, or contract to sell, goods in any part of the United States at prices lower than those exacted by said person elsewhere in the United States for the purpose of destroying competition, or eliminating a competitor in such part of the United States; or, to sell, or contract to sell, goods at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor." The practical effect here of this free deal is that destruction and elimination of competition which is now in process.

This has not as yet been reported to the Federal Trade Commission.

The Virgin Islands Co. has been operating at a deficit for some years, including the last fiscal period. Presumably, the sales agents, being a private concern, are realizing some profit from these sales, which are causing such competitive damage. In view of deficits reported by the producing company, it is natural for their competitors and, in fact, for any businessman to question how merchandise can be given away on a ratio of 200 cases free with every 500 cases bought without further increasing deficits in the current fiscal periods and which the Congress will be asked to subsidize. Or, to put it another way, will Congress be asked to pay the bill for the destruction of legitimate business competition after the Virgin Islands Co. and their sales agents have by their selling tactics brought about these results?

The liquor industry is strictly regulated by law. There can be no quarrel with existing statutes designed for the protection of the public welfare and the individual consumer. The industry, in turn, is also heavily taxed and bears the burden of many imposts and levies—Federal, State, and local—pouring many millions of dollars into the treasuries of the respective governing bodies. The direct competition of the Government with the industry is financed indirectly by the taxes paid by that industry and to the detriment of individual members of the industry. As a straight economic problem, this is serious enough, but when the Government as a competitor uses its power to set itself aside from the restrictions and regulations imposed upon private industry in competition with it, and when the Government itself, through its agents, chooses to ignore and evade, both directly or through subterfuge, the intent as well as the letter of its own laws and regulations, by what standards of ethics and decency can the industry and the public be guided?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I believe the gentleman is on sound ground when he attacks the Government for entering into the business of manufacturing rum in the Virgin Islands. It certainly puts the dealers who make rum in the United States or in other parts of the West Indies at a real disadvantage. The discounts the gentleman mentions are outrageous, and certainly something ought to be done about them. I believe the gentleman is on firm ground in making that statement.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that the affidavits I have here show they are selling 500 cases of rum and giving away 200 cases, and with this the case there is only one thing that can happen. Where they have been selling 50 and 75 cases to dealers in New England, which was about the regular stock such dealers bought, they are now selling 250 cases to them, and with the 250 cases they give 100 cases free. The regular sellers of rum are not going to do any business with those people for a long time to come, because those dealers are going to make a bigger profit, and you cannot blame them for that. But who is going to be the loser? Why, it is the taxpayers in your district, the taxpayers in my district, the taxpayers of this country, who will have to meet that deficit. That is what is unsound about this whole program. When you put government in business, all the men you put at the head of those businesses think about is keeping the wheels turning. They do not care about who has to stand the cost of operation of these plants. This is terribly hard not only on the people who are in the rum business but those who are in every other kind of business.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I noticed in a press dispatch yesterday that a whisky concern in Kentucky was attempting to make an F. D. R. brand of whisky. This was prohibited by the Governor, who stated that he thought the President might object. Therefore, the name of that label is still open. Do you not believe it would be a good idea to name this F. D. R. rum, so the people of America may know who is responsible for this rum business?

Mr. RICH. That is one suggestion. I am not trying to make up a label for this rum at all. I am trying to stop the Government from being in business. I do not care what kind of business it is. I believe we ought to stop putting the Government into all kinds of business. In the Democratic platform of 1932 they said they would take the Government out of business, they said they would consolidate offices, and they said they would eliminate bureaus. Instead of that, they have set up corporation after corporation. They have established more bureaus in the Federal Government than was done in any four times as long as this administration has been in power by any other administrations. If their promises were good to be elected on in 1932, they certainly ought to be as good as their word and stop this reckless program of putting the Government into all kinds of business. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to read a letter from the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom. This is a committee composed of 50 university professors and teachers from a score of universities and colleges throughout the country. The letter was sent to me under date of April 5, 1940, and it reads as follows:

AMERICAN COMMITTEE FOR DEMOCRACY AND INTELLECTUAL FREEDOM,
New York City, April 5, 1940.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CELLER: On behalf of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom and of the educators, writers, and publishers whose names appear on the attached sheet, I am addressing this communication to you because of the position which you took on the floor of the House of Representatives during the debate on January 23, 1940, relative to the Dies committee.

In the course of that debate, you read extensive quotations from the analysis of the Dies committee's activities prepared by the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom. You then commented as follows: "I have presented their conclusions to certain members of the [Dies] committee. They assure me wholeheartedly and unmistakably that there will be no repetition of the errors of the past. * * * They will not attack the intellectual freedom of educators and university instructors. They will not berate students for their opinions, and they will not attempt the censorship of books, plays, or works of art."

A United Press dispatch appearing in the New York Herald Tribune on March 27 reports that the Dies committee has voted "to undertake an inquiry into alleged Fascist and Communist propaganda in textbooks used in schools and colleges. The committee decided to employ an additional investigator for that purpose. He will investigate political and social affiliations of the authors of the books."

This report has disturbed us profoundly. The record of the Dies committee, particularly its attacks on freedom of teaching and of student organization, its patent desire for censorship of the Federal Theater Project, and its action in publishing Mr. Matthews' report on the consumer movement without calling witnesses or sifting the alleged evidence, justifies our fear that the committee may now be embarking on a campaign to "smear" textbooks and their authors and to intimidate school administrators in their selection of texts.

Furthermore, we deem any investigation into the political and social affiliations of textbook writers to be an indefensible invasion into the rights of the individual. Democracy in education means among other things that educational standards shall constitute the sole test in determining the choice of books to be used in our schools and colleges. To require conformity with some official definition of social, political, or religious orthodoxy is to destroy freedom of discussion and investigation, the essence of democratic education. In the end, the community as a whole would have to pay dearly if we allow educational freedom to be throttled.

We call upon you, therefore, to protest publicly against this new venture of the Dies committee and to take all possible steps to prevent them from once again seeking to attack the intellectual freedom of educators and university instructors, to berate students for their opinions, and to attempt the censorship of books, plays, or works of art.

Respectfully yours,

FRANZ BOAS, Chairman.

Mary E. Woolley, president emeritus, Mount Holyoke College.

I may say that Franz Boas is a professor of anthropology at Columbia University and a very distinguished educator—one whose views have been widely read and who is held in highest esteem by educators all over the world.

In reference to this letter, I must inveigh against any possible effort of the Dies committee to throttle or curb the opinions or views of educators. I do not know what is in the mind of the investigators of the Dies committee. I do sincerely hope they will not embark upon any attempt to do that which the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom—these university professors—fear the committee may do. I say that to examine into the political or social affiliations of textbook authors and professors and teachers is a rather startling and dangerous innovation in our democracy. It would, indeed, tend to frighten educators into conformity with educational doctrines and opinions that the Dies committee or some other entity demands.

I loathe communism. I loathe equally nazi-ism and fascism. I do believe, however, in what Voltaire said when he said:

I do not agree with a word that you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

I also proclaim the doctrine of Jefferson on freedom of thought and democracy, particularly when he said:

If I were given a choice of government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I would choose the latter.

LET VOLTAIRE AND JEFFERSON BE A GUIDE FOR THE COMMITTEE

I believe the Dies committee would do great harm if they would do what the professors think they may be doing. I hope they will be deterred therefrom. It would recruit great strength among the Communists if they did that, because you know and I know that force, coercion, and violence of that sort are harmful because there is always sympathy for the oppressed. These very Communists we loathe would be deemed the oppressed if the committee would do those things. I am afraid that some of the recent seizures, particularly those in Philadelphia, made by the committee were unwarranted and unlawful, and those types of seizures cause you and me as Members of Congress to be held in disrepute. I must remind the Dies committee of the prohibitions in the Constitution against unwarranted searches and seizures, and I urge that the committee's enthusiasm should not overcome its sound discretion and its sound judgment. [Applause.]

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, April 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, holy beyond our thought, who dwellest in light unapproachable while we dwell in darkness, even in the shadow of death, lift from our hearts the heavy burdens that oppress us, so largely self-imposed, for we have heard Thy call at morning and at evening, in youth and in age, in sickness and in health, in joy and in sorrow, stirring in our thoughts and crying from our hearts, yet we have not made response.

We have feared to lose ourselves in Thee lest the direction of our lives should be wrested from our hands, lest our wills should become as not our own, yet now our wills are broken and we are unable to direct our lives even as we would. We have feared the burden of Thy love, for it seemed too hard to care for those whom it is easier to hate or to spend our time in helping others, and so we find ourselves enslaved to self, wearied by our cold and calculating ways, lonely and alien as we move among men. Save us, therefore, gracious Lord, in this hour of trial, and make us willing to be what we were meant to be for the sake of Him who faced the worst this world could do and, from the travail of His soul, because of His oneness with the Father, bequeathed to us the benediction of His peace and calm, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

OPERATION OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I call to the attention of the Senate an article which appeared in yesterday's issue of the New York Herald Tribune, and a letter which has been sent to over 63,000 depositors in and around Syracuse and Baldwinsville, in the State of New York, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

I think it most appropriate to call to the attention of the Senate the effectiveness of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in stabilizing the banking system of the country, and relieving the bank depositors of the distress and economic strangulation which the depositors were experiencing prior to the inauguration of bank-deposit insurance.

It is comforting to note that under the policy pursued by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation the people in these communities were not subjected to the economic blight which would flow from the closing of a large bank. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation does not wait until a bank becomes hopelessly insolvent before taking steps to correct its downward trend. It has been its policy to arrest these trends, and rehabilitate banks in appropriate circumstances, and prevent ultimate insolvency. The rehabilitation plan effected by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation at Syracuse is another striking example of the efficiency of this Corporation in preventing the continued operation of weak banks.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation again has demonstrated to the country that it merits and justifies the confidence which the depositors of the Nation have in it.

I ask unanimous consent that the article and the letter be printed as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The article and letter are as follows:

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, April 6, 1940.

To depositors of First Trust & Deposit Co., Syracuse, N. Y., Baldwinsville State Bank, Baldwinsville, N. Y.:

Today the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is disbursing approximately $23,430,000 to First Trust & Deposit Co., Syracuse, and Baldwinsville State Bank, Baldwinsville, to rehabilitate these two institutions and to make their merger possible.

Beginning Monday, April 8, 1940, all deposits presently to your credit in either of these banks will be available immediately and in full in the continuing bank, which will operate under the name and charter of First Trust & Deposit Co. The office of the Baldwinsville State Bank will be operated henceforth as a branch. There will be no interruption in the banking service to depositors and customers of either bank.

Over a period of years the merging banks accumulated a large amount of real estate, substandard securities and real-estate mortgages, and undesirable loans which had depreciated in value to such an extent as gradually to exhaust their capital funds. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which has the responsibility for protecting the depositors of these banks, recognized this hazardous condition and cooperated in a merger plan for recapitalizing the banks and simultaneously eliminating the substandard and unsatisfactory assets.

Through this reorganization, which affords the greatest possible protection to the depositors of both institutions, First Trust & Deposit Co. will have cash and other sound assets, including the approximately $23,430,000 supplied by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, equal to the deposits and other liabilities of the merging banks and also will have $5,500,000 of capital funds supplied by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation are pleased thus to have served the depositors of these banks without loss or inconvenience to them and to have strengthened the banking facilities in Syracuse and Onondaga County. Deposits in the continuing bank, First Trust & Deposit Co., will continue to be protected by Federal deposit insurance to the extent provided by law.

Very truly yours,

LEO T. CROWLEY, Chairman.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of April 8, 1940]

TWENTY-THREE MILLION SIX HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS F. D. I. C. AID FOR BANK HOLDERS—AGENCY TO DISBURSE FUND, LARGEST IN ITS EXISTENCE, IN SYRACUSE MERGER PLAN

SYRACUSE, April 7.—In the largest transaction of its 7-year existence, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation tomorrow disburses about $23,600,000 to protect depositors of First Trust & Deposit Co., of this city, and Baldwinsville State Bank, of suburban Baldwinsville, through a merger of the two institutions.

The merger, announced by Leo T. Crowley, F. D. I. C. Chairman, last month, will result in what Mr. Crowley has described as "one of the soundest, most liquid banks in the country." The continuing bank will operate under the name and charter of First Trust & Deposit Co., Baldwinsville being served by a branch of this bank.

Plans for the merger provide for sale of all substandard assets of the two banks to Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for $23,575,000 and for subscription to $5,500,000 of preferred stock in the continuing bank by Reconstruction Corporation. Holders of equities in the merging banks will receive shares in the continuing bank.

The transaction was approved by stockholders of the two banks at meetings held on April 5. Action in both cases was unanimous. Filing of merger agreements with the county clerk and with the office of the superintendent of banks, the last necessary preliminary step to actual disbursement of the F. D. I. C. and R. F. C. funds, was completed Saturday afternoon.

Assets of First Trust & Deposit Co. and Baldwinsville State Bank being sold to F. D. I. C. total about 14,000 items, including 1,700 mortgages on real estate, 750 parcels of real estate, 7,800 personal loans and loans and discounts, 150 groups of bonds and securities, and 4,500 charged-off assets, all of a book value aggregating about $29,000,000.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will establish in Syracuse an office to liquidate the assets it acquires through the merger operation. The liquidation, it was stated, will be undertaken in an orderly manner, with due regard for credit conditions in the community and for the circumstances of creditors whose obligations are purchased.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS AFFECTING THE CORRUPT PRACTICES LAWS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, some time back—during the Seventy-fifth Congress, to be exact—the Senate authorized the printing as a public document of a work entitled "Compilation of the Laws Relating to Corrupt Practices at Elections in the United States." The compilation was by Dr. Harry Best, of the University of Kentucky, and has been accepted as a very helpful study. The compilation is identified as Document No. 11 of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

Dr. Best has just completed a manuscript and brought it up to date under the title of "Judicial Decisions Affecting the Corrupt Practices Laws in the United States." It is a work which seems to me essential to our legislative consideration of any possible changes in election laws. I ask unanimous consent that the manuscript may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator whether, under the rule, the manuscript will not have to go to the committee.

Mr. NYE. It will automatically go to the committee for an estimate, I understand, and then will come back to the Senate for further action.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROMOTION OF BUSINESS AND ECONOMIC RESEARCH

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator who objected to the consideration of the bill allow me to make a brief explanation of it?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection. I am objecting to the consideration of the bill because of the absence of the Senator from Maine, who heretofore has objected.

Mr. KING. I have been requested to object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall be glad to give the Senator from Texas an opportunity to explain it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to submit to the Senate an analysis of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the bill declares that its purpose is to aid in acquiring and diffusing useful information on subjects connected with business, and to promote scientific investigation respecting the principles of economics and their application to the conduct of business.

It carries out this purpose through a system of cooperation with the States and State institutions of learning.

To secure the benefits of the bill a State must have at its State university, or some other State educational institution, under the direction of the college of business administration or, if there is no such college, a department or college in which such business subjects are included, a department to be known as a business research station, which will cooperate with the Department of Commerce in conducting research in business.

The Secretary of Commerce, after a survey in consultation with the Board created by the bill, shall designate the State institution at which the business research station shall be established.

This Board is called the Business Research Board, and consists of the Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, ex officio, or an officer of the Bureau designated by him, and six members to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce.

The business research station established in each State may be discontinued temporarily, or may be transferred to another State institution for stated causes and after a hearing before the Business Research Board if, in the judgment of the Secretary and the Board, the fundamental purposes of the bill will be furthered thereby.

The bill further declares that its purpose is to provide for a continuous program of investigation in each State, and that each university or other institution participating shall have entire freedom to publish findings and conclusions arrived at in the scientific researches of its business research station.

The bill states that the object and duty of such business research stations shall be to conduct original researches, investigations, and experiments bearing directly upon the problems of business involved in the production, manufacture, preparation, use, distribution, financing, and marketing of the products and services of commerce and industry, including the fisheries industry, and including such researches as have for their purpose the establishment and maintenance of a permanent and efficient business structure, and such economic investigations as have for their purpose the development and improvement of the standard of living of the people of the United States.

In order to promote the adoption of the best methods, the securing of comparable data, and the achievement of adequate results the bill provides that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce, through the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and with the advice of the Business Research Board, to indicate from time to time such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem to be most important, to approve programs of research, to furnish forms for the tabulation of results of researches, investigations, and experiments requiring comparable data, and in general to furnish such advice and assistance as will best promote the purposes of the bill.

The Secretary of Commerce, with the advice of the Business Research Board, through the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, is required by the bill to coordinate the work of the business-research stations in programs of cooperative research with the Department of Commerce, and ascertain whether such stations are complying with the standards prescribed by the bill, and whether the expenditures by such stations of sums received under the bill are in accordance with the provisions of the bill; and he is authorized to prescribe, with the advice of the Board, such rules and regulations as may be necessary in order to carry out the provisions of the bill.

The bill requires that bulletins or reports of progress on research studies shall be published by the business-research stations at appropriate intervals, and be sent free to such persons as may request them insofar as the means of the station will permit.

The bill provides that it shall be the duty of each business-research station annually, on or before the 1st day of February, to make to the president of the university a full and detailed report of its operations, a copy of which report shall be sent to each of such stations, to the Secretary of Commerce, and to the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is provided by the bill that at least three members of the first Business Research Board shall be chosen from a list of six or more nominees which shall be presented to the Secretary of Commerce by the conference of State university schools of business, and at least one member shall be actively engaged in the management or direction of private business.

It is required by the bill that the Business Research Board shall prescribe the standards and necessary or desirable modifications thereof from time to time for participation by colleges in the funds the bill provides; that no college shall be admitted to such participation unless approved by the Board as conforming to such standards; and that the Board shall meet upon call of its chairman or of the Secretary of Commerce.

The bill further provides that each member of the Business Research Board shall hold office for a term of 6 years, except that, first, any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term; and, second, the terms of office of the members first taking office after the enactment of the bill shall expire as designated by the Secretary of Commerce at the time of appointment, one at the end of 1 year, one at the end of 2 years, one at the end of 3 years, one at the end of 4 years, one at the end of 5 years, and one at the end of 6 years after the date of the enactment of the bill; and that when any vacancy in the Board occurs, or when the term of a member is about to expire, the conference of the State university schools of business shall make at least two nominations for each position, from which the Secretary may make appointments.

The bill states that the Business Research Board shall at all times be constituted so that its membership shall include at least three persons selected from the nominees of the conference of the State university schools of business, and at least one businessman, except for the short periods of unavoidable temporary vacancies; and that members of the Board shall receive no compensation for services as members thereof, but each appointed member shall receive necessary traveling expenses and subsistence while away from his place of residence upon official business of the Board, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government.

The bill prescribes that to enable the business research stations to function in pursuance of its provisions there is authorized to be appropriated, to be paid to each institution at which a business research station is established under the bill, a sum not to exceed $20,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and similarly a maximum for each succeeding year as follows: $30,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942; $40,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943; and $40,000 for each fiscal year thereafter; provided, that no payment in excess of $20,000 shall be made to any such institution for any fiscal year unless such institution or the State for such institution makes available for the use of such station for such fiscal year, out of funds not acquired under the bill, an amount equal to such excess, and provided further that no payments made under the bill shall be used by any such institution for any purpose other than business research, nor shall any such payment in excess of $20,000 annually be used to reduce the business-research budget otherwise provided at such institution below the average of those for the 3 fiscal years immediately preceding the enactment of the bill.

The bill also prescribes that the appropriation for any such institution for the first fiscal year, or part thereof, of operation of the business research station at such institution shall be payable only upon certification to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Secretary of Commerce that such institution has been approved under the provisions of the bill; that the appropriation for each succeeding fiscal year shall be payable upon certification to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Secretary of Commerce; that the institution and the business-research station have during the preceding fiscal year complied with the provisions of the bill and the standards it prescribes for participation in such appropriation; and that if any portion of the money received by any institution for any fiscal year under the bill shall by any action or contingency be lost or misapplied, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify the amount thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury, and such amount shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation for such institution.

The bill specifies that appropriations made under its terms shall be paid annually in equal quarterly payments on July 1, October 1, January 1, and April 1 of each year by the Secretary of Commerce upon warrants by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and that such payments shall be made to the treasurers or other officers duly appointed by the governing boards of such institutions to receive them.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to accept and utilize gifts or bequests of money and other personal property for the purpose of aiding or facilitating the research activities authorized by the bill, and that such gifts or bequests and the income therefrom shall be exempt from all Federal taxes.

To enable the Secretary of Commerce to carry out the terms of the bill it authorizes to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, a sum not to exceed (a) 4 percent of the total appropriation made for such year under the bill, or (b) $50,000, whichever is the larger amount.

The bill stipulates that nothing in its terms shall be construed to impair or modify the legal relation existing between any of the institutions with which it deals and the governments of the States in which they are respectively located.

It is further stated in the bill that the grants of money it authorizes to be made to an institution are made subject to the assent of the governing body of such institution for the purposes of such grants.

The Secretary of Commerce is required by the bill to report annually to Congress the activities of the Department, of the Business Research Board, and of the business research stations, in connection with the terms of the measure.

The bill provides that when used in its provisions the term (1) "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, and the term (2) "college" includes school.

Mr. President, I have endeavored a number of times to get this bill before the Senate. I have delivered this analysis in order that Senators may familiarize themselves with the bill. At the first opportunity I shall again endeavor to bring it up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest that the House bill be considered. There are two pending amendments, to which the Department of Commerce has agreed; and if those amendments can be considered to the House bill, we can then indefinitely postpone the Senate bill.

Second. A combined lantern in the fore part of the vessel and lower than the white light aft, showing green to starboard and red to port, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on their respective sides.

(b) Every motorboat of classes 2 and 3 shall carry the following lights:

First. A bright white light in the fore part of the vessel as near the stem as practicable, so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 20 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light 10 points on each side of the vessel; namely from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on either side.

Second. A bright white light aft to show all around the horizon and higher than the white light forward.

Third. On the starboard side a green light so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 10 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the starboard side. On the port side a red light so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 10 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the port side. The said side lights shall be fitted with inboard screens of sufficient height so set as to prevent these lights from being seen across the bow.

SEC. 7. No such motorboat, while carrying passengers for hire, shall be operated or navigated except in charge of a person duly licensed for such service by a local board of inspectors. Whenever any person applies to be licensed as operator of any motorboat carrying passengers for hire, the inspectors shall make diligent inquiry as to his character, and shall carefully examine the applicant orally as well as the proofs which he presents in support of his claim, and if they are satisfied that his capacity, experience, habits of life, and character are such as to warrant the belief that he can safely be entrusted with the duties and responsibilities of the station for which he makes application, they shall grant him a license authorizing him to discharge such duties on any such motorboat carrying passengers for hire for the term of 5 years. Such license shall be subject to suspension or revocation on the same grounds and in the same manner and with like procedure as is provided in the case of suspension or revocation of licenses of officers under the provisions of section 4450 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. III, title 46, sec. 239): Provided, That motorboats shall not be required to carry licensed officers except as required in this act: And provided further, That licenses herein prescribed shall not be required of motorboats engaged in fishing contests previously arranged and announced.

Motorboats as defined in this act are hereby exempted from the provisions of Revised Statutes 4399, as amended (48 Stat. 125).

SEC. 19. This act shall take effect upon its approval as to all of the sections hereof except sections 6, 7, and 8, which sections shall take effect 1 year from the date of said approval, and for a period of 1 year from the date of approval of this act sections 5, 6, and 7 of the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910 (Public, No. 201, 61st Cong.; 36 Stat. 462), shall continue in full force and effect, except that from and after the date of the approval of this act the Secretary of Commerce shall have authority to remit or mitigate all fines or penalties heretofore or hereafter incurred or imposed under sections 5 and 6 of the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910. Except as hereinabove expressly provided, the Motorboat Act of June 9, 1910, above referred to, is repealed upon the approval of this act and as to sections 5, 6, and 7 of said act hereinabove continued the said sections are hereby repealed effective 1 year from the date of approval of this act. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, ch. 7A, secs. 178 and 179), the act of June 20, 1936 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 367), or repeal acts of Congress or treaties embodying or revising international rules for preventing collisions at sea.

SEC. 20. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

C., 1934 ed., Supp IV, title 46, sec. 288), requiring a certificate of award of a number to be kept at all times on board of the vessel to which the number has been awarded shall not apply to any vessel not exceeding 17 feet in length measured from end to end over the deck, excluding sheer, or to any vessel whose design of fittings are such that the carrying of the certificate of award of the number on such vessel would render such certificate imperfect, illegible, or would otherwise tend to destroy its usefulness as a means of ready identification.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 2259 will be indefinitely postponed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to old-age assistance was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

FEES FOR RECORDING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 1296) to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill was introduced in the Senate and reported on June 30 last year. It has been on the calendar for almost a year, and every time it has been reached there has been objection. On several occasions I myself objected.

I desire at this time to place in the RECORD, if I may, the reason for my objection. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, a copy of a letter sent me by the present recorder of deeds, Dr. William J. Thompkins, and I desire also to have printed in the RECORD, following the letter, the remarks of the Honorable C. JASPER BELL, of Missouri, in the House of Representatives, on March 27, 1939, in opposition to the bill. I ask that these documents be inserted in the RECORD as the basis for my objection to the consideration of this particular measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECORDER OF DEEDS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1940.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your careful attention is respectfully directed to S. 1296, now pending on the Senate Calendar, providing for the creation of a department of titles in the office of the director of traffic, for the purpose of recording all liens on automobiles. It would transfer to that newly created department all automobile liens which are now by law recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds. It is contended by the proponents of this bill that it will protect purchasers of second-hand automobiles, inasmuch as all purchasers of automobiles would be required to record all liens with this new department.

The District Code provides that such liens shall be registered with the recorder of deeds. The only new law that S. 1296 provides for is that the director of vehicles and traffic shall record these liens on the face of automobile titles. It is the contention of several citizens' associations, the Washington Bar Association, and the title men of Washington that this can be effected by requiring the recorder of deeds to certify to the director of traffic all liens on automobiles registered with the recorder.

Inasmuch as we have the clerks and the equipment necessary for the handling of this work, it would not be a wise expenditure of money to appropriate $15,000 asked by the director of traffic to equip and staff in his office a department that by law now exists in the office of the recorder of deeds.

A bill that will meet the suggestion of the director of traffic was introduced at the last session of Congress by Senator REYNOLDS—S. 1539—and should be substituted for S. 1296, now on the Senate Calendar, and, if desired, amended to provide that the recorder of deeds shall send to the director of traffic daily certified lists of all liens on automobiles recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds.

It is not necessary for me to point out the fact that the recording of liens is a civil and not a police function. You will also agree that much confusion and difficulty will be caused title men, abstractors, credit associations, and others making daily search of these records, since they would be obliged to go to two places to ascertain a complete record on a case. Enclosed you will find a speech of the Honorable C. JASPER BELL, Member of Congress, formerly a prominent jurist of the State of Missouri, in opposition to passage of a bill removing chattels from the office of the recorder of deeds.

We therefore respectfully urge your opposition to S. 1296 and your support of S. 1539, when it comes before you for consideration.

Respectfully yours,

WM. J. THOMPKINS.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention of Congress to the proposed shifting of present duties of the recorder of deeds office to other offices of the District of Columbia government, which, it is my contention, would result in increased administrative costs and decreased efficiency in the keeping of valuable records for residents of the District of Columbia.

I wish to quote an article that appeared in the Washington Afro-American, a weekly newspaper, on March 25, 1939, which article deplores the assault on this office. The article reads as follows:

"SEES NEW MOVE AS ASSAULT ON RECORD OFFICE—BILL INTRODUCED TO TRANSFER AUTO LIENS ELSEWHERE

"Thousands of Washington residents are automobile purchasers, and many of them have liens on their cars, yet few of them are giving much attention to the four proposed measures now pending before Congress designed to require registration of all liens in either the traffic bureau or the recorder of deeds office.

"On the other hand, the bills are causing grave concern among politicians, and new dealers have been warned that many votes will be lost among colored constituents if the wrong bill is enacted.

"Under the present District regulations, registration of auto liens is optional and under supervision of the recorder of deeds office, one of the few remaining positions given colored political leaders under the so-called spoils system.

"BILLS IN BOTH HOUSES

"Two of the bills—H. R. 3950 and S. 1296, the former by Congressman JENNINGS RANDOLPH and the latter by Senator WILLIAM J. KING—have been introduced in the House and Senate, respectively, proposing registration of all liens on autos at the traffic bureau. The Senate District Committee reported favorably on KING'S measure, but RANDOLPH'S bill has not come up for a hearing.

"Both measures reportedly have the backing of District government heads and Traffic Director Van Duzer.

"In view of the fact that District Commissioners have for years been trying unsuccessfully to gain control of the recorder of deeds office, this new move to relieve the office of one of its primary duties appears to be a change of tactics calculated to lower the importance of the bureau.

"OPPOSITION SEEN

"Opposition to the removal of registration from the recorder's office is certain to crop up when the bills come up for a hearing. First, because it would be an added expense to the government to remove the department.

"Under the measure proposed by Mr. KING, it will require an appropriation of approximately $15,000 to establish such a bureau at the traffic department, with additional funds to maintain an adequate staff.

"If the department is established at the recorder's office, the only requirements from an economic angle would amount to approximately $5,000. This would take care of additional personnel only, inasmuch as equipment and materials needed to carry on the business are already on hand and used daily with registration of the current liens on an optional basis."

In addition to this, I wish to call attention to the fact that in subsequent years it would be found to best advantage to have all records of property holdings and obligations in one office, because many times records must be made of both real and chattel properties, such as in the case of probate cases, civil court actions, and in making credit reports. The proposed changes would scatter those records, leaving only a part of the chattel property records in the office of the recorder of deeds, adding greatly to the confusion in checking by abstractors, attorneys, and the general public.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from Oklahoma, this bill has been on the calendar for a long time, and every time it has been reached it has gone over under objection. I wish to serve notice that at the first opportunity I shall move that the bill be considered. So far as I know and am informed, the only objection to the bill comes from the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia. The bill provides for a recording fee of only 50 cents for a chattel mortgage and no charge for a release. As I understand, the recorder of deeds is now receiving $1.50 for recording mortgages and $1.50 for recording releases. The enactment of this measure would save automobile owners thousands and thousands of dollars. It has been recommended by the Commissioners and by a great many organizations which are interested in the enactment of the legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do the fees collected go to the recorder or into the District treasury? Is the recorder paid a salary?

Mr. OVERTON. I regret that I cannot answer.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if I may answer, the recorder is on a regular salary. All his fees go into the General Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. OVERTON. There is an unnecessary tax on automobile owners.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wondered whether the recorder had a personal interest in retaining the fee provision.

Mr. OVERTON. In addition to what I have stated, when the Department of Vehicles and Traffic issued a certificate of title, under the proposed bill there would appear whatever liens and mortgages were against the automobile involved. As it stands now, one gets the certificate of title, and then has to go to the office of the recorder of deeds and examine the deed in order to find what liens may be against the automobile.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

GRATUITY EXPENDITURES FOR FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) defining and classifying gratuity expenditures allowable as offsets in favor of the United States and against the Five Civilized Nations or Tribes of Indians, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 18, after the word "purpose", to strike out "or" and to insert "of", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That wherever provision is made in any act of Congress, now or hereafter in force, for offsets in favor of the United States and against the Five Civilized Nations or Tribes, in suits or proceedings in the United States Court of Claims, of moneys expended gratuitously by the United States for the benefit of any such nations or tribes, whether for judgment against the United States or for report of findings of fact and conclusions to the Congress, there shall be included in such offsets only such moneys expended by the United States as may be shown by competent evidence to have been expended for the benefit of the entire nation or tribe, as distinguished from expenditures benefiting individuals, or only a part of the tribal membership: Provided, That where such expenditures have been made for the benefit of more than one Indian nation or tribe, no apportionment, for the purpose of offset, shall be made against any nation or tribe, unless and until it is shown by competent evidence what amount of moneys were expended for the benefit of the particular nation or tribe against whom the offset is claimed or asserted, and the purposes therefor.

Expenditures falling within the following classifications shall not be allowed as offsets where it is shown—

(1) That such moneys were expended by the United States in the discharge of its general or specific obligations, under any treaty or agreement with any Indian nation or tribe, or incidental to the performance of its said treaty or agreement obligations.

(2) That such moneys were expended for the benefit of individual persons who were not enrolled members of the nation or tribe against whose common properties such offsets are sought to be charged.

(3) That such moneys were expended for any Indian nation or tribe, or for the individual members thereof, under any law of the United States providing for relief or assistance passed subsequent to March 4, 1933.

(4) Any expenditures made pursuant to the act of Congress of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended, and the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1967).

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution had been reported to the Senate with amendments to the preamble so as to read:

Whereas section 2, title I, of the act of Congress approved August 12, 1935 (49 Stat. 596), declared that moneys expended gratuitously by the United States for the benefit of Indian tribes or bands shall be offset against any amount found to be due any such tribe or band without defining and classifying what expenditures are gratuities and allowable offsets under said act; and

Whereas there are now pending in the United States Court of Claims suits and proceedings on behalf of said Five Civilized Tribes or Nations and against the United States, under their various jurisdictional acts, in which offsets are, or will be, claimed as gratuities; and without a declaration of what the Congress intended in relation to gratuity offsets, the settlement of such claims have been delayed, and injustice may be done to said Indian nations or tribes as well as to the United States; and

Whereas it is the purpose of this resolution to define and classify gratuity offsets so that the settlement of such claims may be expedited and justice done in said suits and proceedings: Now, therefore, be it

The amendments to the preamble were agreed to.

HOSPITAL BENEFITS FOR RESERVE OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

The bill (S. 2575) to provide pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits for certain Reserve officers of the Army of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, only former Air Corps Reserve officers are involved in the bill, officers who were disabled while in active military service, who have been discharged, and are now receiving small compensation from the Veterans' Administration.

The existing law provides for the retirement of Reserve officers who may become disabled in line of duty in the future, and, in the opinion of the committee, provision for similar benefits should be enacted for those unfortunate officers disabled under the same circumstances who are covered by this bill. There are about 20 involved altogether.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would it cost?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About $30,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Thirty thousand dollars a year?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator to let it go over this time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO CIVIL WAR WIDOWS

The bill (H. R. 6901) granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the bill is for the relief of certain rather desperate cases of widows of veterans of the Civil War. In all the instances the widows are extremely aged and unable to take care of themselves. They are hovering at death's door. In fact, since the bill was reported to the calendar there have been 18 deaths among those whose names appear, I think, and the list will have to be revised. These are extremely meritorious cases.

Mr. BYRD. Can the Senator tell us what the cost would be?

Mr. BARKLEY. How many are involved?

Mr. MINTON. I think about 30.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are they now drawing pensions?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What amount do they now receive?

Mr. MINTON. The pensions vary, some drawing $30, some $40, some $50. The bill is designed to increase the various pensions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the bill cover widows who were married since the Civil War, or does the Senator know about that?

Mr. MINTON. Oh, yes; they are widows who married since 1905.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the estimated annual cost?

Mr. MINTON. I am sorry I cannot give the Senator the information, but it is not a large amount.

I think perhaps the bill should go over until I can revise the list by striking off the names of those who have died since the bill was reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CADETSHIPS IN THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The bill (S. 3035) authorizing certain appointments to the United States Military Academy to fill cadetships heretofore created was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation about the situation covered by this bill. Under the present act of Congress, as Senators know, there is authorization for the appointment of 40 cadets to the Military Academy "from among the sons of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States who were killed in action prior to July 1, 1921." By reason of the lapse of time since 1921 no sons of officers or enlisted men could be eligible in 1941, because they would be over the 22-year-age limitation for admission into the academy. Consequently, the authorization is about to lapse, is lapsing, and has been lapsing for the past 2 or 3 years. The bill provides that the places not filled shall be filled one-half from enlisted men in the Army and one-half from enlisted men in the National Guard who have served 1 year.

After I introduced the bill, and before it was acted upon by the committee, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], at the insistence of the American Legion, introduced a similar bill, with a different qualification for admission.

So we had my bill go over a time or two until the Senator from Georgia and I could confer about the matter, to see if we could agree on a bill which would be satisfactory to both of us.

In order to do that I suggest that a substitute be now taken up. I have adopted the language requested by the American Legion and which the Senator from Georgia desires, so that it would now read, instead of sons of officers and enlisted men who died prior to 1921, as follows:

And provided further, That cadet appointments to the United States Military Academy authorized in this act may be from among sons of officers and soldiers of the United States Army, including members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) employed in the active service by the War Department, who were killed in action or have died, or hereafter die, of wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted, or preexisting injury or disease aggravated, in line of duty during the World War, and such appointments from among sons of officers and from among sons of warrant officers and soldiers shall be as nearly equal in number as practicable; and any cadet appointments to the United States Military Academy authorized in this act not made as hereinbefore prescribed may be made, in number as nearly equal as practicable, from among enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard, respectively, between the ages of 19 and 22 years, who have served as enlisted men not less than 1 year, under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

The substitute amendment follows the language of the original bill, which provides that when the 40 cadets are not found available from the particular class of sons, the vacancies shall be filled, one-half from enlisted men in the Army and one-half from enlisted men in the National Guard.

I offer the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the same problem as that outlined by the Senator from Wyoming has been before the Committee on Naval Affairs. As the Senator has pointed out, the present law permitted the appointment under certain conditions of a certain number of sons of Army officers who were killed or died as the result of injuries in the war. This law has become inoperative, because more than 20 years has expired since the death of veterans whose sons were eligible. I think the Committee on Military Affairs has handled this problem in a very satisfactory manner, and I see no reason why this bill should not be approved. The same problem is before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and we expect to give the subject attention later and report a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3035) authorizing certain appointments to the United States Military Academy to fill cadetships heretofore created, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 8, 1926, entitled "An act to establish a department of economics, government, and history at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., and to amend chapter 174 of the act of Congress of April 19, 1910, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes'" (44 Stat. 704), be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following proviso: "And provided further, That any vacancies at the United States Military Academy in the cadetships established by this act not filled as a result of any annual examination of candidates selected as herein prescribed may be filled by additional appointments, in number as nearly equal as practicable, from among enlisted men of the Regular Army and of the National Guard, respectively, between the ages of 19 and 22 years, who have served as enlisted men not less than 1 year, to be selected under such regulations as the President may prescribe."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, in line 1, after the word "proviso", it is proposed to strike out down to and including the period in line 10, and to insert the following:

And provided further, That cadet appointments to the United States Military Academy authorized in this act may be from among sons of officers and soldiers of the United States Army, including members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) employed in the active service by the War Department, who were killed in action or have died, or hereafter die, of wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted, or pre-existing injury or disease aggravated, in line of duty during the World War, and such appointments from among sons of officers and from among sons of warrant officers and soldiers shall be as nearly equal in number as practicable; and any cadet appointments to the United States Military Academy authorized in this act not made as hereinbefore prescribed may be made, in number as nearly equal as practicable, from among enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard, respectively, between the ages of 19 and 22 years, who have served as enlisted men not less than 1 year, under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, under what condition could this proposed law become effective? Would it be under the condition that there was a vacancy in the cadet corps by reason of the fact that some Congressman or Senator had not filled an appointment?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; there are vacancies now filled by the President and the War Department, and they are not of the type of vacancies that Senators and Representatives may fill.

Mr. WALSH. I may say that whenever a vacancy by graduation occurs an appointment must be made from this group limited by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) amending Public Resolution No. 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and Public Resolution No. 48 of the Seventy-sixth Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3130) relating to the citizenship and compensation of certain employees on military construction work in the Panama Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the problems involved in this bill are now under consideration by the Military and Naval Affairs Committees in connection with appropriation bills. For this reason I ask that the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

COMPUTATION OF ACTIVE SERVICE IN NAVAL PROMOTIONS

The bill (S. 3016) to amend the act approved February 15, 1929, entitled "An act to permit certain warrant officers to count all active service rendered under temporary appointments as warrant or commissioned officers in the Regular Navy, or as warrant or commissioned officers in the United States Naval Reserve Force, for purpose of promotion to chief warrant rank," so as to permit service in the National Naval Volunteers to be counted for purposes of promotion, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of February 15, 1929 (45 Stat. 1180; 34 U. S. C. 331a), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That for the purpose of computing the 6 years' service required for promotion from warrant to chief warrant rank, all active service, for purposes other than training heretofore rendered during the period from April 6, 1917, to December 31, 1921, under a temporary appointment as a warrant or commissioned officer in the United States Navy, or as a warrant or commissioned officer in the United States Naval Reserve Force, or as a warrant or commissioned officer of the National Naval Volunteers shall be counted: Provided, That officers who have heretofore been commissioned chief warrant officers shall for all purposes be regarded as having been so commissioned from the date of completion of such 6 years' service including the service authorized to be counted by this act: Provided further, That no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

WARRANT AND COMMISSIONED WARRANT OFFICERS IN THE MARINE CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6044) to regulate the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers in the Marine Corps, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "necessary", to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the total number of such warrant officers and commissioned warrant officers shall not exceed 218.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the number of warrant officers authorized in the Marine Corps by present law is 146. This law was passed during the World War, and there has been no change in the number of warrant officers authorized since that time. The progress made in aviation, aircraft defenses, radio communication, and tank and motor transport has necessitated a larger number of warrant officers.

The bill which passed the House and was approved by the Navy Department—in fact it was introduced at the request of the Navy Department—fixed no limit to the number of warrant officers that could be named for service in the Marine Corps of the Navy.

The Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate provided a limitation of 218, and there is a pending amendment to the bill providing such limitation.

This bill is merely an authorization, and, as a matter of fact, no increase in warrant officers whatever can be made unless the Appropriations Committee increases the amount already provided. This bill permits the relationship in the number of warrant officers in the Marine Corps to be somewhat in accord with the number of warrant officers in the Regular Navy. The bill is only an authorization, I repeat, and the number will be increased insofar as a case can be made out before the Appropriations Committee for the need of additional warrant officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JERSEY CENTRAL POWER & LIGHT CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2552) for the relief of the Jersey Central Power & Light Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase from the Jersey Central Power & Light Co., of New Jersey, the transmission line, substation, and other equipment now located on property of the United States Naval Air Station at Lakehurst, N. J., at a cost not to exceed $33,204.11, and said sum is hereby authorized to be appropriated: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New Jersey if that is the same measure which was under consideration some time ago, and to which objection was made?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, Mr. President. The Senator from Utah made objection at the time the bill was reached on a former call of the calendar. I think the objection was made under a misapprehension. It was originally objected to by the Navy Department when it was presented in the form of a claim against the Navy Department. But, as shown by the letter now in the record from the Secretary of the Navy, it will be noted that the Secretary of the Navy specifically desires that this authorization be made to purchase at a price which he approves this particular special machinery, which was originally installed in the naval station at Lakehurst, N. J., at the Navy's request to meet its needs and requirements at that time. In other words, as amended, the bill now has the approval of the Navy Department, as well as the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase certain privately owned property located at the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7941) relating to the citizenship and compensation of certain employees on military construction work in the Panama Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill now reached on the calendar is identical with Calendar No. 1206, Senate bill 3130. One is a House bill and one is a Senate bill. The text of the House bill is similar to that of Senate bill 3130, to which objection was just made, or request made that the bill be passed over. The same reason should be urged against this bill, which likewise should go over. Perhaps the RECORD should contain a word of explanation of the matter. The two bills propose to give decided preference to American citizens with regard to certain classes of work in the Canal Zone. Three subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee have this matter under consideration now—the subcommittee on the civil functions of the War Department, the Navy subcommittee, and the regular War Department subcommittee—and in the end, either here or in conference, a section will be worked out giving American citizens the maximum protection and preferment that can be given under a treaty now in existence between the United States and the Panamanian Republic.

So I suggest that this bill also go over, and later, when we get together on a section, that section will be placed in these two bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the necessity for this bill would be obviated entirely if the proposed amendment should be adopted by the Appropriations Committee and become the law.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. If a section can be agreed upon in conference, it will be carried in the three bills simultaneously, and will then take the place of the pending proposed legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONTROL OF SOIL EROSION AND FLOOD DAMAGE—CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 169) to facilitate the control of soil erosion and/or flood damage originating upon lands within the exterior boundaries of the Cleveland National Forest in San Diego County, Calif., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] a question in regard to this bill. It seems to give unlimited authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase land, with no limitation as to cost or acreage.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstands. There were included within the national forest certain privately owned lands which had been homesteaded before the entire area—with the exception of certain small tracts—was purchased. These tracts have been neglected; and floods and erosion have so damaged the forest area that the Departments are asking that a certain percentage of the proceeds from the sale of timber be allocated to pay for the privately owned lands within the area of the forest. The bill is recommended by the Departments, and by the counties adjacent to the forest land in California. The report is very complete. I think that is sufficient. The bill not only provides for protection of the Government's property, but for control of the land within the forest limits.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me see if I understand the situation. Is it proposed to permit the money to be paid for the lands without the necessity of an appropriation by the Congress?

Mr. SMITH. Twenty-five percent of the receipts from timber sales is reserved for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is to be done with the other 75 percent?

Mr. SMITH. Under the law, it is allocated to the counties and to the Federal Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. With respect to that part which goes to the Federal Government, does it go into the Treasury? Is it covered into the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the 25 percent come from the counties' portion, or from the Government's portion?

Mr. SMITH. As I understand the plan, a certain amount is allocated for the purpose of providing caretakers for the national forest.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that this is very dangerous legislation?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this discussion ought to be directed to all the Members of the Senate. I have some knowledge of the subject, and I should like to hear the questions and answers.

Mr. SMITH. The question propounded——

Mr. McNARY. I heard the question, but I did not hear what the Senator from Tennessee was saying.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am asking if it is not very dangerous legislation to turn over the income coming from these sources to pay such employees as the departments think are necessary to administer the national forest. I think the only proper way to manage these transactions is to have the income go into the Treasury and then have the money appropriated for the purchase of lands.

Mr. SMITH. I am not familiar with the details of the administration of our national forests; but we have them, and we are told that damage is accruing by reason of lack of ownership of certain privately owned lands within the forest area.

Mr. McKELLAR. We frequently have requests to buy lands; and I think the Congress very frequently gives such authority. However, it should be done only after a report is made by the proper authority to the Committee on Appropriations, so that the Committee on Appropriations may recommend or reject the proposal and the Congress may pass on it. I hope the Senator will let the bill go over for the present. Later I may not object to it.

Mr. SMITH. Let me make an explanation. We have laws as to the distribution and use of forest receipts. We are told that floods and erosion are not only damaging the forest land but are destroying or seriously affecting the range lands. All that is asked is that a certain amount of the receipts—25 percent, as specified—be used for this purpose. Of course, a report must be made to the Government as to the use of the 25 percent. The bill has passed the House. It is a House measure. So far as I am concerned, I have no interest in it, except from the standpoint of preservation of the public lands.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not like to legislate funds into the hands of an administrator to spend as he sees fit, without the regulating hand of the Appropriations Committee. Others must come before the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses to obtain money for purposes connected with the forests. We try to be liberal with them.

We all want to build up the forests, of course. We are very anxious to protect and defend them. However, I think it is very poor legislation to give an administrator of forest lands the right to spend moneys without having any check on him. Therefore I should like to have the bill go over today. In the meantime I shall go into the matter carefully.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, three other bills of practically the same nature are on the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator point them out and let them go over for today?

Mr. SMITH. They have been going over ever since Congress convened, Mr. President. I do not suppose it would add to or subtract from their chance of passage to have them go over again; but I believe that anyone who will read the reports——

Mr. McKELLAR. The bills were reported in February.

Mr. SMITH. I believe that anyone who will read the reports from the Agricultural Department and the Interior Department will be convinced that under the present law this is the only method by which the forests can be benefited.

Let me say in conclusion that the report indicates that the counties contiguous to the forest areas of the Government have passed resolutions endorsing the bills, knowing that they will be of great benefit in controlling floods and erosion.

I have done all I can do to facilitate the passage of these bills. I think there is no doubt that those who have charge of the forests are amenable to the Government, and must make a report of how much has been collected and how the money is expended. I do not see any objection to authorizing the expenditure of not to exceed 25 percent of the receipts for the benefit of the community. However, if it is the desire of those who object to have the bills go over, I will say that the bills which were reported from my committee are all of practically the same nature. I ask the Senator from Tennessee whether or not he really means to look into the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to look into the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2009) to facilitate the control of soil erosion and flood damage originating upon lands within the exterior boundaries of the Angeles National Forest was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONTROL OF EROSION AND FLOODS WITHIN SEQUOIA NATIONAL FOREST

The bill (H. R. 2417) to facilitate the control of soil erosion and/or flood damage originating upon lands within the exterior boundaries of the Sequoia National Forest, Calif., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I could not hear the discussion which just occurred. I wish to say a word or two in behalf of calendar No. 1242, House bill 2417. The bill has passed the House. It has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Secretary of Agriculture. Representative SHEPPARD, of California, is the author of the bill, and he has thus far presented it. Last year it passed the House without substantial objection. It conforms to the requirements prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, and meets with their approval.

The Sequoia National Forest is situated in three counties of California. The boards of supervisors of those three counties have all united unanimously in requesting the passage of this bill. It will not cost the United States Government a dollar, because the cost will be paid out of the slender receipts which come from the park.

I think something was said as to watch being kept upon those who deal with these receipts. That is quite proper. Of course, there ought to be some method of accounting. But if any Member of this body labors under the delusion that Secretary Wallace and Secretary Ickes are not endeavoring to accomplish, or are not accomplishing an absolute account of every dollar contributed by the Federal Government or by the State of California, he is laboring under a delusion. Everyone in interest who knows the situation favors this proposed legislation. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, as well as the appropriate officials of the park, and those who are most interested in it in the three counties of the State of California, are all in favor of the bill. Personally I know nothing about it. However, I think that upon the showing they make they are entitled to have the bill passed.

Mr. President, is objection still made to the consideration of House bill 2417?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. By the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]?

Mr. McKELLAR. I objected.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Why? I ask solely for information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will tell the Senator why. The bill provides that the income from the Sequoia National Forest shall be spent by the local representatives out there for the purchase of land. We do not know whether they will purchase it at a high price or low price. There is no estimate made regarding it. We do not know how the money will be expended. It is entirely contrary to the usual course in such cases. Usually those interested come before the Appropriations Committee and tell us that they have so much land they can buy for such and such a price; that it has been appraised, that they want the money, and that it is recommended by the Department. Then the committee recommends an appropriation of the money in all proper cases. I am sure the committee would do so in this case on proper representations, but the Senator can see that merely to take an income, say, of $6,000 a year, and turn it over, under the wording of the bill, to the local managers to buy such lands as they see fit in and around the park, without requiring them to make any accounting, is not a proper way to legislate. That is my objection to it; I want to look into it, and I ask that the bill go over for another week.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Meantime the Senator will look into it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to do so by the time the bill comes up again.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I hope the Senator will do that.

Let me suggest that he keep in mind the men who are controlling the destinies of our parks, and imagine to himself any individual in a subordinate position getting away with any money of the Government from the officials who are in control.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief observation. Under the organic act establishing the national forests 25 percent of the receipts are paid into the county treasury wherein the forests are situated, 10 percent allocated for roads, and the remainder covered into the Treasury of the United States. According to this particular bill, it seems that there is a large area of land privately owned within the interior boundaries of the Sequoia National Forest. It is desired to acquire those timberlands, and, instead of the bill providing that the receipts from the sale of timber on the national forests shall go as provided by law, I observe it provides that lands shall be purchased by the Forest Service, under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the money, instead of going to the Treasury, shall go directly to private owners through the medium of the Secretary of Agriculture. There is nothing subterranean or unusual about it. It is only for the purpose of protecting the soil from erosion and supplying sufficient water for irrigation on privately owned lands.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a further observation. I have been disturbed by the provision as to the source of the money, as the Senator from Oregon has, because this bill proposes to devote to this very proper purpose the entire receipts "from the occupancy of public land or the sale of natural resources" within the park. Certain receipts of this kind are used for the purpose of protecting and developing the grazing areas. This bill reaches out and takes the entire receipts. It seems to me it goes beyond what is necessary, and I think the bill could well be given some further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3226) to facilitate and simplify national forest administration was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL RESERVOIRS UNDER RECLAMATION LAWS

The bill (S. 3136) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under Federal reclamation laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator will withhold his objection?

Mr. DANAHER. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is rather an important authorization, and I think possibly an explanation would remove the objection of the Senator from Connecticut. It should be understood that the reservoirs which are contemplated would be paid for under the Reclamation Act by the owners of the lands benefited, so that the appropriations authorized would not constitute a drain upon the Treasury. It is an authorization which would enable a number of Western States, which are generally known as public-land States, to obtain a broader benefit from the reclamation law, which requires constant contribution to the reclamation fund by the projects which are developed.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. I am certain that there must be an inadvertent inaccuracy in the Senator's statement when he intimates to the Senate that this sum of money is to be paid from the reclamation fund. I notice that the Bureau of the Budget recommended that the bill be amended to make that necessary, but the bill as now drawn provides that the money shall come either from the reclamation fund or from the United States Treasury. That alternative "or" makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator misunderstands. I was not alluding to the source of the fund which will be used; I was alluding to the provisions in the bill for repayment. I want to point out to the Senator that there is a great difference between the authorization of an appropriation which will never come back to the Treasury, and an authorization which carries provision for the repayment of the sum to the Treasury. That is the provision of the bill to which I was referring because——

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me first finish the sentence.

Mr. DANAHER. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Because it is provided in lines 6, 7, 8, and 9:

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000,000 for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior under the Federal reclamation laws.

Those laws require repayment.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that, while he has made reference to lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, lines 3 and 4 are the ones which contain the authorization as to the source of the fund.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite right about that.

Mr. DANAHER. I read, beginning in line 3:

That from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated or from the special fund in the Treasury.

That is the source and cause of my objection. When you read the committee's report, Mr. President, you find that the Bureau of the Budget advised the committee that if the bill were amended so as to require that the source of the fund shall be solely in the reclamation fund, then there would be no objection, but if the bill contained the provision that the source of the fund shall be the Treasury of the United States, then it was subject to objection.

That is the whole cause of my objection. If the Senator from Wyoming wishes to amend by striking out from lines 3 and 4 the words commencing "any funds" and ending with the words "appropriated for", in line 4, I shall withdraw my objection; otherwise I will let the objection stand.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, is quite right in his interpretation of the portion of the bill to which he alludes. There is no possible way for me to explain that away, because it is a fact. The amendment to which he objects was inserted by the committee, and, of course, I have no authority to reverse the action of the committee; so the Senator's objection must stand. I was hoping that an explanation of the fact that the appropriation, from whatever source it comes, shall be repaid into the Treasury, would be sufficient to overcome the Senator's objection.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Is not the bill in its present form susceptible to amendment on my motion to strike the words to which I have referred from the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question would come upon agreeing to the committee amendment and a "nay" vote would defeat the amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, there is no question about that. Will not the Senator allow that amendment to be submitted to a vote of the Senate? It could be disposed of very quickly. Whatever the Senator desires in that respect is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. DANAHER. I am perfectly willing to move, and do move, an amendment, then, to strike from lines 3 and 4 the words "from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated or from."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I inquire if the bill is subject to amendment in its present stage after objection has been raised to its consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate must first take up the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I object to taking the bill up.

Mr. DANAHER. I withheld my objection for the specific purpose of having the words referred to stricken out.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall make objection, because I am opposed to the Senator's amendment to strike out the words to which he has referred in the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS

The bill (S. 3195) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the following disbursing officers of the Army of the United States the amounts set opposite their names: Major Lester L. Boggs, Finance Department, $148.38; Maj. George W. Brent, Coast Artillery Corps, $78.50; Lt. Col. Edward T. Comegys, Finance Department, $6.08; Maj. Ray B. Conner, Finance Department, $162.10; Maj. George W. Cooke, Finance Department, $29.90; Lt. Col. Horatio G. Coykendall, Finance Department, $5.50; Maj. Frederick E. Coyne, Jr., Finance Department, $59; Lt. Col. Walter D. Dabney, Finance Department, $17.86; Maj. Oliver W. DeGruchy, Finance Department, $18.57; Capt. James H. Dickie, Finance Department, $53.74; Capt. Lemuel E. Edwards, Finance Department, $50; Lt. Col. Horace G. Foster, Finance Department, $358.75; Lt. Col. Frank M. Holmes, Finance Department, $230.75; Capt. John S. Knudsen, Finance Department, $29.39; Capt. Ray H. Larkins, Finance Department, $6; Maj. Charles Lewis, Finance Department, $79.27; Lt. Col. James MacKay, Finance Department, $203.32; Capt. Charles K. McAlister, Finance Department, $30; Maj. Edmund W. McLarren, Finance Department, $104.27; Lt. Col. Dana W. Morey, Finance Department, $208.34; Capt. David H. Passell, Finance Reserve, $19.96; Maj. Arthur O. Walsh, Finance Department, $158.32; Maj. Hugh Whitt, Finance Department, $6; said amounts being public funds for which they are accountable and

CLAIM OF ZOOK PALM NURSERIES, INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 808) to confer jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Zook Palm Nurseries, Inc., a Florida corporation, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill. Some complaints have come to me in regard to the validity of the claim.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I think the Senator objected to the bill on a previous call of the calendar.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. And we had some discussion, and I attempted to explain it to the Senator at that time.

It appears that in the construction of the Intercoastal Waterway along the east coast of Florida, the Government damaged the claimant corporation in this manner: A dike had been constructed by the claimant, a large nursery operator growing royal palm trees which are very valuable, to protect them from salt water coming onto the property. When the Government constructed the Intercoastal Waterway it destroyed that dike. There were extensive negotiations, from which it appears to me that there is basis for the claim that the Governmnt agreed to reconstruct the dike so that the salt water would not come in. The Government did not reconstruct it, and it admits that the claimant suffered damages to the amount of $87,000. A larger amount was claimed. I felt that there was a serious legal question involved; that is, as to whether or not the Government had obtained a complete release of damages from this nursery company. So I provided in the bill which confers jurisdiction on the Federal district court in Florida to determine the claim, that the judge should first find whether or not that release was a complete release and whether or not the Government had agreed to rebuild a dike.

If he so found, there would be no further proceedings; but if he found that it was not a complete release, and that the Government had agreed to build the dike, then the claim should go before the district court, with a jury.

I do not know of any fairer way in which I could arrange the matter. I think there may be sound ground for a claim against the Government, but I thought possibly the Government had a good legal defense; so I provided for it in that way. I assure the Senator that we have been careful in the amendments which the committee put on the measure. I think it is a bill which should pass.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the explanation of the Senator from Michigan, in whom we have such profound confidence, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, after the words "out of", to insert "alleged"; and on page 2, line 5, after the word "War", to strike out "Department. Suit" and insert: "Department: Provided, That the district judge shall, at a separate hearing, first determine whether or not any release signed by claimant, Zook Palm Nurseries, Inc., and particularly a release dated May 3, 1935, is a complete release of the claim against the Government which the claimant alleges; and whether or not the release agreement contemplated the construction of a dike by the United States Government. Should the judge find that the release was a full and complete one as to the claims herein alleged, or if the judge finds that the release agreement did not contemplate the construction of a dike by the Federal Government, no further proceedings shall be had: Provided further, That suit", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Zook Palm Nurseries, Inc., a Florida corporation, said claim arising out of alleged damages done to its nursery gardens and property located along the east bank of the Intracoastal Waterway immediately south of Atlantic Avenue, Delray Beach, Palm Beach County, Fla., from October 2, 1933, to the date of the passage of this act, by their overflow with salt water from the Intracoastal Waterway, allegedly due to the widening and deepening of the waterway adjacent to and in the vicinity of said nursery gardens and property, and the removal of the dike along the said waterway by the War Department: Provided, That the district judge shall, at a separate hearing, first determine whether or not any release signed by claimant, Zook Palm Nurseries, Inc., and particularly a release dated May 3, 1935, is a complete release of the claim against the Government which the claimant alleges; and whether or not the release agreement contemplated the construction of a dike by the United States Government. Should the judge find that the release was a full and complete one as to the claims herein alleged, or if the judge finds that the release agreement did not contemplate the construction of a dike by the Federal Government, no further proceedings shall be had: Provided further, That suit hereunder may be instituted at any time within one year from the date of the enactment of this act and proceedings therein, appeals therefrom, and payment of judgment thereon, if any, shall be had in the same manner as in the case of claims over which said court has jurisdiction under the provisions of the Judicial Code.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MRS. J. W. MARKS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims or the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Mrs. J. W. Marks, of Stephens County, Ga., which was read, as follows:

Whereas Mrs. J. W. Marks claims that by deed dated 24th day of June 1925 she purchased a certain tract of land from one Melzinia Scott and had her deed recorded June 24, 1925, in book No. 16, page 28; and

Whereas she and her predecessors in title had been in possession of this land for 20 years, and that thereafter, sometime in the spring of 1938, the United States Government entered upon said property, basing its title and claim of right thereto upon a deed made by the said Scott made subsequent to the time he had deeded said land to the said Mrs. J. W. Marks: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims or the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Mrs. J. W. Marks to the property referred to and described in a deed by Melzinia Scott to Mrs. J. W. Marks dated June 24, 1925, and recorded in office of clerk, Superior Court of Stephens County, Ga., June 24, 1925, in deed book No. 16, page 28, and to hear, determine, and render judgment on any claim for damages that she may have arising by virtue of the Government of the United States or any of its agents entering upon said property, taking possession thereof, or in any way trespassing thereon, and award sufficient relief in the premises as under law and evidence may be shown. Such claim may be instituted at any time within 2 years after the passage of this joint resolution, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations.

SEC. 2. Proceeding in any suit before the Court of Claims or in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia under this joint resolution and appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon, shall be had as in any other case of which the Court of Claims or the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia might have jurisdiction.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this bill involves title to only 4 acres of land. The Government purchased this tract of land; and included within the Government's purchase was 4 acres of land claimed by Mrs. Marks, who is authorized by the joint resolution to bring the suit.

The Department of Agriculture, in possession of the land, has recommended the passage of the bill. The value of the land is very small.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

J. D. WARLICK

The bill (H. R. 3784) for the relief of the estate of J. D. Warlick was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEAUFORT LIBRARY, BEAUFORT, S. C.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3325) to provide for the transfer of the duplicates of certain books in the Library of Congress to the Beaufort Library of Beaufort, S. C., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to replace the books taken in 1862 by the order of an officer of the United States from the library of the Beaufort Library Society of Beaufort, S. C., which books were subsequently destroyed by a fire in the Smithsonian Institution where they had been stored for safekeeping pending the termination of the War between the States, the Librarian of the Library of Congress is authorized and directed to transfer to the Beaufort Library of Beaufort, S. C., books of the same value as those which were so taken and destroyed. The books transferred under the provisions of this act shall be from duplicates owned by the Library of Congress and shall not exceed in value, in the aggregate, the value of the books so taken and destroyed, such values to be fixed by the Librarian of the Library of Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, beginning with the word "librarian", it is proposed to strike out through line 7, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Beaufort Library, of Beaufort, S. C., the sum of $10,000, to be used for the purchase of books for such library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

AUTHORIZATION FOR ACCEPTANCE OF MEDALS, ORDERS, AND DECORATIONS

The bill (S. 3150) to authorize certain officers of the Army of the United States to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a similar House bill is now before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. It is the usual bill authorizing officials of the Army and the Navy and of the Government to accept decorations from foreign governments. The similar bill being now before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be acted upon by the Senate at this time. It is House bill 8077.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 8077; and, without objection, it will be substituted for the Senate bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8077) to authorize certain officers of the Army of the United States to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee one or two questions with reference to this bill. It is, of course, in the usual form, as the Senator says, and authorizes some 60 or 70 officers to receive decorations which have been held in the State Department. A similar bill was passed last July. I ask the Senator whether this list of 60 or 70 officers comprises officers who have been awarded decorations by foreign nations between last July and the present time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my understanding.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the Senator also state whether the bill comprises all the decorations which have been awarded since last July and are held by the State Department, or is this a select list of officers?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I cannot answer that question definitely. It is my understanding that the bill includes them all, because the Department sends them up as they accumulate.

Mr. GILLETTE. And it is the opinion of the Senator that this bill includes all; it is not a picked list of officers?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my opinion; yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3150 will be indefinitely postponed.

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. F. Cooley, administrator of the estate of Charles F. Cooley, Jr., the sum of $496.15, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages to an automobile owned by and used on official business by Charles F. Holt, of Fort Snelling, Minn., the sum of $96 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for a refund of the sum which he paid from his personal funds for two tarpaulins for use on Army trucks, such tarpaulins having been purchased by him as quartermaster officer at Fort Snelling, Minn., and payment therefor having been disallowed by the General Accounting Office: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. JOSEPH SOULEK—RECOMMITTAL

The bill (S. 2994) for the relief of Joseph Soulek was announced as next in order.

RELIEF OF OFFICERS OF RUSSIAN RAILWAY SERVICE CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 456) for the relief of the officers of the Russian Railway Service Corps organized by the War Department under authority of the President of the United States for service during the war with Germany, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the officers appointed by the President, and who served honorably during the war with Germany on and after April 6, 1917, in the Russian Railway Service Corps organized by the War Department under authority of the President of the United States, shall be deemed to have the same legal status as if they had received a full and honorable discharge as emergency officers of the United States Army in the World War: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, similar bills have been before the Senate several times in the past. They have always been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. The bill will give to officers who were accepted into the military service, and enlisted in what they thought was the regular way, and served in the Russian railway detail, all the rights and privileges of emergency officers of the United States.

Back in 1917 General Pershing asked for a number of officers to aid with railway matters in France, and a division was set up. Later a request came for officers to serve in Russia. In the service in France the officers were regularly enlisted. The men left the Army in the regular way. The few men who were sent into Russia have never been given the status of emergency officers and allowed the same rights and privileges that other emergency officers of the Army have.

The number of these officers is not very great; and while the War Department stands, as it has always stood, against granting these privileges, primarily because when the officers went into this special service they were given special consideration. That special consideration did not amount to very much to the majority of them. The men were given the grades of second lieutenant and of first lieutenant.

The Military Affairs Committee has held hearings during several years on this bill and similar previous bills. The committee believes that the bill is one of ordinary justice. The men who went into the railway service and served in France have all been properly taken care of. The few men who came from the northwestern part of the United States and served in Russia have been discriminated against.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says these men never have been recognized by the Army. As a matter of fact, they never enlisted in the military service, did they? That is the reason why they have not been recognized.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is a question in dispute. There are some factors——

Mr. CONNALLY. How could it be a question in dispute? The War Department records will show whether or not they were in the military service. Is it not true that this was not a military corps at all, but that it was an engineering corps which was organized, and that they were civilians?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. But taken into the Army of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. If they were taken into the Army they were no longer civilians.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They wore the uniform of the Army of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. A uniform does not make a soldier, and shoulder straps do not make a soldier.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They were held to responsibility. That which the Senator says applies, of course, to those officers who were sent to France.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator another question, and then I will be through. It is provided that "no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act." What benefits will the proposed act give them?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It will give them all the benefits which have been allowed to emergency officers of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. They will draw compensation if they are disabled?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They may.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not see any special advantage it will confer on them except that.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It has some social aspects.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, I withdraw any objection I might have had. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad the Senator withdraws the objection. These men served the United States, and served it faithfully; they wore the uniform of the United States, and though invited into meetings of officers of the United States Army still were not considered officers of the Army. It seems that does make a difference.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5397) for the relief of Richard L. Calder, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3298 will be indefinitely postponed.

M. Swinney, resulting from injuries received by him on May 23, 1938, from the explosion of several dynamite caps in his welding and blacksmith shop,

Swinney, of Poplarville, Miss., the sum of $2,719, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of injuries to the said J. M. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the bill. The Assistant Administrator of W. P. A. recommends that the bill be not passed.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, if there ever was a case of a citizen being entitled to compensation at the hands of his Government, this is the case. The facts were developed in hearings before the Committee on Claims, which reported the bill favorably. They cut the amount down to $2,700. The claimant lost his arm. He has a wife and two children, and is a blacksmith, so the accident incapacitated him from following his vocation in life. An investigation shows that the accident was due to the negligence of the W. P. A. officials whom he was trying to accommodate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I know nothing about the facts. We have no opportunity to investigate these cases on the floor of the Senate. I find that Mr. Corrington Gill, Assistant Administrator of the Work Projects Administration, whom we all know to be a merciful and humane man, recommends adversely. I was basing my objection on the statement made by Mr. Gill.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] made the report from the Committee on Claims on the bill. After the case was gone into Mr. Gill did recommend against the allowance, but additional evidence was produced before the committee, the evidence of leading citizens of my home town. I may say in passing that Mr. Swinney is one of the outstanding citizens of my town, a poor man, a blacksmith, but beloved by everyone. According to every idea of fair play and righteous dealing between the Government and a citizen injured as a result of the negligence of officers of the Government and officials of the W. P. A., Mr. Swinney is entitled to at least the small compensation allowed. I hope the Senator will let the bill pass.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senate may take such course as it sees fit to take. I merely call attention to the fact that the man responsible for the expenditures, and under whom this claimant was working, I suppose—at least he was under that agency—recommends against the bill. I have no objection to the Senate proceeding to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the RECORD show, as the basis of the comments I have made, the statement made by the Assistant Administrator of the W. P. A. After examining into the facts he stated:

In view of the foregoing, the Administration is constrained to recommend against the enactment of the proposed legislation. In consequence of the adverse recommendation, it is deemed unnecessary to comment upon the proposal to continue monthly payments, after claimant's death, to his widow during her lifetime.

ESTATE OF ROBERT LEE WRIGHT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2204) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims or any district court of the United States to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment on the claim of the legal representative of the estate of Robert Lee Wright, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the name "America" and the comma, to strike out "or any district court of the United States"; on page 2, line 13, after "No.", to strike out "248–A" and to insert "A 248"; in line 16, after the name "United States", to strike out "in the event of the election for the purposes of this act of said court by said administratrix or legal successor"; in line 19, after the word "No.", to strike out "248–A" and to insert "A 248", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States of America, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment under the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., ch. 423, p. 851), as amended July 1, 1918, or any other enabling statute of the United States, on the claim of Willie Crockett Wright, as administratrix of the estate of Robert Lee Wright, deceased, or his successor, as the legal representative of the estate of said decedent, for the infringement of Letters Patent Nos. 1,374,703 and 1,374,707, granted to the said decedent on the 12th day of April 1921, by the unlicensed use of or the manufacture by or for the United States of certain ordnance projectiles and fuzes covered by said letters patent within a lawful period from the 12th day of April 1921, the said date of grant of said patents by the United States Patent Office, and preceding and following the 23d day of August 1921, the date of filing of a suit No. A 248 brought by said decedent in the United States Court of Claims under said patents; and further conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to revive, nunc pro tunc, hear, examine, and render judgment in said suit No. A 248 on the cause of infringement as a cause of action, and to grant such further relief as to the court may seem just, proper, and equitable in the premises, without regard to any election of cause of action made by the claimant in said suit or prejudice against the claimant of any previous judgment of said court rendered in said suit on contract as an elected cause of action.

SEC. 2. That from any decision in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act an appeal may be taken by either party as is provided by law in other cases.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this bill would give to the Court of Claims the right to determine a claim of the estate of Robert Lee Wright to certain patents which were filed with the War Department. In the report of the committee, on page 4, it is stated:

In August 1917, and between February and June of 1918 claimant filed eight applications for patents on his inventions in the United States Patent Office. The Government removed these patent applications to the War Department and retained them there without his consent and thus prevented him, under the act of October 6, 1917, from obtaining letters patent on his inventions until after the war. After the war claimant's husband obtained letters patent on all except two of the above applications, and on additional applications filed in 1918 and 1919, embodying modifications of his original inventions.

There is considerable evidence in the record indicating the Government may have used devices subsequently patented by claimant's husband, for which use he may be entitled to compensation under the act of October 6, 1917.

The purpose of the bill is to enable the Court of Claims to determine what injury was done to the deceased claimant's estate, if any, by the refusal of the War Department to permit the claim to be made under the act of October 6, 1917.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no knowledge of the facts, but I find that the Secretary of War states that, in the opinion of the War Department, the action of the Court of Claims in dismissing the petition should be considered final, and he therefore recommends that favorable consideration not be accorded the bill, and the Attorney General, Hon. Frank Murphy, stated:

It thus appears that the claim on contract has been heretofore adjudicated on the merits, and that the petitioner's waiver of the cause of action on account of alleged infringement was made deliberately and with full knowledge of its effect. No reason is discernible why, after the claimant has had his day in court, he should be permitted to secure a recpening of the case.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I am unable to recommend favorable consideration of the measure.

FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming, who had charge of the bill.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I gave very careful consideration to this case. The situation was that the inventor brought an action in the Court of Claims in which he alleged two causes of action, one on a contract to pay him for the use of an invention, and the other on a quantum meruit, because the Government had used his invention without a contract. Testimony was taken, and the case dragged along. To those two causes of action the Government neither demurred nor answered, nor did it file any objection.

The testimony was taken and for some reason or other just before the Commissioner made his report the attorney for the widow of this inventor, who had been in the case only 3 or 4 weeks, asked leave to file a motion to strike out the cause of action with the quantum meruit they had brought, and relying solely on the contract, and, in that state of the record, the Court of Claims held that there was not a valid contract, notwithstanding the correspondence which had passed. So the case went out on that basis.

There was evidence that the invention had been used. The Court of Claims also said that the use of this patent was an unwarranted use, and constituted a claim. What we are trying to do now is to give the widow of this inventor an opportunity in the Court of Claims to try the question of the extent to which this patent was used, and, if so, what she is entitled to recover. It seems to me she is entitled to recover, and that she ought to have her day in court on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment on the claim of the legal representatives of the estate of Robert Lee Wright."

VELVIE W. SMITH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3059) for the relief of Velvie W. Smith, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$150 and to the legal guardian of Glenn Richard Smith, of Huntington, W. Va., the sum of $5,000"; and in line 10, after the words "death of", to strike out "her daughter", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Velvie W. Smith, of Huntington, W. Va., the sum of $150 and to the legal guardian of Glenn Richard Smith, of Huntington, W. Va., the sum of $5,000, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States arising out of the death of Emley Mae Smith, who was killed when a Work Projects Administration truck ran off the highway and struck her on the right-of-way of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, in Huntington, W. Va., on October 9, 1939: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Velvie W. Smith, and the legal guardian of Glenn Richard Smith."

INTERNATIONAL GRAIN CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2356) for the relief of the International Grain Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$18,499.61" and to insert "$18,490.81."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. This is a claim of the International Grain Co. of Minneapolis for payment due on storage of oats for the Government. Certain contracts were entered into with various storage elevators for the storage of grain, and some agreements were made by letter. A special board was appointed and assigned the duty of examining these documents. My understanding is that the claims have all been paid except this one, which is for a number of carloads of oats which were stored, and for which the company has not been paid. The bill has the approval of the Committee on Claims, and was favorably reported by the committee. The Claims Committees of the House and the Senate have gone through this case with great thoroughness, and the bill has passed the House, I understand, without objection. I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill, and that the bill will be passed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

For the prosecution of such revised project, not to exceed $249,000 shall be made available immediately out of any balances of appropriations for flood-control purposes which remain unobligated on the date of enactment of this act.

CERTAIN ADJUSTMENTS IN ACCOUNTS OF TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3383) to authorize certain future adjustments in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States when erroneous payments have been made by him in good faith and without negligence, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, whenever any check, draft, or warrant drawn upon the Treasurer of the United States or upon the Treasurer of the United States through any Federal Reserve bank, or any public-debt obligation of the United States, including any obligation of any type whatever the payment of which is guaranteed by, or assumed by, the United States, has been paid by or on behalf of the Treasurer of the United States, or whenever any evidences of value or valuables, including, but not limited to, moneys, obligations, securities, deed, bills of sale, warehouse receipts, or other instruments, and tangible personal property, of the United States or in which the United States has any interest, whether as trustee, custodian, depositary, agent, or otherwise, have been paid over or delivered by or on behalf of the Treasurer, and it is later established that such payment, payment over, or delivery was made to a person other than a person legally entitled thereto, neither the Treasurer, nor any duly authorized agent or employee acting for him, nor his or their surety or sureties, shall be liable for any such payment, payment over, or delivery, and no department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States shall raise any charge, disallowance, or suspension against him or them, or disallow any credit claimed in the Treasurer's general account by reason of any such payment, payment over, or delivery, if the Secretary of the Treasury shall, after investigation, find as a fact that such payment, payment over, or delivery was made in good faith and without negligence, and if, in addition to such finding, the Attorney General of the United States, or such other officer, agent, or employee of the United States, or any department or agency thereof, as may be authorized in the premises to make such decision, shall determine that the claim of the United States, or any department, agency, officer, or employee thereof, arising out of any such payment, payment over, or delivery should not be prosecuted, or shall determine that a final judgment entered on such claim is uncollectible, or such claim shall be compromised or settled, or a court of competent jurisdiction shall enter final judgment against the United States, or any department, agency, officer, or employee thereof, in a suit based upon such claim.

SEC. 2. (a) The term "person" as used in this act includes, but is not limited to, individuals, partnerships, joint-stock companies, associations, syndicates, or other bodies of person, however designated, States, the District of Columbia, Territories, possessions, political subdivisions, private, public, and municipal corporations, foreign governments, the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, and all officers, agencies, agents, or employees of any of them, whether such "person" shall be acting in his, her, its, or their own right or in a representative or fiduciary capacity.

(b) The term "agency" as used in this act includes, but is not limited to, private and public corporations formed or used by the United States in any capacity, whether governmental, proprietary, or otherwise.

SEC. 3. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to impose any liability upon, or to raise any charge against, the United States, or its officers, employees, and agents, where none would otherwise be imposed or raised.

SEC. 4. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to relieve the United States, or any department or agency thereof, from any liability which it might otherwise be under to a person legally entitled to receive any payment, payment over, or delivery referred to in section 1 hereof.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, this bill comes from the Treasury Department. Its purpose is to relieve the Treasurer of the United States of charges or disallowances when he has paid money out by separate vouchers to persons not legally entitled to such payments.

To show the necessity for such a statute, in 1935 to 1939, the United States Treasury paid by check, in number, 601,000 checks, of a money value represented by $37,000,000,000. During that period of time it was necessary for the Department to ask Congress for relief by way of private relief bills on 23,102 checks, involving $725,000. It is wholly impossible for the Treasury in the great volume of 600,000 checks to examine each payee and endorser and know whether or not the payments are valid and legal. It is to obviate that necessity that this bill was proposed by the Treasury Department. There has been no objection from the Comptroller's office, and I think the bill is meritorious in every particular.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2455) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Railway Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF PRIVATE VEHICLES FOR OFFICIAL TRAVEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6693) to amend the provisions of law relating to the use of private vehicles for official travel in order to effect economy and better administration, which had been reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the word "amended", to strike out "to read as follows" and to insert by striking out the words "his own" wherever they appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "a privately owned", and to strike out the remainder of the bill, being lines 3 to 13, inclusive, on page 2, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of February 14, 1931 (46 Stat. 1103), as amended by section 9 of the act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1516; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 73a), entitled "An act to permit payments for the operation of motorcycles and automobiles used for necessary travel on official business on a mileage basis in lieu of actual operating expenses," is further amended by striking out the words "his own" wherever they appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "a privately owned."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill for the RECORD?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, this is a House bill. The old statute provided that when an agent of the Government was away from his designated post on official business he could not recover mileage unless the title to the motorcycle or the automobile used by him was in his name. If it belonged to a member of the family, or was rented, he could not recover mileage for its use for travel on official business. The Department thought that was unfair, and the bill strikes the provision of law which restricts the recovery of mileage to the use of a vehicle privately owned by the user, so that he may recover for the use of a family vehicle or a rented one.

The only material change made in the House bill is that the House reduced the mileage to 4 cents. The committee changed that back to 5 cents a mile for the use of an automobile by reason of the fact that a short time ago the mileage was reduced from 7 cents to 5 cents, and the Department feels that when a person uses a private automobile for official business he should be entitled to 5 cents a mile, and it recommended that change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF ENGINEERS AND ECONOMISTS ON RECLAMATION WORK

The bill (H. R. 6379) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to employ engineers and economists for consultation purposes on important reclamation work," approved February 28, 1929 (45 Stat. 1406), was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE ON GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS—RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 232) limiting debate on general appropriation bills was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] suggests anything it almost assumes the nature of a command; the suggestion comes with the force of a Biblical utterance. It seems to me the restriction proposed by the resolution may limit legitimate debate.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the measure proposes no limitation on any discussion, except when the Senate has under consideration an appropriation bill. Any Senator may talk until he is black in the face on any provision of an appropriation bill so long as the matter set forth is germane to the bill. But we witnessed here week before last the consumption of 6 hours and more by prepared written speeches which had not the remotest reference to the appropriation bill. If a Senator wanted to make a speech of that sort, if the resolution should be agreed to, he would have to obtain the unanimous consent of the Senate to do so. This resolution has been favorably reported twice by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Rules of the Senate. It does not place any limitation whatsoever upon legitimate debate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to look into this matter a little. It seems to me that one of the chief functions of the United States Senate is to furnish a forum for public discussion. I realize the desire to limit discussion of appropriation bills to the bills themselves, but suppose there is something more important than an appropriation bill which needs discussion. Suppose the question of war or peace should arise, or some international incident which affected our Government should occur.

Merely because it is an appropriation bill, I do not see any reason why we should not be able to discuss such a question. I think one of the chief functions of the Senate is to furnish a place where public opinion can express itself. In many places it cannot find expression. So, Mr. President, for the present I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

MARKERS FOR CERTAIN GRAVES

The bill (H. R. 8083) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certain markers for certain graves was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STUDIES OF PRODUCTIVITY AND LABOR COSTS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to make studies of productivity and labor costs in industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask who objected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] asked that the bill go over.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment, so that I may explain the joint resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I have read the joint resolution; and I do not want any more measures which destroy pay rolls and are destructive of business—which I think would be the result of the passage of the joint resolution—to pass with my consent.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that employers, as well as representatives of employee organizations, strongly favor this proposal. As the Senator knows, we are now having hearings before the Monopoly Committee on the effect of inventions on employment, and this is a very modest beginning on the current study of the whole subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am fearful that it is only a modest beginning; and I am one manufacturer who is not praying for the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. KING. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WAGNER. I think there is almost unanimous demand for this character of legislation, because it would provide information which is essential if we are ever to legislate on this important subject.

I give notice that at an early opportunity I shall move to take up for consideration Senate Joint Resolution 114.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

HARRY HUSTON

The bill (S. 3095) for the relief of Harry Huston was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

CODE OF LAWS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3203) to amend section 1262 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my recollection is that there is a similar House bill on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not as to this measure.

Mr. KING. Then, I ask consideration of the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3203) to amend section 1262 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1262 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

Liverymen and garage keepers: It shall be lawful for all persons keeping or boarding any animals at livery within the District, under any agreement with the owner thereof, to detain such animals until all charges under such agreement for the care, keep, or board of such animals shall have been paid: Provided, however, That notice in writing shall first be given to such owner in person or at his last known place of residence of the amount of such charges and the intention to detain such animal or animals until such charges shall be paid. All persons shall have a lien for their charges for storage, repairs, supplies of or concerning motor vehicles when such charges are incurred by the owner or conditional vendee of such vehicles, and may detain such vehicles at any time they have lawful possession thereof, after giving notice similar to that provided for liverymen, and said lien, with the exception of that for storage, shall have priority over any encumbrance on said vehicle, whether recorded or unrecorded. If said charges are not paid within 30 days said lien may be enforced as provided in sections 1263 and 1264."

QUARTERING OF TROOPS IN THE DISTRICT DURING INAUGURAL CEREMONIES, 1941

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S J. Res. 218) to provide for the quartering, in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia, of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "the Secretary of the Interior" and substitute in lieu thereof, "Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, or any executive department or establishment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, or any executive department or establishment, is authorized to allocate such space in any public building under his care and supervision as he deems necessary for the purposes of quartering troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies to be held on January 20, 1941, but such use shall not continue after January 22, 1941. Authority granted by this joint resolution may be exercised notwithstanding the provisions of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved April 28, 1902, prohibiting the use of public buildings in connection with inaugural ceremonies.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES, 1941—MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER, ETC.

"SEC. 17. Holding of general deposits by District auditor and secretary to Board of Commissioners: When any company is required by this act to make a deposit in the District, such deposit shall be in securities of the class authorized by this act for investments of companies, and shall be delivered by the company to the secretary of the Board of Commissioners of the District and the auditor of the District, who shall receive and hold the same subject to the lawful orders of the superintendent, and who shall be responsible for the safekeeping of all securities deposited or delivered under the authority of this section. Mr. KING. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the statement made by the Secretary of War:

In view of all the circumstances here set forth and the fact that full consideration was given this matter by the Comptroller General, it is recommended that this bill be not passed.

I know nothing about it.

Mr. BYRD. The bill is simply for the relief of the Priest Lumber Co., in the amount of $749.96, which was assessed by reason of the failure of the company to deliver some lumber on a certain specified date. The records will show that the delay was due solely to the occurrence of unforeseen torrential rains, which completely flooded the place at which the contractors' logging operations were being carried on. The committee went into the matter very fully and recommended that the bill pass.

MR. AND MRS. C. W. BLACK AND MARION RABREN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2704), for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATHERINE M. DRIER

The bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has an amendment which he desires to offer to this bill which would possibly remove objections which have been made to a number of Senators by persons claiming to be interested in the subject matter. I ask that the bill may go over for the present, and I shall ask the leader upon this side at an early date, this week if possible, to assign an hour or half an hour for the consideration of the bill. There is no disposition to delay its proper consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the considerate attitude taken by the Senator from Utah, knowing as I do that for some time he has been considering this bill of mine with reference to certain objections which have been made to him respecting the measure. I have talked with him several times at length about the bill.

I merely wish to take sufficient time to put into the RECORD at this place information for the benefit of the Senate. I wish to say briefly that there is nothing about this bill that would take 1 cent of the tax money of the United States; there is nothing in it that would require an appropriation by the Congress to bring the relief proposed to the poor venerable lady who is the beneficiary.

This is one of those unfortunate cases that are the result of the exercise of war power which completely wiped out the estate of this lady. The bill provides payment to her out of funds now in the Treasury held for the purpose of paying claims of nationals of the United States who suffered by reason of the World War. Others are interested; and although there are special equities that justify couching the bill in the language in which it was originally drawn, in order fully to meet, as I view it, every single objection which I have heard by others who are also interested to participate in the fund which is in the Treasury, I propose to offer an amendment.

The bill in its present form reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 4 (c) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay forthwith, out of the German special deposit account in the Treasury of the United States, to Katherine M. Drier, an American citizen, formerly resident in Germany, the sum of $160,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 percent per annum from January 1, 1920, being the amount due said Katherine M. Drier pursuant to an agreement between the United States of America and the German Government under which all the claims of said Katherine M. Drier against the German Government were settled and adjusted.

The amendment I intend to propose reads as follows:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "forthwith"; and on page 2, line 4, before the period insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That payment of such sum of $160,000 and interest thereon as herein provided shall be made as follows:

"(1) There shall be paid forthwith to the said Katherine M. Drier an amount which bears the same proportion to such sum and interest thereon as the amounts heretofore paid out of such special deposit account to claimants on whose behalf awards have been made by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, bear to the total awards so made to such claimants; and

"(2) Payment of the balance of such sum and interest thereon shall be prorated on the basis of the amount of the respective payments authorized by section 2 (b) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, and remaining unpaid."

If the amendment which I intend to propose should be adopted, the bill would read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 4 (c) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the German special deposit account in the Treasury of the United States, to Katherine M. Drier, an American citizen, formerly resident in Germany, the sum of $160,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 percent per annum from January 1, 1920, being the amount due said Katherine M. Drier pursuant to an agreement between the United States of America and the German Government under which all the claims of said Katherine M. Drier against the German Government were settled and adjusted: Provided, That payment of such sum of $160,000 and interest thereon as herein provided shall be made as follows:

(1) There shall be paid forthwith to the said Katherine M. Drier an amount which bears the same proportion to such sum and interest thereon as the amounts heretofore paid out of such special deposit account to claimants on whose behalf awards have been made by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, bear to the total awards so made to such claimants; and

(2) Payment of the balance of such sum and interest thereon shall be prorated on the basis of the amount of the respective payments authorized by section 2 (b) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, and remaining unpaid.

Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say a word further, there are several reasons why action should be taken by the Congress upon this claim as quickly as possible. For that reason the Senators with whom I have talked have graciously undertaken to cooperate with me in obtaining early consideration of this measure. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that, upon the completion of the pending business, the Senate may proceed to the consideration of this bill. I hope, Mr. President, that its consideration will not require any great length of time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I expected to receive a memorandum from some of those who have urged objections. I thought the memorandum would be here today; it is to come from New York. I should not like to have the Senator ask that the bill be taken up this afternoon.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, no. That is understood. I did not understand that the pending business would be completed today, and my request is on the assumption that the pending business shall be completed tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont requests that, at the conclusion of the pending business, Order of Business No. 1346, Senate bill 3097, be taken up for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, in the meaning of that request, what is the "pending business"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the bill relating to cotton cooperatives, in which the Senator from Alabama is so much interested.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The request will not interfere, will it, with the unfinished business in any way?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is that Senate bill 3097 be taken up after the conclusion of the unfinished business, as the Chair understands.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it would be better to have the bill made a special order to follow the unfinished business. I suggest the Senator request that it be made a special order, following the disposition of the unfinished business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I accept that suggestion, and modify my request, and now ask that Senate bill 3097 be made a special order immediately following the disposition of the unfinished business.

Mr. KING. I assume the Senator thinks it will be tomorrow and not today?

Mr. AUSTIN. I assume that.

Mr. KING. Tomorrow or next day.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, this bill was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee but it should have gone to the Finance Committee, as it deals with German claims. However, several members of the committee have looked into the bill at length, and do not wish to make objection to it. I think it is very fair that the agreement be made. I have spoken to the Senator from Kentucky, and he has no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the resolution. Let the resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8669) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3231 will be indefinitely postponed.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT

The bill (S. 2377) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to hides, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have just received a long-distance telephone message from my State asking me to have this bill go over. I request that it go over.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as the author of the bill, I, of course, cannot object to letting the bill go over in response to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, which is an eminently proper one. I hope that after his constituent has had time to study the bill he will have no objection to it.

In order that all the information on this matter may be available to the Senate and to interested parties, I should like to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. M. L. Wilson, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, which endorses the bill, and also a memorandum which describes it. The bill simply seeks to put hides under the Commodity Exchange Act. The reason for this legislation is that since other commodities have been regulated, speculation in hides has increased to considerable proportions. The sole purpose of the bill is to put hides under the same regulations that now apply to other commodities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter and memorandum will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter and memorandum are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, May 26, 1939.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of May 17, with which you referred S. 2377 to this Department for consideration and report.

This is a bill to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, by extending its provisions to hides. Futures trading in commodities is of vital importance to producers, merchandisers, and processors, and the Department strongly recommends the enactment of S. 2377 in order that trading in hide futures, which has an approximate value of $175,000,000 annually, may be subject to the same regulation as futures trading in the 14 commodities now covered by the act.

To enable the Department to take the necessary action with respect to the designation as contract markets of the commodity exchanges which conduct futures trading in hides and to register futures commission merchants and floor brokers handling orders covering hide futures, it is recommended that the bill be amended by adding the following section thereto:

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 60 days after the date of its enactment."

Upon reference of this matter to the Bureau of the Budget, as required by Budget Circular 344, the Director thereof advised the Department of Agriculture under date of May 22, 1939, that there would be no objection on the part of that office to the submission of this report to Congress.

Sincerely,

M. L. WILSON, Acting Secretary.

MEMORANDUM ON S. 2377, INTRODUCED BY SENATOR LODGE, OF MASSACHUSETTS

S. 2377 places trading in hide futures under the supervision of the Commodity Exchange Administration. While it appears at first glance as a minor amendment to an act of long standing, the enactment of that measure will be of major importance to every processor, manufacturer, and dealer in hides, leather, and boots and shoes. This measure is strongly approved by the Commodity Exchange Administration.

The thousands of processors, manufacturers and dealers in hides and all of its by-products should be seriously concerned over futures transactions in hides on the Commodity Exchange, Inc., of New York, on which exchange 98 percent of all trading in hide futures takes place. If fraud, manipulation and other nefarious practices are indulged in on that exchange the leather and shoe manufacturer and even the consumer will pay part of the cost.

Ordinarily trading in commodity futures is a desirable economic practice for it furnishes hedging facilities to merchants and manufacturers, aids in establishing fair prices, and offers a continuous market. But when speculation becomes excessive prices are certain to be dislocated and supply and demand conditions disregarded. Trading in hide futures has been expanding very rapidly at a time when most forms of trading were declining. In contrast with most commodities, trading in hide futures has expanded from a total of 165,000,000 pounds in 1929 to 1,716,000,000 pounds during 1938. That trading in 1938 had a value estimated to be $182,000,000. Unfortunately prices have gyrated, dropping from 16.60 cents a pound in 1929 to 8.87 cents in 1932, then up to 15.14 in 1937 and back to 10.64 in 1938. The present price is around 11 cents. While it is impossible in the absence of facts to say what is causing this tremendous expansion in the volume of trading and the rapid price changes it is significant that hides is one of the more important commodities not supervised by the Commodity Exchange Administration and that there are persistent rumors that some of the big speculators have turned from stocks and regulated commodities to hides and other commodities for a field in which they will not be disturbed by Government supervision.

The passage of this bill will insure that manipulation, fraud and deceit have no part in hide futures transactions hereafter and that there will be full publicity for all operations in these futures. This bill places all trading in hide futures under the supervision of the Commodity Exchange Administration. That Administration is a regulatory agency which was set up in 1922 to supervise trading in grain futures and eliminate from the exchanges all manipulation of prices, fraud, and dishonesty. Its authority has been gradually extended until at the present time it covers futures transactions in wheat, cotton, corn, oats, rye, barley, flax, millfeeds, grain sorghums, rice, cotton, butter, eggs, Irish potatoes and wool tops. Trading in these commodity futures has an average annual value of approximately $25,000,000,000.

The Commodity Exchange Administration has two types of functions, one negative and the other positive. The negative one is the suppression of manipulation, fraud, deceit, fictitious transactions, improper use of customers' funds, and other discreditable practices which are indulged in by a very limited number of traders. These practices are heartily condemned by exchange officials and the large majority of traders. The most vigorous and unrelenting measures are being taken to eliminate them from the commodity exchanges.

The positive function, and much the more difficult one, is the establishment of speculative trading limits and improving the procedures and trading practices followed on the exchanges so the futures trading system will have greater economic value. If it succeeds, the producers and dealers receive a higher price for their goods and the consumer pays less.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made to the consideration of the bill, it will be passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] reported the bill from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the bill appropriates a small sum of money to pay for damage done to a private plane by a Government plane while they were engaged in maneuvers. The Government plane flew over and struck the private plane, which was nearby, broke off the wing and did certain other damage. The bill is to appropriate $940 to pay for the damage done by the Government plane.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Sheldon, East Pepperell, Mass., the sum of $1,500. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States of the said George L. Sheldon for personal injuries and property damage resulting from a collision, on August 10, 1937, at the junction of Hollis and Groton Streets, Pepperell, Mass., when a truck owned by the said George L. Sheldon and in which he was riding was struck by a motor vehicle operated by an employee of the Works Progress Administration: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

JAMES HENRY RIGDON

R. D. TORIAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5257) for the relief of R. D. Torian.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana explain the bill? The Senator reported the bill from the committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] will explain the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the bill appropriates a sum of money because of the death of a young man which occurred by reason of a collision between a school bus and a truck operated by the W. P. A. The bill is related to House bill 5258, which is the next bill but one on the calendar. Three school children were killed in the accident and several were seriously injured because of negligence, clearly established, and admitted by the operator of the W. P. A. truck. Those are the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much was allowed?

Mr. MILLER. Three thousand five hundred dollars because of the death of the young man; and I know the Senator from Tennessee is also interested in House bill 5258, because it grows out of the same accident. In that case $3,000 was allowed for the permanent and total injuries of a little girl and some $600 for her hospital expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill, H. R. 5257, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. D. Torian, of Weldon, Ark., the sum of $3,500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the fatal injuries sustained by his son, William Edward Torian, in a collision between the Newport, Ark., public-school automobile bus, in which the said William Edward Torian was an authorized student passenger, and an automobile truck owned and negligently operated by the Works Progress Administration on Arkansas State Highway No. 17, near Weldon, Ark., on April 26, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

In the case of Calendar No. 1367, House bill 4388, for the relief of James Henry Rigdon, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] requested an explanation of the bill. The Chair did not observe the Senator from Louisiana in the Chamber.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask that the bill be passed over for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of Mrs. Clyde Thatcher and her two minor children, Marjorie Thatcher and Bobby Thatcher, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this bill grows out of the same accident, as I understand.

Mr. MILLER. No; this bill does not grow out of the same accident as House bill 5257 and House bill 5258.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. I do not know anything about this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana desire to make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask that it be passed over for the moment.

L. Frady, of Weldon, Arkansas, the sum of $629.50", and in line 10, after the name "Frady", to insert "and for expenses incurred by W. L. Frady", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Betty Lou Frady, a minor, of Weldon, Ark., the sum of $3,000, and to W. L. Frady, of Weldon, Ark., the sum of $629.50, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the permanent injuries sustained by the said Betty Lou Frady, and for expenses incurred by W. L. Frady, in a collision between the Newport, Ark., public-school automobile bus, in which the said Betty Lou Frady was an authorized student passenger, and an automobile truck owned and negligently operated by the Works Progress Administration on Arkansas State Highway No. 17, near Weldon, Ark., on April 26, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Boyd, of Spokane, Wash., the sum of $5,000, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for the death of her son, Jess P. Boyd, as the result of an accident involving a Government truck operated by an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps between Priest River and Coolin, Idaho, on October 15, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Fla., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "and", to strike out "ER–W–647–eng–36–33" and insert "unnumbered contract (invitation numbered 647–36–33)", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. H. Churchwell Wholesale Co., of Jacksonville, Fla., the sum of $1,100, in full satisfaction of the claim of such company against the United States for remission of liquidated damages assessed against such company under the provisions of two contracts numbered ER–W–647–eng–38 and unnumbered contract (invitation numbered 647–36–33) entered into by such company with the War Department under dates of September 12, 1935, and September 18, 1935, respectively, for the delivery of a quantity of sheets and blankers to the United States district engineer's office, Camp Roosevelt, Ocala, Fla.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARNET WARREN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3091) for the relief of Barnet Warren, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Barnet Warren the sum of $2,756.14, and the additional sum of $100 a month, up to and not exceeding $5,000, in full settlement of all his claims against the United States growing out of any damages or personal injuries suffered by him when a Civilian Conservation Corps truck, operated at the time by the National Park Service, collided with the said Barnet Warren, who was riding a bicycle north on United States Highway No. 1, near Ojus, Fla., on March 17, 1939: Provided, That no part of the amount appropirated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in conection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT

The bill (S. 2925) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill is an amendment of the original T. V. A. Act to provide charges against electric rates in lieu of taxation, due to the purchase by the T. V. A. of certain property rights and franchises in the Tennessee Valley.

I am a member of the subcommittee. I voted to report the bill; but the chairman of the subcommittee is the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the matter is largely in the hands of the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. It is pioneer legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield at that point, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is temporarily absent because of official business, spoke to me about this bill before he left, and said he would very much like to have it passed. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I believe, intends to offer one or two amendments, to which the Senator from Nebraska has no objection, though he does not think the amendments are necessary; but, if those amendments are agreed to, the Senator from Nebraska authorized me to say that he hoped the bill would pass.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, I did not have that information; but the chairman of the subcommittee is the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and I think that if there is to be any submission of amendments and acceptance thereof he should be present so that he might have an opportunity to consider them.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator from Oregon knows, as well as I do, that the proposed legislation is an effort which has been worked out to compensate the States and counties for the loss of revenue to them due to the taking over of land by the Government.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I stated a moment ago. It is pioneer legislation. It is supplying a program which we may follow in other sections of the country. I am for the proposal, but I think that it should probably be postponed until the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Nebraska may be present. But if the Senate wants to pass the bill, I will not make any objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that among the facts about which we should be advised is as to the amount the Federal Government will lose by turning over to the States and the counties revenue which it was assumed might go to the Federal Government, to compensate it for the many millions of dollars which have been expended.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill sets out the percentage of certain receipts from the sale of power on account of the Tennessee Valley Authority project which may be allocated to the States and the counties affected by the loss of the revenues. I have no desire to urge that the Senate take action now, but the Senator from Nebraska knew he would probably be away at the time the bill would be called and was interested in getting action on it if possible.

Mr. KING. I suggest that it go over until the Senator from Montana may be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am not insisting, except that I want to ask unanimous consent that I may file some amendments, which were submitted some days ago to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who stated he had no objection to them. He came to my desk today and told me he had no objection, and also made the same statement to the majority leader. I wish to present the amendments so that if the matter comes up and I am not here, they may be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and will lie on the table. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

COPYRIGHT AND PATENT PROTECTION

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 433) to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1940, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENTS TO LANDLORDS AND TENANTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 258) to amend section 8 (f) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, to strike out the word "reduction" and the quotation marks and to insert "reduction. Such action of local committees shall be subject to approval or disapproval by State committees", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 8 (f) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Any change in the relationship between the landlord and the tenants or sharecroppers, with respect to any farm, that would increase over the previous year the amount of payments or grants of other aid under subsection (b) that would otherwise be made to any landlord shall not operate to increase such payment or grant to such landlord. Any reduction in the number of tenants below the average number of tenants on any farm during the preceding 3 years that would increase the payments or grants of other aid under such subsection that would otherwise be made to the landlord shall not hereafter operate to increase any such payment or grant to such landlord. Such limitations shall not apply if on investigation the local committee finds that the change is justified and approves such change in relationship or reduction. Such action of local committees shall be subject to approval or disapproval by State committees."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this measure?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the joint resolution proposes to amend a subdivision of section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, which relates to the division of payments between landlords and tenants. It does not change the division, but where the landlord makes a change in the status of his tenants in order to increase his own benefit payments, under the original act, the local committee may prevent him from doing that by not approving it; but the burden of proof is on the committee. The only change the joint resolution would make would be to put the burden of proof upon the landlord who changes the status of his tenants, and possibly puts them off so as to increase his own payments out of the division of benefit payments. It is a House measure, which was introduced in the House by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and, in my judgment, it is a very meritorious measure. It is not intended to change the relations of the parties, but to prevent an imposition upon the tenants by landlords in order to increase their share in the distribution of the benefit payments.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe it is wise or sound, or just and proper legislation, for the Federal Government to interfere between landlords and tenants and fix their contracts?

Mr. BANKHEAD. This measure does not go into that. That is already provided for in the law. This merely changes the rule as to burden of proof. The only change it makes in the existing law is as to the burden of proof.

Mr. MILLER. The burden of proof, under the joint resolution, would be cast upon the landlord making a change in the set-up?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct. The burden is now on the committee, and the provision is not enforced for that reason.

Mr. MILLER. At the present time the burden is upon the committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And the committee merely does not have time to go into the matter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct. It does not have time to go out and look up the evidence and deal with all the questions involved.

Mr. MILLER. Did the committee consider that it might result in much confusion on the part of the county committee recommending against the payment of benefits upon complaint being made to it by an irresponsible person?

Mr. BANKHEAD. An appeal to a State committee is provided by an amendment.

Mr. MILLER. That is true. In the event the joint resolution is passed, if a complaint is made by someone and the county committee stops the payments, is it contemplated that a hearing will be had before the county committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. This measure does not set out the details of that. It merely follows the present law on that subject, whatever that may be.

Mr. MILLER. As a matter of fact, are hearings now held, or does the Senator know?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Frankly I do not know whether or not there is any regulation on the subject of hearings.

Mr. MILLER. In my opinion, there is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not changed. This measure does not change substantive rights, or change anything except the rule as to burden of proof. Whatever the law now is and whatever the practice is will continue to govern, except as to the burden of proof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

JAMES HENRY RIGDON

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 1367, House bill 4388, for the relief of James Henry Rigdon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4388) for the relief of James Henry Rigdon, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to James Henry Rigdon, of Pickens, S. C., the sum of $3,500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the loss of his left arm and other bodily injuries and damages sustained by him by reason of the negligent and reckless operation of a United States Government truck operated in connection with Civilian Conservation Corps activities of the War Department, on a public highway near Pickens, S. C., on September 24, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, this is a House bill providing for the payment of $3,500 to the claimant. The Committee on Claims examined the facts very thoroughly and concluded that the amount fixed by the House was reasonable. There is no question as to the negligence of the Government truck driver. That is admitted. The War Department has urged no objection to the bill. I desire——

Mr. McKELLAR. What was the nature of the injury?

Mr. ELLENDER. There was a collision between a Government truck and a privately owned car. One of the occupants hurt was a man with a family of three children; he was only 34 years of age, and because of the loss of his arm as a consequence he cannot pursue the work he was doing before the accident.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. CLYDE THATCHER AND OTHERS

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 1369, House bill 1288.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of Mrs. Clyde Thatcher and her two minor children, Marjorie Thatcher and Bobby Thatcher, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the name "Texas" and the semicolon, to strike out the word "and"; on line 8, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$2,500"; on line 9, after the name "Texas" and the comma, to insert the words "and the sum of $387 to Mr. Clyde Thatcher, of Beaumont, Texas"; on page 2, line 4, after the name "Thatcher" and the comma, to insert the words "and for medical expenses incurred by Mr. Clyde Thatcher," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 to Mrs. Clyde Thatcher, Beaumont, Tex.; the sum of $500 to the legal guardian of Marjorie Thatcher, Beaumont, Tex.; the sum of $2,500 to the legal guardian of Bobby Thatcher, Beaumont, Tex., and the sum of $387 to Mr. Clyde Thatcher, of Beaumont, Tex. Said sums shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries and expenses sustained by the said Mrs. Clyde Thatcher and her two minor children, Marjorie and Bobby Thatcher, and for medical expenses incurred by Mr. Clyde Thatcher, when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a Government truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps, at the intersection of Beech Street and Grand Avenue, Beaumont, Tex., on August 1, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upoh conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Thatcher and their two minor children, Marjorie Thatcher and Bobby Thatcher."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator having charge of this bill does not want it to come up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6480) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not know that I am opposed to this bill, but I have conferred with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who reported the bill, and told him I wanted further time to look into it, and therefore, for this occasion only, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3368) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee [Mr. BULOW] is present, but I am also somewhat interested in this bill. It will be noticed from the report that the bill was drawn by the Veterans' Administration in conjunction with the Civil Service Commission, and was also approved by the Bureau of the Budget. It corrects some of the existing difficulties in connection with retirement pay and veterans' compensation.

I am interested in the case of a Spanish-American War and World War veteran who was wounded in the World War and was drawing a little pension by reason of disability arising from his service in the World War. He is from South Dakota. When he came back he obtained a position as rural mail carrier and continued in that position until he was notified by the Post Office Department that he had time enough to his credit to draw retirement pay and also continue receiving his little pension. After he had resigned and retired he was notified by the Post Office Department that he lacked about 30 or 40 days of having enough time under civil service to draw his retirement pay and also his pension, and his pension was cut off. He immediately applied to the Post Office Department for reinstatement. They said there was no job for him, and he was not able to get a position to fill out the required time. The matter was referred to the Veterans' Administration in Washington and to the Civil Service Commission. That was one of the cases which was considered when the bill was drawn.

There is one provision in which I am particularly interested, that when a veteran has service disability he may count his time in the Army and also in the civil service for retirement pay, and also for his pension. I believe this to be a very fair and just bill. It has the approval both of the Civil Service Commission and the Veterans' Bureau and also of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. KING. If these four or five pages amending the civil service act or retirement act are required to cover that little case, it seems to me——

Mr. FRAZIER. The provision to which I refer begins in line 14, on page 2, and includes the remainder of the paragraph. The remainder of the bill simply provides for straightening out some difficulties which have been encountered in connection with civil-service retirement, and also in the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. KING. Then it covers substantially the whole Civil Service Act in respect to retirement?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; it applies merely to some minor matters, as I understand. As I said, this provision is the only one I was particularly interested in, because of a case which arose in my own State. I have met that veteran. The American Legion and various organizations of veterans have been very much interested in the case, and I think it is a worthy one. I understand there are probably a few more like it.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator have any idea as to the additional cost involved, and the number who would receive benefits under the act in the matter of retirement?

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand, there were only a very few cases of that kind, perhaps a couple of dozen. It affects only a few service-disabled men. I think they are entitled to some consideration by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, if I may I should like to direct a question to the chairman of the Civil Service Committee, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW]. I should like to ask him to refer to page 1, line 10, of the bill, wherein we discover that by rearranging the days upon which computations for retirement pay shall be computed we deal with the employee from the date he first became connected with the service even as an unclassified employee. I should like to ask the Senator if that is not new language in the bill?

Mr. BULOW. What was the question?

Mr. DANAHER. I refer to the language in line 10, page 1, "or an unclassified."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think we had better let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. DANAHER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to bear with me just a moment while I revert to order No. 1379, Senate bill 3368, to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts. I think a brief explanation should be made, and I ask the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] for a moment.

Mr. President, I think that when we have an explanation of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service should be prepared to explain to us the meaning of the language on page 1, line 10, as to whether or not the words "or an unclassified," as they there appear, will blanket under the civil service for retirement pay all those presently unclassified employees who may be included, to the total of approximately 300,000 such employees, under the Ramspeck bill now pending in the Committee on Civil Service. If we could have an explanation of that, and if the Senate conceded that point, it reasonably may be that there will be no further objection to the consideration of Senate bill 3368. I make this request of the Senator from South Dakota so that in due course he may explain to us the point I raised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Connecticut wish the Senate to return to Calendar No. 1379 and ask for consideration of Senate bill 3368?

Mr. DANAHER. I did not make that request, Mr. President. I simply asked the Senator from South Dakota with respect to the matter of retirement pay.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I am obliged in a few moments to leave the Chamber to attend a committee meeting. I ask unanimous consent to revert to Calendar No. 1041, House bill 6901, granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was passed over at the request of the Senator from Indiana himself.

Mr. MINTON. Yes; it was passed over at my request a moment ago. No objection to the bill was entered at the time, although some questions were asked.

Mr. President, the bill would increase the pension of certain widows who are now drawing pensions. They are all widows of veterans of the Civil War. I said in response to a query from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that there were only 31 bills involved. Those are the ones the Senate placed in the consolidated measure. There are 341 private bills from the House, and in the Senate we put in 31 bills by way of amendment. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] asked about the type of beneficiary of these pensions, and I want to call the Senate's attention to a few of them to show the type of persons who would be benefited by the proposed legislation.

Mary S. King is 73 years of age. She married a soldier March 12, 1890. She receives $40 a month and the present measure would raise her pension to $50 a month.

Here is another, Mattie F. Colebaugh, 88 years of age. She married a veteran in 1869, and lived with him until his death. She receives $40 a month, and this measure would raise her pension to $50 a month.

Mary E. Cramer is 91 years of age. She married a veteran in 1866 and receives $40 a month. This measure would raise her pension to $50 a month.

So it goes all the way through. The women who would be beneficiaries under this measure are very old. They have no means themselves. Most of them are dependent and helpless, and this small increase would mean much to them.

Mr. BYRD. What is the standard for fixing this additional compensation?

Mr. MINTON. There really is no standard. It is in the discretion of the committee itself. Certain limitations have been fixed by the general law. In none of these cases is the increase more than $10 a month. The total cost of the bill would be about $40,000 a year. The beneficiaries are rapidly dying off. Since we reported the bill to the calendar there have been four deaths among those included in the bill, and Senators can see from the age of these widows that the expenditure will not continue long.

If there is no objection to the consideration of the bill, I should like to amend it in accordance with the amendments which I shall send to the desk, which will take care of the four deaths which have occurred since the introduction of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6901) granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, after line 13, to strike out:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, it is proposed to strike out of the amendment of the committee lines 5 to 8 inclusive, as follows:

The name of Mattie F. Colebaugh, widow of Uriah A. Colebaugh, late of Company G, One Hundred and Forty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, it is proposed to strike out lines 17 to 20, inclusive, as follows:

The name of Esther A. Kenworthy, widow of David E. Kenworthy, late of the Fifteenth Battery Indiana Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Nancy J. Walker, widow of Adam R. Walker, late of Company A, Sixty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I now offer an amendment to the text of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, it is proposed to strike out lines 23 and 24, and on page 12, lines 1 and 2, as follows:

The name of Anna M. Parish, widow of Oris Parish, late first lieutenant, Company K, Thirtieth Regiment Ohio Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the proposed legislation change the limitation with respect to the age of the soldier who is married?

Mr. MINTON. No.

Mr. BYRD. Does it change the limitation with respect to the age of the widow?

Mr. MINTON. It does not change that limitation in the statute at all.

Mr. BYRD. What is that limitation?

Mr. MINTON. I cannot recall what the limitation is.

Mr. BYRD. Suppose a young girl should marry a Civil War veteran now, could she receive a pension as long as she lives?

Mr. MINTON. No. I think he would have to be married to her before sometime in 1905.

Mr. BYRD. The measure does not change that provision?

Mr. MINTON. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5784) to provide for the accumulation and transfer of accumulated sick leave and vacation time due classified civil-service employees who succeed to the position of postmaster, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7643) to facilitate and simplify national-forest administration was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6751) to repeal certain laws with respect to manifest and vessel permits was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who reported the bill is not in the Chamber.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RECONSTRUCTION AND REPLACEMENT OF CERTAIN RIO GRANDE BRIDGES

The bill (H. R. 7809) authorizing the reconstruction or replacement of certain bridges necessitated by the Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] explain the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, certain bridges on the Rio Grande are under the jurisdiction of the international Boundary Commission. Some former legislation provided that the bridges could be rebuilt, provided they belonged to municipalities or public agencies. It turned out later that some of them were located on country-club property. The bill merely provides for the reconstruction or replacement of those bridges.

I trust that explanation satisfies the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. I congratulate the Senator upon his vigilance and watchfulness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE PINE BLISTER RUST CONTROL

The bill (H. R. 3406) for forest protection against the white-pine blister rust, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are three bills of similar character. May we have an explanation of why it is necessary to have three bills instead of one? Do they treat of different sections of the United States?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, frankly, I did not know there were three bills. All I know about is the bill which was referred to me as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with reference to the white-pine blister rust.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that every year the Appropriations Committee receives requests for appropriations for white-pine blister-rust control; and I am wondering why it is necessary to have another bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is the point which the Secretary of Agriculture raises. From time to time through appropriation bills money has been appropriated for the purpose of fighting the white-pine blister rust. No general policy has been laid down by one act. From time to time there are authorizations or legislative appropriations in the appropriation bills, but there is no general policy; and the Secretary of Agriculture asks for the passage of this bill in order that he may have a statement by the Congress as to legislative policy.

The question involved, so far as the Secretary is concerned, is this: We have an area in which Government-owned lands completely surround either State-owned lands or privately owned lands. It does not do any good to eradicate from the Government lands gooseberry bushes and raspberry bushes, which spread the white-pine blister rust, and leave within the area a piece of privately owned land which is not protected. It is simply impossible to protect Government land if adjoining lands are not in any way taken care of. The purpose of the bill is to lay down a policy so as to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to take care of that sort of a situation. The bill provides:

That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture no expenditures from funds provided under this authorization shall be made on private or State lands (except where such lands are intermingled with those which are federally owned and it is necessary in order to protect the property of the United States to work on those parts of the private or State-owned lands that immediately adjoin Federal lands) until a sum, or sums, at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities or by individuals or organizations concerned.

The bill lays down the policy, giving to the Secretary the right to act, but providing that within his discretion he shall not act unless he receives a contribution, equal to half of the amount, from the State, the county, or the private owner.

Mr. McKELLAR. From hearing the Senator's explanation and from reading the bill it seems to me that a law of this kind is desirable. However, for such a law to function properly, would it not be better to have a provision repealing the other laws under which appropriations are now authorized? If the bill is to be the only act in force, I think it is highly desirable that it be passed; but if it is to be in addition to the present authorizations, it means mounting cost to the Government.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me read what the Secretary has to say on that point, in his letter dated March 15 of last year.

The bill does not propose that the Federal Government enter a new field but clarifies Federal policy in recognizing that blister-rust control should be carried on without regard to ownership boundaries. Congress has recognized the importance and need for this work by providing appropriations for the control of blister rust on national-forest lands and for cooperation both with the private owners of timberland and with the various agencies administering publicly owned forests. The Budget estimates for the fiscal year 1940 include a total of about $1,300,000 of regular funds for blister-rust control work under the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine and the Forest Service, and there is a probability that these funds may be supplemented by an additional allocation from Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts. The bill transmitted with your letter would define a policy for and enable the carrying out of a coordinated control program that would aid in meeting the threat to large sections of the country in which the continued growth and production of native white pines are vital to the economic stability and prosperity of numerous communities.

The Secretary having made a study of the bill and reported upon it, and having pointed to the provisions of the appropriation bill, I think it may be assumed that this bill is not in conflict with any such provisions. He says it merely clarifies the policy of the Government. It is not a matter involving more funds. We have had appropriations year after year, without a general law upon the subject.

The Secretary further points out in his report:

The initial eradication of currants and gooseberries has been completed on 20,000,000 acres of the estimated 29,000,000 acres of land requiring the application of control measures. Of the nearly 9,000,000 acres of remaining unprotected area, over 3,000,000 acres (of which over one-half is in public ownership) are located in Western States, where the disease is making rapid headway and the need for control is especially pressing.

The proposed legislation would clarify the policy as well as authorize the continuation and development of a coordinated program to control this tree-killing disease which threatens to eliminate the production of white pines and dependent industries. In the opinion of the Department, therefore, the establishment of the definite policy outlined in this bill is in the public interest, and the proposed legislation has the approval of the Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the bill is a step in the right direction, but the Senator will see from the second section of the bill that it increases the amounts to be expended for white-pine blister-rust control. The Government now spends very large sums for that purpose. It seems to me that in the twenty-odd years I have been a member of the committee we have made very small progress in doing away with the white-pine blister rust. If the bill represents a better way to manage the problem, very well; but the second section would enlarge the appropriations.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I cannot agree with the Senator that section 2 would enlarge the appropriations. It is the ordinary provision found in practically all authorization bills—

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of this act.

That is the customary provision in an authorization bill. Year after year we have been appropriating money to be spent upon this problem. So far as I can find out, there is nothing to indicate any increase in the amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes, Mr. President. It will mean a very large increase. I think the plan evolved is good, but it seems to me that section 2 authorizes increased amounts. Under the first section of the bill the Secretary has the right to allocate the white-pine blister-rust funds as he may see fit, and for that reason it seems to me that the second section of the bill should be omitted. The first section is all right; but, in my judgment, the second section should be omitted.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. From time to time, under the general provisions of the law in reference to the Department of Agriculture and the work of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, the Appropriations Committee has recommended appropriations. All the bill does is to lay down a policy and a method of operation. Section 2 carries the customary provision which is in every authorization bill. There is no reason to believe that because the policy is laid down in one bill the Appropriations Committee will appropriate any more money than it has appropriated in the past under the general appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

The record shows that 20,000,000 out of 29,000,000 acres of the area which has needed treatment have been taken care of. One of the difficulties which has been met is that here and there privately owned pieces of timber are surrounded by Government timber; and the Government has been unable to take care of the problem because there was no general law on the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am entirely in sympathy with the first section of the bill; but I am compelled to state that I am quite sure that the Department will ask for a very much larger appropriation for this purpose. I therefore object to consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH subsequently said:

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Calendar No. 1385, House bill 3406, which is the bill I explained a few moments ago. The Senator from Tennessee suggested if I would amend the bill by moving to strike out section 2 he would have no objection to its consideration and passage. That is what I intend to do if the bill may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the Senate recur to House bill 3406?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3406) for forest protection against the white-pine blister rust, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I now move to strike out section 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after line 3, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REPEAL OF SILVER PURCHASE ACT

The bill (S. 785) to repeal the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, to provide for the sale of silver, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this is a very important bill and I am very anxious that it be considered. I hope the majority leader will cooperate, so that we may get an early vote on this measure. The country is very much interested in it, and I hope to be able to get a vote on it at an early date.

Mr. KING. There are other important bills upon the calendar, and I suppose this bill ought to take its turn.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to give notice that at the first opportunity I shall move the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I discussed the probable legislative status of this bill with the majority leader a few days ago, and I think it was the understanding that if we could not reach the bill for consideration this week its consideration would be arranged for some time next week.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Delaware that, though I am opposed to this bill, I am not going to attempt to keep it from being considered. There are several bills, however, on the program ahead of it, and I do not at this time wish to have them pushed aside on account of this bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have a more definite understanding. If we are going to get into uncertainties, I shall invoke the rule of certainties to determine whether this bill will come up either this week or next week.

Mr. BARKLEY. I certainly gave no assurance to the Senator that the bill would come up this week.

Mr. McNARY. I understood the Senator to say, if not this week, it would come up next week.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill will be taken up when we get to it at some time when other proposed legislation before the Senate shall have been disposed of. The Senator will get a chance to consider his bill, I presume, some time next week, but I cannot be absolutely certain about it. I will cooperate with the Senator. I have no desire to postpone its consideration beyond any reasonable time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have no desire to take much time of the Senate. I am perfectly willing to make only a short statement if we can get a vote on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF TRAVEL

The bill (H. R. 6884) to consider travel in the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OBJECTION TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am forced to leave the floor to attend a committee meeting. May I be permitted to anticipate Calendar No. 1424 and register an objection to it? It authorizes two or three hundred million dollars' worth of more or less interesting and useful river and harbor projects. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to file the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that he may file objection to Calendar No. 1424, House bill 6264, the river and harbor appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

OBJECTION TO SENATE BILLS 1460 AND 1461

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am called from the Chamber for a moment. May I have the RECORD show that I desire to object to the consideration of Calendar Nos. 1415 and 1416, Senate bills 1460 and 1461, respectively? I make the objection at the request of another Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to lodge now objection to Calendar Nos. 1415 and 1416, Senate bills 1460 and 1461, respectively. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF TRAVEL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I inquire what happened to Calendar No. 1387, House bill 6884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the bill referred to, House bill 6884, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the Senator referring to the travel bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; to the so-called travel bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sorry, but the Senator is incorrect. It was not reported unanimously.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then I was misinformed. There was, however, no minority report submitted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and I, along with other Members in the committee, objected to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator understands, as do all other Senators, I presume, that we are trying to develop service in behalf of travel throughout the United States. Nearly every country in the world has travel assistance for the purpose of encouraging travel within its borders. That may be one thing we have neglected, although we have much more interesting things to be seen in the United States than may be found in other parts of the world. There has been heretofore in existence a travel service in the National Park Service, which has been contributed to largely by odds and ends in the way of appropriations which I think have been used up to about $75,000. This bill authorizes an appropriation of $100,000—which, of course, would be provided if reported by the Appropriations Committee and made a part of the law—for the continuation of this travel service in the National Park Service, under the Department of the Interior.

I have a letter here dated today and addressed to me by the Secretary of the Interior, which I should like to have read at the desk about this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 10, 1940.

HON. ALBEN WILLIAM BARKLEY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: With your consent, we should like to call up today H. R. 6884, a bill to continue the United States Travel Bureau of this Department for 1 year from June 30, 1940. This bill has passed the House and on March 19 was favorably reported by the Senate Commerce Committee. This legislation has been approved by the President, the Budget, the State, Agriculture, Commerce, and Interior Departments, by the Maritime Commission, and the Civil Aeronautics Authority. It also is strongly favored and recommended for passage by all important segments of the private travel industry.

I attach herewith a copy of the favorable report of the Commerce Committee, which discloses how important it is that this legislation be enacted at this time.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator from Michigan insist on his objection to this bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. I should like to make a statement very briefly about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. In the first place, I would have to object in the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], because he has very formidable objections to the proposed legislation, and expressed them in the Commerce Committee at some length. So far as I am personally concerned, I think the objectives of the bill are excellent; I would hope to be able to suport the objectives as soon as possible; but "as soon as possible," so far as I am concerned, Mr. President, means just this in respect to the creation of any new Government services or subsidies: I shall vote for no new ones until we have found a way to pay for those which already exist. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

RECOGNITION OF CIVILIANS EMPLOYED IN CONSTRUCTION OF PANAMA CANAL

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall be glad to make an explanation of the bill. It provides a system of annuities for those civilian employees who were engaged as much as 3 years on the construction of the Panama Canal during the construction period actually upon the Isthmus. The bill has been favorably reported from the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The able Senator from Tennessee, on one occasion when this matter was up before, made inquiry as to whether there had been ample safeguards about the benefits of the proposed law being available to the widows of employees. An amendment has been placed in the bill, assuring, I think, against the objection the Senator from Tennessee raised; that is to say, the widow, in order to get the benefits of this bill, must actually have been the wife of the worker upon the Canal at least 1 year in residence upon the Isthmus, and, of course, must have been undivorced from him when the benefits accrued.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator what was said by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] earlier today.

There is pending, I understand, a bill regulating citizenship, pay, time, and other things of that kind of a good many employees in the Canal Zone. We have been working very vigorously, actively, and persistently, I may say, for there has been a great difference of opinion about it, to get a bill that would be satisfactory to all the departments and in conformity with the treaty we have with Panama. So I hope the Senator will wait and see that bill, because I think that will take care of the situation which he has in mind in the best possible way. I think we ought to treat all our citizens in the Canal Zone alike; I think we ought not to make distinctions between them; and I want to express the hope that the Senator will let the bill go over until the bill to which I have referred comes up. I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] if the bill to which I am now referring has been reported and is on the calendar? It is, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is section 2 of the civil functions War Department appropriation bill which is now on the calendar. Section 2 embraces the agreement the committee has reached, and it will be submitted to the Senate for its consideration at an early date.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am in accord with every word the able Senators have said, but I think there is some misunderstanding of the nature of this particular bill, and, if the Senator will allow me, I should like to explain it.

In the first place, this bill applies to nobody except civilian employees who were engaged on the construction of the Canal upon the Isthmus itself during the construction period and for as much as 3 years. In the second place, it provides no benefits for any employees who have received any benefits under any other legislation. In other words, this is a class of employees who have received no recognition whatever for their service to the country in the construction of the Canal.

This is what happened, Mr. President:

In 1915 the Congress passed a special law conferring certain benefits upon and extending the thanks of the Congress to the Army and Navy and Public Health officers who were employed upon the Isthmus in the construction of the Canal. They received a raise of one grade in their rank by virtue of that act, and they were given the privilege of permanent retirement upon three-fourths of their annual basic pay. I will state, for example, the cases of two men who were employed. One is Gen. R. E. Wood, who was an officer engaged in the construction of the Canal. Under that law General Wood already has actually received from the Government $74,250.

Another gentleman was Colonel Goethals. Of course, everybody knows that he is the son of General Goethals. He went down there from West Point as a young officer and became engaged in the construction of the Canal. He has received a very large sum of money, $69,468. Those are benefits which have been received under that special legislation by officers who were engaged in the construction of the Canal.

Those three classes—Army, Navy, and Public Health officers—have been graciously and generously provided for by the Congress. Then all the employees of the Canal who remained in the service are subject to the benefits of the pension law which applies to all civil-service employees. That law gives special consideration and particular benefits to those who were Panama Canal employees engaged in the construction of the Canal; so they, too, have been provided for and are provided for under existing law; but these civilian employees—who were the actual soldiers, as it were, who did the work—have not received from the Congress any recognition whatever.

I have here a letter from General Wood about this bill, addressed to me, dated March 27, 1940. He says:

I note that your bill, S. 1162, covering pensions for Panama civilian employees, is before the Senate.

I spent 10 years of my life on the Canal Zone during the construction of the Canal, and received the benefit of an act of Congress, which, however, applied to Army officers only. I feel that I am no more entitled to the benefits of such an act than are the civilian employees, and I feel very strongly that they should receive the benefits of your bill. It is strictly a matter of justice. Many of them have reached the time of life when they are in absolute need.

If there is anything I can do to further the passage of this bill, please let me know. I have written to the President with reference to it, and I should be glad to see him in its behalf if it passes the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

R. E. WOOD.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, how many of these persons are there?

Mr. PEPPER. It is estimated that there are between 1,000 and 1,500 of them. Probably the best estimate is that there are about a thousand of them; and their average age is 63 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. And how much does the bill propose to pay them?

Mr. PEPPER. The estimates vary a little bit; but I believe the most dependable estimates are given by Mr. Bovay, who served under Colonel Gorgas as chief clerk, and also in the Sanitary Department of the Canal. He thinks that on account of the heavy mortality of this class of persons, the amount would not reach over $500,000 a year; and the same expression is given by Mr. Sill, who is now Director of Admeasurement of the Canal. He thinks that about a million or a million and a half dollars would be the maximum.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator whether these men are citizens of the United States?

Mr. PEPPER. The bill expressly provides that they must be citizens to be entitled to the benefits of the bill, and must have been citizens when they were engaged in the construction to get the benefits of the bill.

Mr. President, I have here a letter from former President Theodore Roosevelt, written in 1916, about this particular kind of legislation, which gives a very graphic statement of his advocacy of it. Will the Senator allow me to read the letter? It is written from New York and is dated May 25, 1916:

Mr. C. O. SIMMONS,
Washington Representative, Panama Canal Employees' Association, The New Willard, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SIMMONS: In view of the action taken by Congress in substantially rewarding certain officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Public Health Service who served for more than 3 years in the construction of the Panama Canal by providing for their promotion and retirement upon application, I can see no reason why the civilian employees who served for a similar period, and who, in any event, would not benefit by the liberal pension arrangements provided for the service men, should not be rewarded by a like recognition.

As one who was instrumental in getting this work under way and who has followed its progress with deep interest and keen satisfaction, I am greatly concerned in seeing proper recognition accorded the civilian employees. General Goethals has designated these men as the real builders of the Panama Canal. I sincerely trust that prompt action will be taken by Congress toward the early enactment of legislation to this end.

Very truly yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

I also have here a statement from General Goethals, and I have already read one from General Wood, and another statement from the Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal, John F. Stevens, written April 2, 1938, to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the chairman of the Interoceanic Canals Committee.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Tennessee will recognize that this class of employees is not provided for by any other type of legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, how long is it since these men were employed by the Government?

Mr. PEPPER. Most of them have long since gone out of the Government's employ. That is the reason why they are not entitled to the regular civil-service benefits. If they were still in the service of the Government, they would receive the regular retirement privilege of civil-service employees and Panama Canal employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. They gave up that employment, and they gave up their civil-service status, and now this is a bill to pension them.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, this bill is entirely in recognition of the fact that they went down to an unhealthy place and spent at least 3 years in actual residence in the construction of the Canal, and have not been provided for by any other legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida under the 5-minute rule has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

ARMY BANDMASTERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes", approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 6 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"In addition there shall be created a new rank of bandmaster in the Regular Army in lieu of the present warrant officer band leaders, who shall be appointed and commissioned bandmasters by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 6. Chief bandmaster: A chief bandmaster shall be selected from among experienced Regular Army bandmasters of the service by the Secretary of War, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major while so serving. He shall be charged with the duty for the uniform administration of all authorized Regular Army bands, and shall advise The Adjutant General on all matters relating to the musical organizations in the Regular Army.

"Bandmasters: Bandmasters hereafter commissioned shall be entitled to the same benefits in respect to pay, allowances, and retirements as are applicable to commissioned officers of the various grades of the Regular Army, which said pay, benefits, allowances, and retirements shall be as follows: Bandmasters with less than 5 years' service to rank with second lieutenants; bandmasters with service of from 5 to 10 years to rank with first lieutenants, bandmasters with service of over 10 years to rank with captains. All prior active band-leader service as chief musician, master sergeant, warrant officer, commissioned and enlisted, in the Regular Army shall be credited toward computing the rank present band leaders shall receive on first appointment. There shall be one bandmaster for each authorized band of the Regular Army. First, appointments as bandmasters shall be from band leaders now in the Regular Army who are found to be physically qualified; second, subject to such examination as the President may prescribe, from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians who have had at least 1 year of service in a Regular Army band: Provided, That band leaders now in the service who fail to pass the prescribed physical examination because of physical disability incident to the service shall be placed upon the retired list of the Regular Army with 75 percent of the pay to which they would have been entitled if appointed bandmasters as hereinbefore prescribed: Provided further, That no bandmaster shall suffer the loss of pay by reason of the provisions of this act."

SEC. 2. The limitations now prescribed by law upon the number of commissioned officers of the Regular Army, and the number of commissioned officers in the various grades, is hereby increased to, and only to, the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act. The number of warrant officers authorized by law shall be decreased by the number of band leaders receiving commissions in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately following its enactment.

SEC. 4. This act may be cited as the "Army Bandmasters' Act."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this bill has been called the bandmasters' bill. It provides that there shall be created in the Army a new office, to be called bandmaster. At the present time the bandmasters are warrant officers. The bill will give them the status of commissioned officers of the Army. Similar bills have passed the Senate several times before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5584) to amend the Canal Zone Code was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FLOOD-CONTROL WORKS, ETC., AUTAUGA CREEK, ALA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3552) to authorize the construction of works for flood control and other purposes on Autauga Creek at Prattville, Ala.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill. Is it a general bill, or one relating solely to the place named in the title?

Mr. HILL. It relates solely to one place—to the extension and enlargement of the levees on Autauga Creek at Prattville, Ala.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following works of improvement for the control of destructive floodwaters and other purposes are hereby adopted and authorized to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations for flood control: Autauga Creek at Prattville, Ala.; construction of flood-protection works, in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers and subject to the conditions set forth in House Document Numbered —, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session.

BARRING OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The bill (H. R. 8150) providing for the barring of claims against the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What was the action of the Senate on House bill 8150?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, in order that I may offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma requests unanimous consent that the vote by which House bill 8150 was passed be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the bill which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the word "established", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive individual Indians or Indian tribes of rights or benefits to which they may be entitled under existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, does the General Accounting Office have jurisdiction of the claims which are provided for by the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I so understand.

Mr. VAN NUYS. It was not my understanding that they came within the jurisdiction of the General Accounting Office. This bill only provides for a statute of limitations for claims coming within the jurisdiction of the General Accounting Office.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if there is any misunderstanding, I ask that the bill go over until it can be looked into.

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT FOR WESTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS

The bill (H. R. 7421) to provide for terms of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas at Fayetteville was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRAVELING AND SUBSISTENCE EXPENSES OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES

The bill (H. R. 7015) to reenact section 259 of the Judicial Code, relating to the traveling and subsistence expenses of circuit and district judges, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO WRANGELL, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 7612) for the transfer of funds to the town of Wrangell, Alaska, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIME OF THE MEETING OF THE LEGISLATURE OF ALASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4776) to amend section 6 of the Organic Act of Alaska, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 512), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Convening and sessions of legislature: The Legislature of Alaska shall convene at the capitol at the city of Juneau, Alaska, on the fourth Monday in January in the year 1941 and on the fourth Monday in January every 2 years thereafter; but the said legislature shall not continue in session longer than 60 days in any 2 years unless again convened in extraordinary session by a proclamation of the Governor, which shall set forth the object thereof and give at least 15 days' notice in writing or by telegram or radiogram to each member of said legislature, and in such case shall not continue in session longer than 30 days. The Governor of Alaska is hereby authorized to convene the legislature in extraordinary session for a period not exceeding 30 days when requested to do so by the President of the United States, or when any public danger or necessity may require it."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the act entitled "An act fixing the date for holding elections of a Delegate from Alaska to the House of Representatives and of members of the Legislature of Alaska; fixing the date on which the Legislature of Alaska shall hereafter meet; prescribing the personnel of the Territorial canvassing board, defining its duties, and for other purposes," approved March 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 465), is repealed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the absence of an explanation, I shall ask that this bill go over.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Delegate from Alaska explained the measure to me, and I shall be glad to attempt to repeat the explanation he has given me.

This bill merely proposes to change the time for the convening of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska. The change is desired so as to afford time to close the books and prepare the necessary reports. It would give the Governor the right to notify the members of the legislature of a session by telegraph, as well as mail, and would extend the time of the gatherings from 15 to 30 days. I am informed that this proposed legislation is desired by all those interested in Alaska, as well as by the Department.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection. The Senator has made a very satisfactory statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 248) authorizing the printing as a Senate document of certain monographs published by the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure relative to the practice and procedure of several agencies of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the resolution go over. I wish to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

SELECTION OF ARMY CHIEFS OF BRANCHES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3423) to provide that certain chiefs of branches of the Regular Army shall be selected from among the brigadier generals of the line, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That the number of brigadier generals of the line of the Regular Army is hereby increased from 46 to 50.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this measure provides for increasing the number of brigadier generals of the line of the Regular Army by four without additional cost to the Government. The War Department has requested the provision for these four additional generals in order that the President may select the Chiefs of Infantry, Cavalry, Field

Artillery, and Coast Artillery from among the brigadier generals if he so desires.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why was the language on page 1 of the bill stricken out?

Mr. SHEPPARD. So that the President may still select these chiefs from among colonels as well as brigadier generals.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the bill as introduced provided for exactly what the Senator from Texas has stated.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the amendment strikes that out, and merely provides that the brigadier generals shall be increased in number by four. I should like to know why we should increase the number by four. What is the reason?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Because the present number of 46 are required for present purposes. The War Department does not have a sufficient number of brigadier generals at present to carry out the purposes of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator would increase the number rather than lessen the number?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill increases the number by four without additional cost to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to increase the number of brigadier generals of the line of the Regular Army by four."

ELIGIBILITY FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE DENTAL CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3633) to amend section 24e, National Defense Act, as amended, so as to eliminate the requirement of 2 years' practice for eligibility for appointment in the Dental Corps, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, after line 9, to insert after the word "college" the words "and have been engaged in the practice of his profession for at least 2 years subsequent to graduation, or must have, after such graduation, satisfactorily completed a dental internship of not less than 1 year in a hospital or dispensary", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the next to the last sentence of section 24e, of the National Defense Act, as amended by section 7 of the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), be, and the same is hereby amended to read as follows: "To be eligible for appointment in the Dental Corps a candidate must be a graduate of a recognized dental college and have been engaged in the practice of his profession for at least 2 years subsequent to graduation, or must have, after such graduation, satisfactorily completed a dental internship of not less than 1 year in a hospital or dispensary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 24e, National Defense Act, as amended, so as to add an alternative requirement for appointment in the Dental Corps."

UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS

The bill (H. R. 8238) providing for the incorporation of the United Spanish War Veterans was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF COMMODORE BARNEY CIRCLE

The bill (H. R. 8917) to authorize the construction of a waiting room and comfort station in Commodore Barney Circle, United States Reservation 55–56, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRISON INDUSTRIES REORGANIZATION ADMINISTRATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2303) authorizing the continuance of the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration, established by Executive Order No. 7194 of September 26, 1935, to June 30, 1941, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the duties and functions of the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration, established by Executive Order No. 7194 of September 26, 1935, are hereby continued until June 30, 1941.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the administrative expenses of the Administration an amount of $50,000 for the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] has charge of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, this bill is intended to authorize the continuance of the work of the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration, which was set up by the President on September 21, 1935, under an Executive order, and the bill authorizes an approriation of $50,000.

The Prison Industries Reorganization Administration is one of the most useful agencies the present administration has set up for aiding the States in the very seriously difficult prison problem. In the discussion of the relief bill for 1938 there was a proposal to appropriate $120,000 for this purpose, but the provision was eliminated from the relief bill. However, in the debate in the Senate the Senators interested indicated that if the matter were brought up as a separate bill they would have no objection to it. It is here now as a separate bill, with a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary, and authorizes an appropriation of $50,000 for this agency, which, in its field, is invaluable to the people of America in my judgment,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is this a permanent agency which will call for increased appropriations as the years go by, as most agencies do?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think not. It is under the authority of the President's Reorganization Act, and will from time to time be subject to his orders, as they will be sent to the Congress hereafter.

Upon the invitation of 30 States through their Governors, this organization went voluntarily into the States. I have a record here, which was carefully compiled, showing how important it has been to the State officials in the 30 States into which the organization went on the invitation of the Governors. When we consider the difficult prison problem which the people of the country faced 4 or 5 years ago, and upon which great progress has been made, it will be realized that the sum recommended is very small. When we consider the $25,000,000 we appropriate every year for fighting crime in the United States, and when we reflect on what this organization has done to establish penal systems in the United States, and to give the States an opportunity to get away from the limitations imposed by the Sumner-Ashurst Act and others, I am sure the bill will be approved. The law sponsored by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Whitefield against Ohio they decided it was not fair that the States not be able to use their prisoners on work for things which the States needed in order to safeguard their interests themselves. The American Federation of Labor supports the bill and the activities of the organization, and a member of the American federation appeared before the committee. I do not think any just complaint can be made against the fine work this organization has done.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has well described the bill. But in reply to the question propounded by the Senator from Utah, I may state that the bill will expire by the flowing of time on June 30, 1941. The provision is "are hereby continued until June 30, 1941." The appropriation authorized is for the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. KING. Then it does not perpetuate this beyond the year.

Mr. ASHURST. It does not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. H. WOOTTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 993) for the relief of J. H. Wootton, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "$97.06" and insert "$21.14"; on line 6, to strike out "Provided, That any amount so found due the claimant pursuant to this act may be applied in satisfaction of any income-tax indebtedness outstanding and unpaid at that time," and to insert a new section at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of J. H. Wootton against the United States and the claim of the United States against J. H. Wootton involving mileage for the use of his personally owned automobile for transportation from Washington, D. C., to San Francisco, Calif., in 1934, and the return trip in 1935, upon the basis of the estimated cost by rail for the personal transportation of Mr. Wootton and without regard to section 209 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 405).

SEC. 2. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $21.14, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the amount found due J. H. Wootton.

SEC. 3. Any amount so found due the claimant pursuant to this act may be applied in satisfaction of any income-tax indebtedness outstanding and unpaid at that time.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. T. JENSEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3233) for the relief of C. T. Jensen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$195.50" and to insert "$20.50", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. George C. Hamilton of McComb, Miss., the sum of $250, and to the legal guardian of Nanette Anderson, a minor, of McComb, Miss., the sum of $500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of personal injuries received by them on May 28, 1938, when the car in which they were riding collided with a Government truck owned by the National Park Service and driven by one Emmett Deer, an employee of the Percy Quin State Park, said collision being entirely the fault of the driver of the Government truck: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

MORRISON-KNUDSEN CO., INC., AND W. C. COLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7855) for the relief of Morrison-Knudsen Co., Inc., and W. C. Cole, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of Morrison-Knudsen Co., Inc., and W. C. Cole, for reimbursement of the increased costs incurred in the procurement of sand conforming to specifications in the performance by said company of contract W-777-eng-221, dated September 6, 1938, covering construction of the major portion of the embankment and rough excavation for the spillway of the Fort Supply Dam located on Wolf Creek near Supply in Woodward County, Okla., and to allow in full and final settlement of the claim the sum of not to exceed $37,470.49. There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $37,470.49, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, this bill for the relief of the Morrison-Knudsen Co. was recommended by the Comptroller General. It seems that a contract was entered into by the Government and the claimant for the building of a dam and the sand which was to be used in the building of the dam was supposed to have been taken from a certain spot, which was agreed upon by the Government engineers as well as the company. It turned out afterward that the particular sand contracted for was not suitable, so the company had to obtain other sand from a place 400 miles away. The amount asked for, eighteen-thousand-and-some-odd dollars, is to pay for the difference in freight and other costs.

Mr. KING. Is the payment of the amount recommended by the Comptroller?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; as I have just indicated, the Comptroller General suggested the bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF DR. B. L. PURSIFULL ET AL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,681.84"; in line 6, after the name "Pursifull"; to strike out "$2,245" and insert "$1,138.65"; in line 7, after the name "Pursifull", to strike out "$250" and insert "$182"; in line 8, after the name "Pursifull", to strike out "$250" and insert "$106"; in line 9, after the word "and", to strike out "$1,850" and insert "$1,096"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "and", to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$961", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,681.84 to the estate of Dr. B. I. Pursifull; $1,138.65 to Grace Pursifull; $182 to the legal representative of Ralph Pursifull; $106 to the legal representative of Eugene Pursifull; and $1,096 to the legal representative of Bobby Pursifull, each of whom are infants under the age of 21 years; and $961 to Dora Little, all residing at McKee, Jackson County, Ky., in full settlement of all claims for damages against the Government of the United States on account of bodily injuries and damages received by them and each of them on or about June 6, 1937, when the car in which they were riding was struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck assigned to the Forest Service, near McKee, Ky.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3838) to protect trade-mark owners, producers, distributors, and the general public against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of competitive commodities bearing a distinguishing trade-mark, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1460) to provide uniform reciprocal hospitalization in any Army or Navy hospital for retired personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] previously made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1461) to remove discriminations against retired Army enlisted personnel and to equalize hospitalization and domiciliary benefits of retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over in compliance with the request previously made by the Senator from Utah.

EXPORTATION OF TOBACCO SEED AND PLANTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3530) to prohibit the exportation of tobacco seed and plants, except for experimental purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to export any tobacco seed and/or live tobacco plants from the United States or any Territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any foreign country, port, or place, unless such exportation and/or transportation is in pursuance of a written permit granted by the Secretary of Agriculture. Such permit shall be granted by the Secretary only upon application therefor and after proof satisfactory to him that such seed or plants are to be used for experimental purposes only.

SEC. 2. Any persons violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is the chairman of the committee which favorably reported the bill, and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] sponsored it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the bill makes it unlawful to export any tobacco seed unless a permit is granted by the Secretary of Agriculture. A similar bill was passed by the Congress at the last session.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the present situation, if anyone should export tobacco seed, and thus help the tobacco growers of other nations which are endeavoring to cut down the exports of tobacco from this country——

Mr. BYRD. It is especially important in view of the British embargo, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks at this point a speech made by me at Danville, Va., on March 13, 1940, with respect to this proposed legislation.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROHIBIT THE EXPORTATION OF AMERICAN SEED TOBACCO

A most important step to protect the American tobacco farmer is the passage of a bill to prohibit the exportation of our tobacco seed. A bill to prevent such foreign shipments of tobacco seed was passed by Congress a year ago, but it was vetoed. I have introduced it again and am working in cooperation with Congressman BURCH in this and all other matters for the protection of the tobacco growers.

In view of the embargo placed on tobacco by Great Britain, it appears to me that the passage of this bill is even more necessary today than it was a year ago.

Until a few years ago cigarette tobacco was grown only in the United States. British manufacturers own and control a large percentage of the business in foreign countries, and until recently they purchased their tobacco from the United States. These foreign exporters, in order to get cheaper tobacco, conceived the idea of getting American tobacco seed from American farmers through their local buyers and growing a substitute in foreign countries for our tobacco grown in the United States. Tobacco from American seed is being grown in the British Empire—in Canada, India, Australia, Rhodesia, and other provinces. It was planted there by their farmers who were encouraged to grow this type of tobacco as a substitute for the American type.

It was discovered in foreign areas that they could use our seed and from this seed could grow a substitute for our tobacco, but that after several years the tobacco would revert to the native type of the foreign country and lose its commercial value, and new American seed was again necessary. The American flue-cured tobacco is indigenous to the southern section of the United States. The soil and climate of this section of the United States provide the properties which make this flue-cured tobacco the best smoking tobacco in the world, and it will not retain these properties when planted in other countries, even as a substitute, for longer than 2 or 3 years. Therefore, it is necessary for foreign countries to secure annually large quantities of our tobacco seed.

Japan is getting our seed and scientifically encouraging farmers in Manchuria and elsewhere to grow a substitute for American tobacco, and in six or seven provinces of China they are growing from our seed a substitute for our tobacco. India for a long time has been one of the large tobacco-growing countries. Now, under the direction and with the encouragement of the British Government, India is getting our seed and producing millions of pounds of tobacco as a substitute for American cigarette tobacco.

The British Government has placed a much higher tax on tobacco imported from the United States than on that which they grow from our seed in their own possessions, notwithstanding the fact that their substitute is grown from our seed and displaces our business.

Many other countries—Turkey, Greece, and Sumatra—protect their tobacco industries and will not allow their seed or plants to be sent to other countries for commercial purposes, for they, like the United States, grow a particular type of tobacco.

The purpose of the bill introduced by me to prevent the exportation of American tobacco seed is to prevent the ultimate destruction of the export tobacco industry of this country. This measure does not involve the rights of nations to secure seed or plants for experimental purposes.

In 1928 when British India began to grow a substitute for American flue-cured tobacco from seed sent them from the United States, they produced 32,000 pounds. Ten years thereafter, in 1938, this production increased to 36,000,000 pounds.

It is certainly not fair or reasonable for the British Government to place an embargo, as has been done, on the importation of Virginia tobacco and at the same time for the United States Government to permit the exportation of American tobacco seed to compete directly with our own product.

I, therefore, think that one of the most important matters before the tobacco growers of America is to insist that the bill vetoed a year ago shall be passed again by Congress, and that the exportation of American tobacco seed, enabling our foreign competitors to take away our markets, be prohibited.

CUSTOMHOUSE BUILDING, MIAMI, FLA.

The bill (S. 3243) to provide for a customhouse building at Miami, Fla., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill? There is no report on it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. ANDREWS] sponsored this particular measure. My understanding is that the bill was introduced at the request of the Treasury Department, and it was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

I hope the Senator will have no objection to the bill and that it may pass, in order that the work may be gotten under way as soon as possible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a number of communications from various cities and towns asking for appropriations for imperatively needed public buildings, and in each instance I have replied that a general appropriation bill was required. I communicated with one of the agencies which has charge of the public buildings. The agency told me that it needed a larger appropriation to meet the demands, but none had yet been made. It seemed to me—and I so replied to a number of those who communicated with me—that it would be perhaps unfair to try to single out one city, or town, or one agency, for public buildings, when others needed public buildings, and it was contemplated that a large appropriation would have to be made in order to cover the demands of the Government.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator fails to distinguish between customhouses and buildings of that sort, and post offices and public buildings of that character. The Senator from Tennessee can better explain the bill than I can.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think it was in 1926 that a general bill was passed authorizing the Treasury Department to erect public buildings. It did not limit it to customhouses or to post offices, or to court buildings. There was no limitation at all except with respect to the question of money. At that time there was a plan established of spending so much money, and that money was to be distributed generally throughout the country. That plan has worked well. Of course, the amount to which each State is entitled under that general building plan is limited somewhat, and it can be spent for post-office buildings, for customhouses, or for any other Federal public buildings.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator consent to the temporary deferment of this bill, with the privilege of calling it up later?

Mr. DANAHER. Before we leave the subject, may I ask the Senator from Florida if the Secretary of the Treasury has asked for this building?

Mr. PEPPER. My understanding is that he has.

Mr. DANAHER. There is no committee report to assist us.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the reason I requested that the bill be temporarily passed over.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INCREASE IN THE WHITE HOUSE POLICE FORCE

The bill (H. R. 8540) to authorize an increase in the White House police force was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITIZENSHIP DAY

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship was announced as next in order.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, while I have no objection to this measure—in fact, I favor it—I have been asked by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to have action on it postponed until opportunity is given for a further discussion as to the differences between the House and the Senate bills.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before we pass over consideration of the measure, I desire on behalf of the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and myself to propose an amendment, which I ask to lie on the table. In the title, after the word "proclaim", it is proposed to insert "I Am an American"; and on page 2, line 1, after the word "as", insert the words "I Am an American." The language will then read "set aside as I Am an American Citizenship Day." I ask that the amendment may be noted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I wish to say that I very strongly favor the joint resolution. It was introduced in the House by Representative JOHNS, of Wisconsin, and I introduced the companion measure in the Senate.

The suggestion for the joint resolution came from the State of Wisconsin. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary, before voting the joint resolution out favorably, saw fit in its wisdom to amend it by striking out the third Sunday in May as the day to be designated as Citizenship Day, and inserting in lieu thereof June 14, to be designated as Citizenship Day.

I have a letter before me from the superintendent of schools of Manitowoc, Wis., chairman of the committee on induction into citizenship of the National Education Association of the United States. This gentleman, Hugh S. Bonar, does not favor the amendment changing the date to June 14, for this reason: He states that he believes that if the joint resolution is to be effective, and if the program envisioned under it is to be carried out, then the day ought to be a day when the schools of the country are in session, and not one when the schools are in vacation, or recess, because he feels that the success of the program envisioned under the joint resolution will depend largely on how the program is sponsored and developed by educational authorities and the educational forces of the country.

In that connection, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from Mr. Bonar be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Manitowoc, Wis., April 9, 1940.

Senator LISTER HILL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HILL: We learned through a news release yesterday that the Senate Education and Labor Committee that has been considering the joint resolution on Citizenship Day had voted to change the recommended date from the third Sunday in May to Flag Day, June 14. We consider this a very serious set-back. Will you and your colleagues do everything you can to restore the original date in the bill as the resolution was passed in the House?

The success of this whole program, in our judgment, will rest upon the question of whether or not it can be developed under educational authorities in the various States. This development will be very awkward and extremely impractical in most instances if the date for the final culminating ceremonies is in June when most of the public schools in the Nation are closed.

Kindly let me know what you are able to do.

Very sincerely yours,

HUGH BONAR, Chairman.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have in the last few moments conferred with the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, which considered the joint resolution, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. So far as I am advised, they have no pride of opinion as to what particular day should be selected, and while I am not attempting to speak for them, I am quite certain that the suggestion of the able Senator from Alabama would meet with no opposition from them.

In my opinion, the joint resolution is important. It is more than a gesture, and if it be a gesture, as I said the other day, it is a beau geste—a beautiful gesture.

American citizenship is a high privilege. There can come to no person on this earth a greater honor or a greater opportunity than to be an American citizen. I do not wish to see the resolution defeated or lost on the mere matter of the fixing of a day.

I may say in passing that I appreciate what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] has said and what the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] has said.

Some years ago the able senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] moved with ability and with zeal on a bill along this line. The committee has had splendid support and valuable suggestions from the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

So now, whether the joint resolution be objected to or not, I do not wish to see the joint resolution lost because of the mere matter of the date. There are strong arguments for a date other than Flag Day, but a considerable number of the members of the committee, and a considerable number of other Senators, do not wish to create any more holidays, for various reasons.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the objection of the Senator from New York, as I understood the objection, did not arise because of the change in the date provided by the committee amendment, but because the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization had requested the measure to go over. As I stated in the beginning, I introduced a companion resolution, and I am very much interested in it. I think it is really an important resolution. I have faith to believe that those who are interested in this resolution, together with the subcommittee and the distinguished and able chairman of the Judiciary Committee, can work out the matter of a date and agree on a date which will be satisfactory to everyone, and which will best carry out the purpose and the intent of the resolution.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in order that I may make my position clear, first of all, I introduced a bill of this character at the present session of the Congress. Therefore, I am in favor of the object sought to be attained by the pending measure.

I also wish to commend the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the chairman of the subcommittee for the kind and considerate treatment they accorded us when we appeared before them in support of the joint resolution. I want the joint resolution passed. I should hesitate to object if I thought such action would prevent its passage at this session. However, at the request of the Commissioner of Naturalization, who feels that he may be able to make a contribution to the solution of this problem, I am asking merely that it go over for a short period of time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I yield to the Senator from California, or I yield the floor if he so desires.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, on behalf of certain Californians who came 3,000 miles across the continent in support of this measure, I wish to express their thanks to the chairman and to the members of the Judiciary Committee, who gave of their time that this measure might be adopted.

Of course, the request which is made by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] is an appropriate one. We who favor the joint resolution have no desire to preclude him or those whom he represents from presenting any objection they may have. Inasmuch as the joint resolution is going over because of his objection, we might all get together subsequently and endeavor to work out a solution of the problem presented. We should do so with celerity, to avoid undue delay.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. As I understand, the objection from the Department, which came to my attention early today, is that the date suggested is a little too late. All arrangements have been made. The sponsors of the joint resolution have suggested an earlier date. Therefore I suggest that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the chairman of the subcommittee which handled the bill give consideration to an amendment which would change the date in the bill to the date now in the House bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Very good.

Mr. MEAD. That would enable the bill to be passed immediately.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Has the Senator any suggestion to make as to the proper date?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has the floor. Several Senators are seeking recognition. To whom does the Senator from California yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield first to the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. I suggest that we make the date the third Sunday in May, which is the date in the House bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is that date satisfactory to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HILL. Entirely satisfactory.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is that date satisfactory to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I was chairman of the subcommittee which considered the matter. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] was also a member of the subcommittee. The date suggested is satisfactory. I see no reason why the joint resolution should not be passed now, with the amendment of the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], in which we are very much interested.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the chairman of the Judiciary Committee will consent, we might change the date right now.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the able Senator, I am quite content that the date shall be the third Sunday in May.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair observes that if the Senate should reject the committee amendment, the date in the House bill would automatically be restored.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York withdraw his objection?

Mr. MEAD. I do, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the words "That the", it is proposed to strike out "third Sunday in May each year" and insert in lieu thereof "14th day of June each year (Flag Day)."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] has offered an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, after the word "as", it is proposed to insert "I Am an American."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, may the RECORD show that that amendment was offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]? It is his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The RECORD so shows.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. Without objection——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let us see how the language would read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, after the word "as", it is proposed to insert "I Am an American."

Mr. BARKLEY. So as to read, "I Am an American Citizenship Day." That would be ridiculous.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is hardly what we desire.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not think we want to insert the amendment at that particular point.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Nobody wants to put it in.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to call attention to the incongruity of the language if the amendment should be agreed to. I do not think the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the particular phraseology was suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. It is thought very essential that that phraseology be put into the joint resolution. I was given a copy of what was desired to be the amended joint resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is what is desired; and, inasmuch as it is desired, I am willing to adopt it. The language is, "I am an American."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment should come before the word "as", and not after.

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Instead of following the word "as", it should precede the word "as."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California modify his amendment as suggested?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], as modified, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, after the word "aside" and before the word "as", it is proposed to insert, "I am an American", so as to read:

I am an American as Citizenship Day and that the President of the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is even more ridiculous than it was before. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been suggested that the joint resolution be temporarily passed over, and that Senators withdraw and write their amendment and return later. Without objection, the joint resolution will be passed over.

NONPOLITICAL SELECTION OF EMPLOYEES—BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1169, Senate bill 282, to provide that State employees employed in connection with programs carried on with the assistance of the Federal Government be selected in accordance with a nonpolitical civil-service plan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 282, Calendar No. 1169. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DANAHER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. NEELY. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment. I am trying to get the bill off the calendar.

Mr. President, so far as the Senate is concerned, the principal objective of the bill was achieved when this body recently passed the so-called little Hatch Act, Senate bill 3046. I therefore ask that Senate bill 282 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 217) to authorize the appropriation of an additional sum of $425,000 for Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1940, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the United States continue its participation in the New York World's Fair during 1940.

SEC. 2. For this purpose Public Resolution No. 53, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved July 9, 1937, as amended, authorizing said participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939, and authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes, as hereby amended, is extended and made applicable to the continuance of the participation of the United States in the said New York World's Fair, 1940, in the same manner and to the same extent and for the same purposes as originally provided in said Public Resolution No. 53.

SEC. 3. That the United States New York World's Fair Commission is hereby authorized to produce (whether through a governmental agency or otherwise) and sell engravings, etchings, or other reproductions and governmental publications, not prohibited by law. All proceeds from the sale of these articles shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation made for carrying into effect the provisions of the aforesaid Public Resolution No. 53, as amended, providing for the participation of the United States in the New York World's Fair.

SEC. 4. In addition to the sum of $3,000,000 authorized to be appropriated by the aforesaid Public Resolution No. 53 for the participation of the United States in the New York World's Fair, 1939, and appropriated under title I of Public Act No. 354, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved August 25, 1937, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $275,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the joint resolution carries any appropriation or any obligation of a monetary nature?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the joint resolution, as originally introduced, carried an appropriation of $425,000 for the continuance of the United States World's Fair Commission and the Government's participation in the New York World's Fair for an additional year. The committee reduced the appropriation from $425,000 to $275,000. The money will be necessary for the continuation of the participation of the Government in the World's Fair for an additional year.

A similar joint resolution has been reported favorably by the House committee to the House of Representatives. It had the recommendation of the State Department and the Budget Bureau for the major amount, but the amount was reduced, as I have said, from $425,000 to $275,000.

Mr. KING. It does not call for the Government of the United States to pay any of the costs of the fair per se but merely its own expenses.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes,' approved July 9, 1937, to provide for participation in the New York World's Fair, 1940, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes."

The bill (H. R. 8446) to amend the act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931, as amended," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act shall be construed and interpreted in every respect as having been in effect on and after July 1, 1939 (the effective date of the act of April 24, 1939, which it amends), and, accordingly, any retired officer is hereby authorized to avail himself of the benefits of these provisions, as follows:

(b) A retired officer who did not elect to receive a reduced annuity and a life annuity payable to his surviving widow, as provided in section 26 (e) of the act of February 23, 1931, as amended by the act of April 24, 1939, is hereby authorized, within 6 months of the effective date of this act, to make such an election, but only in accordance with the additional provisions of the aforesaid section 26 (e) as provided in section 2 of this act: Provided, That such an election shall be effective on the first day of the calendar month in which the application is filed.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the first day of the calendar month following the date of its approval by the President.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 228) for an annual appropriation to meet the share of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the joint resolution. There are many of these international committees and organizations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The author of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, does not appear to be present at the moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PARTICIPATION BY UNITED STATES IN ROME UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 213) authorizing the acceptance of the invitation of the Government of Italy to participate in Rome Universal Exhibition to be held at Rome, Italy, in 1942.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; let us have an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who reported the joint resolution, is not present.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this is a joint resolution which I am sponsoring, and I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will explain it. We have not only requests but Budget estimates and demands made for the payment of large expenses to almost innumerable exhibitions of this kind almost all over the world, sending numbers of people to conferences of one kind or another held in various nations of the earth. We ought to be more careful about how we make these authorizations, because as soon as an authorization is made then the Budget Bureau immediately sends in an estimate, oftentimes for a very large sum, to enable a number of people to go to conferences and exhibitions abroad.

I will be glad to hear the Senator from New York, but, frankly, I hope he will let the joint resolution go over for the day, so that we may look into it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me, in view of the confused conditions, not only in Germany and Russia, but in various other parts of Europe, as well as in Rome, we ought to be as reasonably sure as possible that there will not be a war in Italy. I should not feel like authorizing an appropriation of $2,000,000 now for an exhibition in Germany or Rome or Brussels, and, much as I believe in Italy, and in the international exhibitions, I think that we might pretermit an appropriation at this time.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this joint resolution came to me with the recommendation of the State Department. They evidently had in mind the situation that engrosses the Old World at this time. The joint resolution has been recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. It will permit this country to participate in the International World's Fair to be held at Rome, Italy, in 1942, and, in some measure, show our reciprocal friendship to a nation that is now appropriating money for its further participation in two American world fairs, one in New York and the other at San Francisco.

Mr. President, since 1935 the Italian people have been preparing for the Rome Universal Exhibition to be held in 1942. It is their idea to make it the most important international fair ever held in Italy and they are looking forward to it with a great deal of pride and enthusiasm.

The Italian authorities plan to open the exhibition on April 21, 1942, and have it remain open for a period of 6 months. It will occupy an area of approximately 1,000 acres located in the suburbs of the city of Rome, and many of the buildings will be of permanent construction, as the Italian Government proposes at the expiration of the exhibition to use the site as a permanent center of its Government activities. The building which will serve as their foreign office is now nearing completion, and there is every indication that the ambitious project of founding a new quarter of Rome will be successfully pushed to its conclusion.

The plan, pictures of actual construction and models, show the extent of the Italian Government's preparation for the exhibition.

The following 26 Governments have agreed to participate in the exhibition, namely, Great Britain, France, Belgium, Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay, Germany, Spain, Greece, Japan, Yugoslavia, Portugal, Turkey, Rumania, China, Bulgaria, Lithuania, Hungary, Switzerland, Ireland, Iraq, Iran, Slovakia, the Vatican, Manchukuo, and San Marino. In this connection, France has appointed as its commissioner general to the exhibition M. René Besnard, former French Ambassador to Italy, and has selected the site of their proposed pavilion. Sites have also been selected by Great Britain, Brazil, and Germany. The Argentine Government proposes to build a permanent structure to be used as an Embassy at the close of the exhibition.

Italy in recent years has participated in the more important international expositions and fairs held in this country, namely, the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial in 1926, the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago in 1933 and 1934, and the New York World's Fair and the Golden Gate International Exposition in 1939. The Italian Government has also accepted the invitation of this Government to participate in the New York World's Fair and the Golden Gate International Exposition during 1940. It will be recalled that during the Chicago Exposition, Italy sent a fleet of 24 aircraft under Commander General Balbo to visit the exposition. Italy expended approximately $500,000 for its exhibit and pavilions at the exposition. For its participation in the New York World's Fair, Italy spent approximately $3,000,000, the greater part of these funds being expended in the United States, and it sent to the Golden Gate International Exposition a valuable collection of paintings of early masters.

The exposition authorities are planning exhibits along the following lines: Sciences and arts, social activities, agriculture, mines and quarries, furnishings, building, printing and journalism, clothing, metallurgy, chemistry, food and sundry agricultural industries, textile industries, electricity, gas and water, and banking, insurance, cooperation, and commerce.

The appropriate participation by the United States in international exhibitions is highly desirable as they are strong factors in promoting international understanding and goodwill. They serve to acquaint large numbers of people with the nature of the characteristic products of other countries and reveal to them the immense benefits of international trade. Suitable participation by this country in the Rome exhibition may provide a direct opportunity for the effective promotion of our foreign commerce, as Italy to a great extent is dependent upon international trade. A display of the products of the United States at the exhibition would undoubtedly contribute materially to the development of the foreign trade of the United States not only with Italy but with other European countries whose nationals undoubtedly will visit the Rome exhibition. In this connection the American Ambassador at Rome, the Honorable William Phillips, has expressed the opinion that participation in the exhibition would be of immense value to the United States from the standpoint of commercial and other international relations of this country.

This Government has participated in several international expositions and fairs, the most recent being the Brazilian Centennial Exposition, held at Rio de Janeiro in 1922 and 1923, for which an appropriation of $1,000,000 was authorized by the Congress. In 1929 and 1930 we participated in the Ibero-American Exposition at Seville, Spain, for which an appropriation of $700,000 was made for the expenses of this Government's participation. In 1931 we participated in the International Colonial and Overseas Exposition at Paris, for which $300,000 was appropriated; also, in the International Exposition of Art and Technique in Modern Life, at Paris in 1937 and 1938, for which Congress appropriated $200,000.

Recent participation by this Government in international expositions and fairs in this country has been the New York World's Fair of 1939, for which an appropriation of $3,000,000 was made, and the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939, for which Congress appropriated $1,500,000.

Mr. President, as I have said, Italy appropriated $3,000,000 for its exhibit at the New York World's Fair; it will be called upon to make an additional supplemental appropriation to continue its participation at that fair, and we are assured that it will do so. It is also making plans to continue its exhibit at the world's fair in San Francisco. Italy has always cooperated with this country and has participated, as I recall, in every one of our international expositions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I feel, as does the Senator, that when a foreign nation cooperates with us and participates in our expositions we might well cooperate with it and participate in its expositions, but in the present situation, with most of Europe at war, and nobody knowing how it is going to come out, it seems to me that we should wait a while before we make this appropriation; that we should not make it this year. There will be ample time next year to make this appropriation and provide for our exhibit in Rome. I would have no objection to having an exhibit at Rome at all; I think we should have one there by all means, but the present, it seems to me, is a very inapt time to make such an outlay as is proposed.

Mr. MEAD. The point that the Senator makes that we could well put this off for a year is not in accordance with the information which I have. The plans for a fair of this magnitude must, of necessity, be completed at least 2 years before the exhibition is opened to the public. The plans are already available; 26 nations as I have said, have either acquired sites and initiated construction of their buildings or have provided appropriations.

The second point the Senator makes, that the confusion that is now rife in Europe might lead to greater involvement, evidently is beside the question, because if war comes to Italy, as we hope it will not, there will be no world's fair, and we will not invest our money.

It occurs to me that it would be an excellent gesture on our part not to delay our participation in this world's fair but to show a friendly, neighborly spirit toward a nation that is doing the same thing now toward us by agreeing to participate in our exhibition.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator has convinced me that I am in error. I withdraw objection to the joint resolution.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator from New York has said, I wish to emphasize the time element by referring to our participation in the world's fair at Paris in 1938. The Senator himself was there, and he is aware that, because it was not known whether we would participate until very late, we had practically no worth while exhibit at all. We had a pavilion there with some pictures, but really nothing properly representing the United States. The explanation was that our action was delayed to such an extent that there was not sufficient time, and the appropriation was not adequate, anyway.

I think the Senator from New York is correct in urging this authorization at this time. I wish to say further that I appreciate the diligence and the sincerity of the Senator from New York in his effort to bring about this—he called it a "gesture" but it is more than a gesture; it is a very substantial effort to bring about greater accord between our country and the countries in the Mediterranean region of the world. That is especially true of Italy.

Personally I thank the Senator from New York for taking the initiative in urging this legislation. He came before the Committee on Foreign Relations and made a very excellent statement about it, and the committee reported the measure unanimously to the calendar. I hope the joint resolution will pass.

Mr. MEAD. I appreciate the contribution made by our able leader.

I wish to say that the passage of the joint resolution will further cement the friendship which exists between the two most powerful neutral nations in the world.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make one observation? I think the appeal which the Senator from New York has made is very convincing. I favor international exchanges and participation in various international conferences and international expositions. Of course Italy, being a democratic nation in more ways than one, is entitled to the friendship of the United States, and I think anything that would bring the two nations closer together and promote international fellowship and good will should be encouraged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to accept the invitation extended by the Government of Italy to the Government of the United States to participate in the Rome Universal Exhibition, scheduled to be held at Rome, Italy, in 1942.

SEC. 2. The President is authorized to appoint a Commissioner General to represent the United States at the Rome Universal Exhibition (hereinafter called the Exhibition), who shall serve in such capacity without compensation, and to designate, upon the nomination of the Secretary of State (hereinafter called the Secretary), a Commissioner, who may be a regular official of the Government, in which case he shall serve without additional compensation. The duties of the Commissioner General and Commissioner shall be prescribed by the Secretary and may include duties hereby vested in him.

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $2,000,000 to enable the Secretary to incur all expenses necessary to provide for the proper, suitable, and adequate participation by the United States in the Exhibition; which expenses may include the salary of the Commissioner and the employment of personnel in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, by contract or otherwise, without regard to the civil-service rules and regulations, the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, or section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), and including the reimbursement of any other appropriation from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase of uniforms for attendants at the Exhibition; travel expenses in accordance with standard Government travel regulations, including such expenses of the Commissioner General and Commissioner; purchase of books of reference and periodicals; ice and drinking water for office purposes; purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of one passenger-carrying automobile and hire of such vehicles for official use in Rome; printing and binding; and expenses of entertainment: Provided, That payment for telephone service, rents, and subscriptions to periodicals may be made in advance.

(b) The Secretary is authorized within the limits of the appropriation to erect, without regard to section 3734 of the Revised Statutes (40 U. S. C. 267), temporary buildings or structures for the housing of Government and private exhibits, to provide for suitable landscaping, to furnish and install all facilities necessary for the proper operation of such buildings, and the maintenance thereof.

SEC. 4. The heads of the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with the Secretary in carrying out the purposes hereof by the loan or preparation of exhibits, and for such purpose the Secretary is authorized, with the consent of the heads thereof, to allot such sums for direct expenditure as he may deem necessary from the appropriation made under authority hereof to cooperating departments or establishments, which allotments shall be available for all necessary expenses hereinbefore detailed to effectuate such cooperation.

SEC. 5. Upon the termination of the United States participation in the Exhibition, the Secretary shall dispose, in such manner as he may see fit, of any exhibits, buildings, or materials belonging to the United States which he shall determine to be of no further value to the Government. Exhibits furnished or loaned by other Government agencies may be returned to them and may be restored when necessary to a condition suitable for participation in other exhib tions.

SEC. 6. The Secretary may receive contributions of funds from States, municipalities, or private organizations and individuals to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, such funds to be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds appropriated under authority hereof. He is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow material or exhibits, and to accept the voluntary services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations to aid in carrying out the general purposes hereof. At the termination of this Government's participation in the Exhibition, the Secretary shall dispose of any unused portion of such contributed material in the manner agreed upon with the contributors or in accordance with section 5 of this joint resolution. In case of the abandonment of any material by a contributor, the Secretary may retain such material or otherwise dispose of same as he may see fit: Provided, That in the case of sale thereof the proceeds, less expenditures incurred incident to sale, shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 7. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by the Secretary or such official or officials as the Secretary may designate, except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments and independent establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, nor permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount appropriated under authority hereof except as to contributions provided for in section 6.

SEC. 8. The United States Commissioners of the New York World's Fair and the Golden Gate International Exposition at San Francisco, Calif., respectively, are hereby authorized to make available such exhibits and materials in their possession as the Secretary may deem suitable for exhibit purposes at the exhibition, and the Secretary is authorized at the termination of this Government's participation to dispose of the exhibits in accordance with the provisions of this joint resolution.

SEC. 9. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the termination of this Government's participation in the exhibition, a detailed statement of all expenditures and such other reports as may be deemed proper. CITIZENSHIP DAY

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 1421, House Joint Resolution 437, which we were discussing a few moments ago. We have all agreed upon language which will be imported from California into the resolution, and, if it is satisfactory, I should like to present it and have it passed upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to recurring to House Joint Resolution 437?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, after the word "as" it is proposed to strike out "Citizenship," and insert "I am an American," and on page 2, line 6, after the word "citizenship," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "and the day shall be designated as 'I Am an American Day.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to offer an amendment to the joint resolution?

Mr. DANAHER. No. I desire to offer an amendment in the second whereas of the preamble, which refers to "2,000,000 young men and women in the United States each year reaching the voting age of 21 years." The emphasis of this joint resolution and the purpose behind it is not to develop the thought of the voting age. I think that should be left out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the passage of the joint resolution amendments to the preamble will be in order. They are not in order at this time.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the title will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the title, in the second line, after the word "proclaim", it is proposed to strike out "citizenship" and insert "I am an American."

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no objection, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the title is agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. I move an amendment to strike out in the first whereas of the preamble the word "voting", if that has not been done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that one of the objects behind this movement and those who have sponsored it has been to call attention to the obligation of young persons who are arriving at the age of citizenship—which, of course, is 21 years—to exercise their right of citizenship by voting. That is one of the fundamental things the sponsors of the bill are seeking to do—to encourage the younger generations to exercise the right of citizenship. That is why this movement has enlisted the support and enthusiasm of a very large number of substantial persons in this country.

I do not know that it is vital to have the word "voting" in the preamble; but it ought not to be eliminated on the theory that the matter of exercising the right of suffrage, which is the right of citizenship, is not an important part of this program, and the theory upon which this day is to be set apart in order that it may be emphasized as the duty of all those who are arriving at the age of citizenship to exercise the right as well as to enjoy it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, as the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] has stated, I discussed the matter with him; and there was no objection from him, so far as I understood, in behalf of the committee, to the amendment I am offering. I think that is a correct statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, all the young men and women of America who become 21 years of age know that they will have the right to vote anyway. This joint resolution is so important in its other phases that we do not want to have it stopped because the word "voting" happens to appear in it. I think what my good friend from Connecticut anticipates, we will try to explain to them—that having arrived at the age of 21 years, they are entitled to vote. I presume they know that anyway.

So far as I am concerned, there is no objection to having the word "voting" stricken from the joint resolution.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, there is no particular objection, except, as the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has emphasized, that the presence of the word in the joint resolution tends to emphasize the very purpose of the joint resolution, that these young persons are now coming to the responsibilities of citizenship. There is no greater responsibility than that very responsibility of voting.

The fact that the Senator from Connecticut has offered an amendment will not stop the joint resolution. Let the amendment be voted on. The Senate may vote on it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Alabama that the only reason why I did not object to the consideration of the joint resolution itself was on the representation that that amendment would be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a correct statement.

Mr. HILL. If that be the case, I have no objection to the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to strike from the preamble the word "voting."

The amendment to the preamble was agreed to.

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim I Am An American Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship."

The joint resolution, as passed, is as follows:

Whereas some 2,000,000 young men and women in the United States each year reach the age of 21 years; and

Whereas it is desirable that the sovereign citizens of our Nation be prepared for the responsibilities and impressed with the significance of their status in our self-governing Republic: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the third Sunday in May each year be, and hereby is, set aside as I Am An American Day and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation setting aside that day as a public occasion for the recognition of all who, by coming of age or naturalization, have attained the status of citizenship, and the day shall be designated as "I Am An American Day."

That the civil and educational authorities of States, counties, cities, and towns be, and they are hereby, urged to make plans for the proper observance of this day and for the full instruction of future citizens in their responsibilities and opportunities as citizens of the United States and of the States and localities in which they reside.

Nothing herein shall be construed as changing, or attempting to change, the time or mode of any of the many altogether commendable observances of similar nature now being held from time to time, or periodically, but, to the contrary, such practices are hereby praised and encouraged.

SEC. 2. Either at the time of the rendition of the decree of naturalization or at such other time as the judge may fix, the judge or someone designated by him shall address the newly naturalized citizens upon the form and genius of our Government and the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship; it being the intent and purpose of this section to enlist the aid of the judiciary, in cooperation with civil and educational authorities, and patriotic organizations in a continuous effort to dignify and emphasize the significance of citizenship.

OSAGE PRODUCTION TAX, OSAGE COUNTY, OKLA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 289) to amend section 5 of Public Law No. 360, Sixty-sixth Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, after line 4, to strike out "at the rate of 3 percent and said tax shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, through the proper officers of the Osage Agency, to the State of Oklahoma from the amount received by the Osage Indians from the production of oil and gas upon the condition that one-third of such sums as received from time to time by said State shall be paid over to Osage County, Okla., the remaining two-thirds to be distributed in like manner as gross-production tax under the laws of said State", and to insert "at the rate levied by said State but in no event to exceed 5 percent and said tax shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, through the proper officers of the Osage Agency, to the State of Oklahoma from the amount received by the Osage Indians from the production of oil and gas to be distributed in like manner as gross-production tax under the laws of said State and the Secretary shall pay the tax herein authorized upon the condition and not otherwise that an additional one-fifth of said sum or sums paid by the Secretary in pursuance of this act shall be delivered over to Osage County, Okla., at the same time or times as the other payment or payments herein provided for are made to said county, one-half thereof to be apportioned to a fund to be used by said county only for the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges therein, the other one-half thereof to be used for the maintenance of common schools of said county as provided by law", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of the Osage Act (S. 4039, Public, No. 360, 66th Cong.; 41 Stat. 1249) be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the State of Oklahoma is authorized from and after the passage of this act to levy and collect a gross-production tax, not to exceed the existing rate, upon all oil and gas produced in Osage County, Okla., except as herein otherwise provided, and all taxes so collected shall be paid and distributed, and shall be in lieu of all other State and county taxes levied upon the production of oil and gas as provided by the laws of Oklahoma. The gross-production tax on the royalty interests of the Osage Indians shall be at the rate levied by said State but in no event to exceed 5 percent and said tax shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, through the proper officers of the Osage Agency, to the State of Oklahoma from the amount received by the Osage Indians from the production of oil and gas to be distributed in like manner as gross-production tax under the laws of said State, and the Secretary shall pay the tax herein authorized upon the condition and not otherwise that an additional one-fifth of said sum or sums paid by the Secretary in pursuance of this act shall be delivered over to Osage County, Okla., at the same time or times as the other payment or payments herein provided for are made to said county, one-half thereof to be apportioned to a fund to be used by said county only for the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges therein, the other one-half thereof to be used for the maintenance of common schools of said county as provided by law."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this joint resolution seeks to amend one section of the law relating to the Osage Tribe of Indians, located in one county in Oklahoma. It has no reference to any Indians other than the Osages, and refers only to Osage County. It relates to the levying of a gross production tax on the production of oil.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF CERTAIN RETIRED-LIST OFFICERS

The bill (S. 2328) to promote on the retired list officers who were decorated and recommended for promotion for distinguished service during the World War and who have not attained the rank to which recommended was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any commissioned officer of the Army below the grade of brigadier general, now retired or hereafter retired, except those retired under the provisions of section 24b of the act of June 4, 1920, who for services rendered during the World War was officially recommended in writing for promotion to increased rank by a division commander or coordinate or higher authority or by the chief of a staff corps or department, and who has not attained said rank, and who as evidenced by bestowal of Medal of Honor or Distinguished Service Corps or Distinguished Service Medal rendered exceptionally meritorious services or demonstrated gallantry in action beyond the call of duty shall, upon application, be advanced one grade on the retired list: Provided, That any such officer on the active or retired list who died or may die prior to the approval of this act, or on the active list who may hereafter die before retirement, shall upon application in his behalf be advanced one grade as of date of death: Provided further, That such promotion shall not carry with it any increase of pay or allowances.

ARROWROCK DAM ENLARGEMENT AND IMPROVEMENT

The bill (H. R. 8498) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit the payment of the costs of repairs, resurfacing, improvement, and enlargement of the Arrowrock Dam in 20 annual installments, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 801) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State, due process of law and equal protection of the laws and to prevent the crime of lynching, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COMPACT BETWEEN MONTANA, NORTH DAKOTA, SOUTH DAKOTA, AND WYOMING

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1777) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Little Missouri River, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "apportionment", to strike out "between" and insert "among"; and on page 2, line 6, after the word "upon", strike out "either" and insert "any", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement not later than January 1, 1941, providing for an equitable division and apportionment among the States of the water supply of the Little Missouri River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon conditions that one suitable person, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislature of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I have an additional amendment which I desire to offer. On page 1, line 6, I move to strike out "1941" and insert in lieu thereof "1943." This amendment is necessary because of the fact that the bill was introduced some time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "1941" and in lieu thereof to insert "1943."

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3237) to amend sec. 301 (a) of the Sugar Act of 1937, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That subsection (a) of section 301 of the Sugar Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Secretary is authorized to make payments, notwithstanding a failure to comply with the conditions provided in this subsection, but the payments made with respect to any crop shall be subject to a deduction of $10 for each child for each day, or a portion of a day, during which such child was employed or permitted to work contrary to the foregoing provisions of this subsection, in the 1937, 1938, and 1939 crops."

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Louisiana explain the bill. I have not had time to study it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. President, the bill amends subsection (a) of section 301, of the Sugar Act, permitting the Secretary to pay sugar producers benefit payments, notwithstanding a failure to comply with the conditions provided in said subsection, subject, however, to a deduction of $10 for each child, for each day, or portion of a day, during which he was employed.

The bill was suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the proposed amendment is that which is incorporated in the report of the Secretary. The reason assigned for the enactment of the bill appears in the second paragraph of the report, which reads as follows:

In administering the act, a number of cases have been found in which children under age were employed or permitted to work on farms, although the producers apparently did not know that the children were under age and used reasonable precautions to ascertain the facts. In the opinion of the Department, the law now requires that payment be denied in such a case, although the producer has met all other conditions for payment provided in the act.

Most of the cases involved are identical. An employer hires a child. The father or mother or guardian of the child produces an affidavit to the effect that he is 16 years of age. Upon investigation, it has been found in some instances that the child lacked but 3 or 4 months of being 16; and under an interpretation of the labor provisions of the Sugar Act by the Department of Justice, it was held that under such a condition the employer could not be paid, notwithstanding the fact that he discharged such a child upon learning the facts. The Department felt that since the employer had taken all necessary precautions, and consequently was not to blame, and in all cases discharged the child when it was found that he was under 16, under such circumstances payment should not be refused.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. What is the provision of the Senator's amendment? What is to relieve the employer now—just the presumption that he does not know?

Mr. ELLENDER. It applies only to past years. The Department is authorized to fine the employer at the rate of $10 a day for each day the child was employed.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The amendment has no application to the future?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; absolutely not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

The bill (H. R. 3800) to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I know of the special work which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has put on this bill. I very much dislike to object to its consideration at this time; but I feel that it is necessary to amend the bill, and I am going to ask that it go over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will withhold his objection, the contracts or agreements between the Agricultural Department, under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and the farmers must be signed by the 15th of this month, and that time is getting very close. If the bill is to go into effect, it must be passed as soon as possible in order that the contracts may be signed before the 15th of this month. The Senator from Iowa was on the subcommittee and is also a member of the full committee. The subcommittee agreed to the bill, and the full committee agreed to it. The amendments are in accordance with the wishes of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator from North Dakota will have in mind the fact that at the time the bill was reported out I gave notice that unless it was amended to take care of situations in which there had been reductions in the number of tenants which were not justified, I should have to oppose the bill on the floor of the Senate. I have drafted an amendment which I believe will meet the situation. It is rather long; but if the Senator is willing to accept it at this time, I shall have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, we have this afternoon passed a measure, which was introduced and reported by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], under the provisions of which the burden of proof would be shifted from the local committee, in the matter of determining whether the relationship of landlord and tenant or the reduction in the number of tenants had operated to increase the share of the landlord in benefit payments.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think the objection of the Senator from Iowa is taken care of under the present law, because under the law if the landlord changes his system the benefit payments may be cut off.

Mr. GILLETTE. Unfortunately, I do not think that is the result. The bill passed this afternoon to which I refer pertains alone to benefit payments. If the landlord seeks to increase his share of the benefit payments by changing the provisions of a lease, or by reducing the number of the tenants, the burden of proof is on him to justify that to the local committee. The Senate passed that measure a little while ago.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that we pass this bill over temporarily, and let him and the Senator from North Dakota confer about his amendment, and take the bill up when we finish with the call of the calendar. Perhaps he and the Senator from North Dakota can agree on the amendment.

Mr. GILLETTE. I shall be very glad to follow that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

INTERVENTION BY STATES IN CERTAIN CASES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7737) to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section thereto, designated as section 266a, to provide for intervention by States in certain cases involving the validity of the exercise of any power by the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 2, after the word "exercise," to strike out "by any State", and on line 3, after the words "power of", to strike out "such State" and insert "the State in which the cause is being heard", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Judicial Code, as amended, is further amended by adding a new section, immediately following section 266, and to be designated as section 266a, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 266a. (1) Whenever the validity of the exercise of any power by the United States, or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, is drawn in question in any court of the United States, and the determination of such question involves any conflict with the exercise of any governmental power of the State in which the cause is being heard, or whenever the exercise of such Federal power would result in any impairment or abridgment of any governmental power asserted by or exercised by such State, or any agency thereof, or any officer or employee thereof, not already a party, the court having jurisdiction of the suit or proceeding shall certify such fact to the attorney general of such State. In any such case, the court shall permit such State to intervene and become a party for the presentation of evidence (if evidence is otherwise receivable in such suit or proceeding) and argument upon the question of the validity of the exercise of such power. In any such suit or proceeding such State, subject to the applicable provisions of law, shall have all the rights of a party and the liabilities of a party as to court costs to the extent necessary for a proper presentation of the facts and law relating to the validity of the exercise of such powers.

"(2) As used in this section, the term 'court of the United States' means any district court of the United States, any circuit court of appeals, and the Supreme Court of the United States; the term 'district court of the United States' includes the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia; and the term 'circuit court of appeals' includes the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia."

SEC. 2. This act shall apply to suits and proceedings brought or pending on the date of its enactment as well as to suits and proceedings thereafter instituted.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PATENT OF LAND TO THE MONTANA SCHOOL OF MINES

The bill (S. 2191) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Montana School of Mines a patent to a certain tract of land was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to grant, subject to vested existing rights, to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Montana School of Mines a patent to the tract of land (including all mineral rights therein) known as the WPA Quartz Lode Mining Claim, located in Summit Valley mining district, Montana, and designated on the official plat of the United States General Land Office as lot 19, section 14, township 3 north, range 8 west, Montana principal meridian. Such claim is more particularly described as follows:

Beginning at the south corner of the tract herein described, a point in the east end line of survey numbered 1688, Occidental Lode, lot 441, and which is also corner numbered 10 of survey numbered 2942, Arkansaw Lode Mining Claim, and corner numbered 4 of survey numbered 1218, Great Western Lode, lot 339; thence first course north eight degrees west along the east end line of survey numbered 1688, Occidental Lode, two hundred and thirty-eight feet to the northwest corner of the tract herein described and which is also corner numbered 2 of survey numbered 1688, Occidental Lode, and a point in the south side of survey numbered 1687, Bummer Lode, lot 440; thence, second course, north eighty-one degrees east along the south side line of survey numbered 1687, Bummer Lode, forty-four feet to the northeast corner of the tract herein described, which is also the point of intersection of line 4–3 of survey numbered 1687, Bummer Lode, at south eighty-one degrees west, two hundred and three feet from its corner numbered 3, with line 3–4 of survey numbered 1218, Great Western Lode, at south two degrees thirty-four minutes west, one hundred and thirty-six feet from its corner numbered 3; thence, third course, south two degrees thirty-four minutes west along line 3–4, the west end line of survey numbered 1218, Great Western Lode, two hundred and forty-four feet, to the place of beginning, containing an area of one hundred and twenty one-thousandths acre, more or less. Such trace being entirely within the boundaries of the location corners set for the said WPA Quartz Lode Mining Claim.

RIGHT-OF-WAY TO THE STATE OF MONTANA

The bill (S. 3262) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant a right-of-way to the Highway Commission of the State of Montana was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to grant to the Highway Commission of the State of Montana a permanent right to use for highway purposes that part of the property owned by the United States, known as the Bozeman, Mont., fisheries station, in the south half of the northwest quarter of section 34, township 1 south, range 6 east, Montana principal meridian, in Gallatin County, Mont., for which a revocable license, dated December 23, 1938, was granted by the Secretary of Commerce. Such right shall be granted upon condition that a public highway shall be maintained across such property and upon such other conditions as the Secretary of the Interior deems necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

CONTINUATION OF GRAND JURIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8702) to amend the Judicial Code with respect to the continuation of grand juries to finish investigations, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fifth sentence of section 284 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 421), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows: "A district judge may, upon request of the district attorney or of the grand jury or on his own motion, by order authorize any grand jury to continue to sit during the term succeeding the term at which such request is made, solely to finish investigations begun but not finished by such grand jury, but no grand jury shall be permitted to sit in all during more than 18 months: Provided, That, for good cause shown, the court may, at any time after the end of the term for which the grand jury was originally summoned, excuse any member of the grand jury and summon and impanel another person in his place."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Indiana whether complaints have not come to him, or to other members of the Committee on the Judiciary, that in some States there has been a disposition to maintain grand juries for indefinite periods, extending, indeed, from one term to another, if not from one year to another? I was wondering whether any such abuses have existed, and if this bill would not authorize the continuation of such practices.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, the bill comes from the Department of Justice, and provides that the district judge, upon request of the district attorney or of the grand jury, may authorize the grand jury to continue to serve for an additional term, or the judge may act on his own motion. The terms of grand juries vary in the different States. I know from my own personal experience that the United States attorney, when we had a long, complicated investigation, and a grand jury had to be dissolved at the end of one term, had to reeducate the succeeding grand jury, which meant the expenditure of much money and time and effort. The bill now before us provides that a grand jury may sit during the term following that for which it was first chosen, but that no grand jury shall be permitted to sit longer than 18 months. It is my opinion that the bill is fair and should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this is the War Department civil functions appropriation bill, and I suggest that it go over at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

NESTUCCA RIVER BRIDGE, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7989) to legalize a bridge across the Nestucca River at Pacific City, Oreg., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War are hereby authorized to approve the location and plans of a bridge already constructed by the county of Tillamook across the Nestucca River at Pacific City, Oreg.: Provided, That said bridge has been authorized by the legislature of the State of Oregon and as located and constructed affords free, easy, and unobstructed navigation.

SEC. 2. That when the location and plans of said bridge have been so approved, said bridge shall be deemed a lawful structure and subject to the laws enacted by Congress for the protection and preservation of the navigable waters of the United States.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether the title of the bill as printed on the calendar is according to the usual form for bridge bills: "An act to legalize a bridge." If this bill should not pass, I take it that this would be an outlaw bridge.

Mr. McNARY. This is the form in which it came from the House. I do not think there is anything unusual about it. It conforms to the ordinary language. A bridge without authority would not be a lawful bridge.

Mr. BARKLEY. The usual language is "To authorize the construction of a bridge," and that itself legalizes it.

Mr. McNARY. Exactly. This is equivalent to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is this a bridge which has already been constructed without authority, and now there is a desire to legalize it?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE

The bill (S. 2111) to amend the act entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, approved February 15, 1893, as amended, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved Februry 15, 1893, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 42, sec. 82), is amended by striking out the words "adjacent thereto."

PREVENTION OF COLLISIONS OF VESSELS

The bill (H. R. 7420) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOURS OF WORK ON INLAND WATERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2305) relating to hours of work of licensed officers and seamen on tugs operating in certain inland waters of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 2, line 6, after the word "eight" to insert the word "consecutive," and after the word "day" to strike out "and such work shall be performed within a period of time not exceeding nine consecutive hours," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of section 2 of the act of March 4, 1915, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. IV, title 46, sec 673), is amended to read as follows: "Except in the case of an extraordinary emergency affecting the safety of the vessel or life or property, no licensed officer or seaman in the deck or engine department of any tug documented under the laws of the United States (except boats or vessels used exclusively for fishing purposes) navigating the Great Lakes, harbors of the Great Lakes, and connecting and tributary waters between Gary, Ind.; Duluth, Minn.; Niagara Falls, N. Y.; and Ogdensburg, N. Y., shall be required or permitted to work more than 8 consecutive hours in any one day.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, before Calendar No. 1464, Senate bill 2305, was reached, the author of the bill, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] asked me to have it go over. My attention was diverted at the time it was called, and I overlooked it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be restored to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF ORIGINAL JURISDICTION IN CIVIL SUITS

The bill (H. R. 8822) to extend original jurisdiction to district courts in civil suits between citizens of the District of Columbia, the Territories of Hawaii or Alaska, and any State or Territory was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That clause (b) of paragraph (1), section 24, of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, sec. 41; Supp. IV, title 28, sec. 41), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(b) Is between citizens of different States, or citizens of the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawaii, or Alaska, and any State or Territory."

REGULATION OF PAYMENTS UNDER SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate recur to the consideration of Calendar 1447, House bill 3800.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3800) to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "The total payment that would otherwise be made to any person for any year pursuant to this section shall be reduced by 25 percent of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000", on line 10, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000"; on line 10, after the word "applying", to strike out "these limitations" and to insert "this limitation"; on page 2, line 2, before the word "share", to insert "or operator's"; on line 5, after the word "landlord", to insert the words "or operator"; on line 18, after the word "possessions" and the comma, to strike out "the 25-percent reduction and the $5,000" and to insert "$10,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last paragraph of section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"No total payment to any person for any year shall exceed $10,000, but in applying this limitation there shall be excluded amounts representing a landlord's or operator's share of a payment made with respect to land operated under a tenancy or sharecropper relationship if the division of the payment between the landlord or operator and the tenant or sharecropper is determined by the local committee to be in accordance with fair and customary standards of renting or sharecropping prevailing in the locality; and there shall also be excluded amounts representing payments to a bona fide cooperative corporation or association, whose members have substantially equal interest therein, and having at least 50 participating members or stockholders, if 75 percent or more of the persons actually engaged in its farming operations are participating members or stockholders of such corporation or association or are children or members of the family of such members or stockholders. In the case of payments to any person on account of performance on farms in different States, Territories, or possessions, $10,000 limitation shall be applied to the total of the payments for each State, Territory, or possession for a year, and not to the total of all payments."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, on which the Senator from North Dakota and I have agreed, and I ask that the clerk state it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 2, line 8, to change the semicolon after the word "locality" to a comma and insert "and that the landlord or operator has not made reduction in the number of tenants on any farm below the average number of tenants on the farm during the preceding 3 years, or that a reduction below this average has been affirmatively found by the committee to be justified and proper."

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the amendment?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, the proposal for a limitation to $10,000 of the amount which any one person or corporation may receive under the Soil Conservation Act provides for an exemption when a landlord or operator is farming with sharecroppers or tenants provided he has not changed the relationship so that it does not conform to the usual practice, and if he has not reduced the number of his tenants, without having justified the reduction before the committee, from the average for the 3 years. It is to correct a condition which was made evident in the hearings before the subcommittee, of landlords having changed their method of farming, thrown tenants off a place, and engaged in mechanized farming, operating by tractors instead of tenants. In that case, the $10,000 limitation would apply. Otherwise, it would not apply if they continue the same farm practices, or have not reduced the number of tenants, or can justify any reduction made.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I was not able to hear the Senator's explanation, but it strikes me that his amendment would impose a penalty for past acts which were not unlawful at the time, and would impose restrictions and penalties upon tenants to accrue this year or next year for things which happened 3 years ago. Would that be the effect of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. GILLETTE. I sincerely hope that would not be its effect, I will say to the Senator from New Mexico. The bill which has been reported to the Senate, if I may read from it, provides:

No total payment to any person for any year shall exceed $10,000, but in applying this limitation there shall be excluded amounts representing a landlord's or operator's share of a payment made with respect to land operated under a tenancy or sharecropper relationship if the division of the payment between the landlord or operator and the tenant or sharecropper is determined by the local committee to be in accordance with fair and customary standards of renting or sharecropping prevailing in the locality.

In that case the limitation of $10,000 does not apply.

My amendment provides that if the committee determines that any change in that relationship which is not in conformity to the standards of the community has changed the situation, or if the landlord has reduced the number of his tenants, using the exact language of the bill, we adopted this afternoon——

Mr. HATCH. In the past 3 years.

Mr. GILLETTE. The past 3 years is the average or standard. If he has reduced the number of his tenants below the number that he has had on his farm in the last 3 years——

Mr. HATCH. That is, if he reduced the number this year.

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes; this year.

Mr. HATCH. I think that is what the law provides without the Senator's amendment. I thought I had misunderstood the Senator. If the explanation, as the Senator has made it, is correct, he is only doing what the present law expressly provides. I have no objection to the amendment; and if I am correct, it is unnecessary, but, of course, the conferees can work it out.

Mr. GILLETTE. In what provision does the Senator have in mind that the law takes care of it?

Mr. HATCH. The present law takes care of it in the same way the Senator has written it.

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not want to take up further time of the Senate, but the law we are now considering makes provision that the lease agreement between the landlord and the tenant shall not be changed in form, but there is nothing to prevent a man who has 100 tenants from reducing the number to two.

Mr. HATCH. In the measure we are passing today?

Mr. GILLETTE. It provides that in his lease agreement with his tenants there shall not be a greater change than usually applies in the community. But if he reduces the number of his tenants, he runs afoul of the existing law which we amended today. The existing law prohibits such change now. The only trouble with existing law was that it placed the burden of proof on the local committee. The bill we passed today changes that burden. That was the purpose.

Mr. HATCH. If that was the purpose I have no objection.

Mr. BILBO. I think the provision of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is taken care of in the law of 1938. I think the amendment is a repetition of the existing law.

Mr. GILLETTE. The law we amended this afternoon?

Mr. BILBO. The law we passed in 1938.

Mr. GILLETTE. That is subdivision (f), and the one we are trying to correct now is subdivision (e). I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but I hope the amendment will be adopted, and then the conferees can work it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GEORGE B. SPEARIN

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] for a moment, let me say that earlier in the afternoon, when of necessity I was absent from the Chamber, the Senator from Utah made objection to Calendar No. 1273, House bill 4256, when that bill was reached. I ask unanimous consent to revert to that bill, which is for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased.

I had several conversations with the distinguished Senator from Utah later this afternoon, and thoroughly explained this bill to him. I ask if he is not willing to withdraw his objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an explanation made by the Senator from New Jersey convinces me that there is merit in the bill, and I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4256) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2585.

REIMBURSEMENT OF COTTON COOPERATIVES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill now under consideration, which is the unfinished business. I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table, and also that it be printed in the RECORD at this point for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment (in the nature of a substitute) intended to be proposed by Mr. McKELLAR to the bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes, viz:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the committee insert the following:

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,355,141.40, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for making payments as hereinafter provided to members of the cotton cooperative associations designated in section 2, who are also farmers engaged in producing cotton.

"SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to ascertain in such manner as he deems most appropriate the names of the persons who are, on the date of enactment of this act, farmers engaged in producing cotton and members of any of the following associations: Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association, successor to Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton Association; California Cotton Cooperative Association; Georgia Cotton Growers' Cooperative Association; Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association; Mid-South Cotton Growers' Association, successor to Arkansas Cotton Growers' Cooperative Association and Tennessee Cotton Growers' Association; Mississippi Cooperative Cotton Association; North Carolina Cotton Growers' Cooperative Association; Oklahoma Cotton Growers' Association; South Carolina Cotton Cooperative Association; Staple Cotton Cooperative Association, Mississippi; Texas Cotton Growers' Association; Texas Cotton Cooperative Association; Southwestern Irrigated Cotton Growers' Association.

"(b) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to pay to each person who is shown to his satisfaction to be, on the date of enactment of this act, a farmer engaged in producing cotton and a member of any of such associations, an equal part of the money appropriated pursuant to the first section of this act. No such payment shall be made to any officer of any such association, or to any cotton merchant, unless he is a farmer engaged in producing cotton. In the event that any person entitled to a payment under this act dies before receiving such payment, the Secretary is authorized to make such payment to such person as he deems to be entitled thereto.

"SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and pursuant to an estimate submitted in accordance with law, such sum as may be necessary for the administration of this act. In the administration of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall not utilize the services of any cotton cooperative association or any cotton merchant or the Farm Credit Administration or the Commodity Credit Corporation, except for the purpose of obtaining information from them."

CONFIRMATION OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Executive Calendar contains only three favorable reports on postmasters in Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the nominations of those three postmasters be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATION OF HON. MARVIN JONES

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the nomination of Representative MARVIN JONES, of Texas, to be a judge of the Court of Claims, and that the nomination be confirmed, and that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INVENTORS AND PATENTS' DAY

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, by Public Resolution 58 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, approved on March 15, 1940, the Congress of the United States requested the President to set aside April 10, 1940, as Inventors and Patents' Day, to invite a general public commemoration of an event which has proved so important and salutary to the Nation. Pursuant to that resolution, the President designated April 10, which is today, as Inventors and Patents' Day. The President invited the people of the United States to commemorate on that day the sesquicentennial of the first of the United States patent laws. Tonight in the city of Washington a commemorative dinner is to be held, which will be widely attended by men interested in this vital aspect of our national life.

Mr. President, very often it happens that the importance of beginnings is obscured by the magnitude of their sequels. For we are prone to forget that great effects can only be the products of great causes. The oak is mighty and majestic in its maturity, but all its bulk and beauty and usefulness had their origin and essence in the acorn. One of countless illustrations of these truths is supplied by the American patent system, the sesquicentenary of which we are commemorating today. All of the great benefactions of that system were latent in the constitutional provision for the recompense and protection of inventors and in the first patent law approved by President Washington on April 10, 1790.

This constitutional and statutory recognition of inventions was prompted not alone by the hopes which this Nation's founders felt for the future, but also by their experiences in the decades which immediately preceded the War of the Revolution. For several generations before the separation of the Thirteen Colonies from Great Britain, their inhabitants had suffered from ruinous restraints on their manufacture and commerce. The colonial peoples had early undertaken to develop industry and trade. In 1718 the people of Maryland and Virginia produced iron and exported it to England.

We know from a parliamentary report that in 1731 there were 6 furnaces, 19 forges, a slitting mill, and a nail factory in New England. In 1732, the year of Washington's birth, Parliament prohibited the exportation, from one colony to another, or to England, of hats made in America. That prohibition is proof that this form of manufacture had been undertaken by our colonial forebears. Then, in 1750, Parliament forbade the erection or operation, in the American Colonies, of a "mill or other engine for slitting or rolling of iron, or any furnace for making steel," and imposed a penalty of £200 for each contravention of this law.

The last legislative effort to control manufacture in the American Colonies while they were still under British sovereignty was that of 1752. This banned the exportation to America of tools for use in the making of fabrics from linen or cotton. And cotton was even then important among colonial products. These various curbs on manufacture within the Colonies were of less influence than they would have been had the industries of that era been numerous and significant, but they did, nevertheless, work considerable mischief. Some of these parliamentary interdictions were among the grievances recited in a protest by the colonists of Massachusetts in 1772.

In 1785—2 years after the treaty of peace between England and the Colonies and 2 years before our Federal Constitution was framed—the British Parliament prohibited by law the emigration of mechanics and workmen familiar with the manufacture of iron and forbade the exportation not only of engines, machines, or tools useful in the processing of iron, but even the models and plans of such mechanisms and implements.

The purpose and, from the viewpoint of British ministries of those times, the justification of all these restrictions and repressions was to further the internal industry and the foreign trade of Great Britain. This intent was not only not accomplished but was defeated, as history has impressively testified. For, within the recollection of Americans living in 1790, British statesmen realized and sought to correct the error of the earlier policy. In 1853 a British mission was sent to the United States to study and emulate American methods of manufacturing arms. The genius of Samuel Colt was borrowed, so to say, for the same purpose. A member of that mission, in his account of its work, explained that the (British) "Government resolved to introduce the American patent system."

And, as it is now to be seen, these British suppressions of colonial efforts to establish industries on this side of the Atlantic proved to be an incentive to our economic as well as our political independence. They give us an understanding not merely of the fact but also of the manner of our patent system's beginning. They account for the language of the constitutional provision and of President Washington's address to the First Congress. The constitutional grant of power to Congress was:

To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times * * * to inventors the exclusive rights to their * * * discoveries.

President Washington's recommendation was that Congress give effectual encouragement * * * to the exertion of skill and genius at home.

That is, here in the United States, and for the benefit of all our people. That constitutional warrant and the adoption of the policy which Washington advocated have emancipated us from industrial and economic subordination to England and every other nation. More than that, we have been strengthened to protect and preserve our ideals of government.

One other thought is prompted by this brief retrospection. The colonial period was surely a machineless age, yet the absence of mechanical means and methods of production was not regarded by the founders of America as a blessing. It was no guaranty of general and continuous employment or of sufficient wages or of livable conditions for workers. We have gained, not lost, by the multiplication of machines.

They have increased our productiveness and enlarged the rewards of production. We are more invincible against military aggression precisely because we are economically unconquerable. Mere numbers of population is no safeguard from assailment or conquest. China is a present verification of that statement. We are powerful in our industrial and economic structure. That is our mighty fortress, and I am convinced that we must credit its effectiveness to the inventions which our patent system has supplied to us for 150 years. Even if it could be demonstrated that inventions have given rise to problems, it would still be true that they have saved us from worse evils than they have entailed. They have hastened and extended the development of our vast territory and its resources. They have brought benefits to all our people, even when they have taken the form of luxuries which, as such, those of small means could not enjoy. For their making and their marketing have provided employment for those whose only income is their wages. The worker who can never become the owner of an automobile or a yacht may nevertheless earn a living in the production or operation of one or the other. Finally, inventions have given us the wherewithal to defend and vindicate democracy and keep that best of all human institutions as the common possession and boon of all our people.

Mr. President, I am extremely sorry that the ranking member of the Patents Committee, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], was unavoidably called away from Washington today. I know it had been his hope to contribute a few remarks upon this occasion, the sesquicentennial anniversary of the adoption of the first patent law in America. It is something in which we may all find consolation, because our patent system, and the American economic system, which is so inseparably linked to our patent system, have their roots reaching down very deep into our social, political, and economic life.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the events in Europe during the past 48 hours have emphasized anew the danger to the whole world of the armed conflict now in progress across the Atlantic. Again there has been vividly demonstrated the fact that neutrality without adequate defense cannot guarantee a nation from being drawn into this conflict.

I am certain that I speak the minds of all of us when I say that our every endeavor should be, and is, I think, to prevent the catastrophe of our being forced to enter this struggle. The wise neutrality provisions adopted by the Congress and enforced by the administration have been necessarily the first step in our policy of avoiding the possibility of involvement. That this step alone is not sufficient to meet the demands of prudence is witnessed by the action of Congress in providing for expanded programs for our national defense.

It has been said by more than one high authority that the lesson of the World War, and that of the present conflict, is that for any country of great area and extended coast line the problem of keeping afloat its merchant marine in time of war is of pivotal importance. A little reflection will show that this is the very cornerstone of the war strategy of both Germany and the Allies today. If Germany is to be defeated, in the long run, the Allies must make good their attempts to shut off her water-borne transport. Few can doubt that if Germany should succeed in sweeping from the seas the merchant fleets of the Allies she would emerge victorious.

That this principle holds equally for our own country is not only the considered opinion of experts but it is abundantly demonstrated by the history of the white man on this continent. It was evident in the struggles between France and England and Spain for control of North America. The inability of Great Britain to make complete the blockade of our coasts enabled us to win the wars of the Revolution and of 1812. The disappearance of Confederate ships from the high seas spelled absolute disaster to the South in the Civil War. Today the physical factors of our great geographical extent and the lack of a real balance in our development and population increase the importance of this principle to us, and multiply the necessity for measures which will cause it to operate in our favor. We are told by those who should know—and I believe it to be true—that we could not be the victor in any major struggle forced upon us in which we could not adequately defend our merchant shipping, particularly the vast traffic between our Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific areas. Even in 1918, with strong Allies to assist us, and with the enemy more than 3,000 miles distant, we were forced to rely on ocean coastal transport for the carriage of approximately 40 percent of our war materials and supplies transported from one part of the country to another.

The great bulk of our coastal shipping during wartime will necessarily move, as it does today, by way of the Panama Canal and the Gulf-Caribbean area. No scheme for our national defense can be adequate which does not provide for the defense of this movement. To ignore the necessity for this is to court disaster.

It is not my purpose, in these brief remarks, to go into technical details. But it can be shown that under the most favorable conditions of warfare with major opponents, we could not expect to escape the hazard of merchant ship losses comparable with those now being suffered by the Allies from the partially throttled effort of the German Navy. This is especially true, in view of the fact that the density of our merchant ship traffic emerging into the Atlantic from the Gulf-Caribbean area will be much greater than that of any ship-traffic lane entering the United Kingdom.

Up to March 2 last, in the first 6 months of the war, the Allies and neutrals have suffered the loss of 401 merchant ships and cargoes with a total value of nearly $900,000,000.

In time of war the United States would have afloat, at all times, in the coastal shipping to which I have referred ships and cargoes to the value of nearly $1,000,000,000, with an annual value of four and one-half billions. That is the mere property risk with which we are faced.

It has been shown upon competent authority that under existing circumstances we could not reasonably expect in war to lose merchant ships and cargoes valued at less than $800,000,000 per year. This estimate makes due allowance for the fact that we are separated from any potential enemy by thousands of miles of ocean and also assumes that this shipping will have all the protection which a powerful and efficient navy can be expected to give.

There has been submitted to the judgment of the Senate on more than one occasion the proposal to construct a ship canal from the Atlantic to the Gulf across Florida, one of the primary functions of which would be to afford a large measure of protection to this vital traffic. I refer to the Florida Canal. It has been a source of continuing regret to me that so far the Senate has not seen fit to concur in the authorization of this project. It is with the expectation that it may again in due course become the subject of consideration by this body, and with the hope that a fuller knowledge of its value and necessity may win the approval of the Senate, that I call attention to it at this time.

A careful and exhaustive analysis shows that the Florida Canal would save more than twice its cost in the first 6 months of any great war in which we might unhappily become engaged. It is my opinion that its value to commerce in time of peace fully justifies its construction, and I submit that too long a delay in getting it under way would be a grave and most imprudent omission in our plans for national defense. When we consider that this project can be made self-liquidating, and should thus represent little or no net expense to the Federal Government, I feel that the magnitude of its importance warrants approval by Congress.

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, yesterday 20 Senators, including myself, introduced Senate Joint Resolution 245, authorizing the participation of Government departments in the celebration of National Aviation Day. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution in question be printed in full in the body of the RECORD at this point, together with the names of the sponsoring Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution, together with the names of the sponsors, is as follows:

Whereas Congress by Senate Joint Resolution 111, passed May 11, 1939, has recognized and designated, as suggested by the National Aviation Day Association, August 19, the birth date of Orville Wright, one of the fathers of aviation, to commemorate the invention of the airplane;

Whereas the heavier-than-air machine is one of the world's greatest scientific and mechanical marvels which has produced a fast-growing and developing industry in this country; and

Whereas on August 19, 1940, celebrations of National Aviation Day will be held in many States and cities throughout the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art love, knowledge, and power over all the earth, we wait at Thy altar of prayer, knowing that it is but the hem of Thy garment that we may touch. By faith may we hold fast until we see Thy disclosure of the blossoming of the wilderness, unsmitten by the winter of peril and unscorched by the blight of summer. O God, the evangel of the Nazareth Carpenter is cast out and blasphemed as suffering humanity is blindly convulsed in the throes of war. It is so difficult for us to think that such darkness can be concealed in the hearts of men. We beseech Thee, dear Lord, to be with us. Only the hand that was nailed to the cross is worthy to wield the scepter. O breathe through the multitudes that they may never be haunted by the iniquitous dreams of conquest; hush in silence the inhuman whispers of aggression. Restore the sanctuaries of peace and good will that their shafts of light may fall across the troubled heart of this whole world. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9016. An act to amend the joint resolution creating the Niagara Falls Bridge Commission.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, Norway and Denmark have met the inevitable fate of every nation, large or small, that is unable to defend its own sovereignty. The world is being shaken by war which is going to determine the fate of every nation in the world. At this time every man, woman, and child in the United States should get down on their knees and thank God that this Nation is not going to become involved in that Gargantuan struggle.

I know, and every thinking American knows, that the wise course pursued by President Roosevelt, Secretary Hull, and the Congress so far in this struggle is directly responsible for our keeping out of this war. No leaders before in history had the foresight that President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull demonstrated when we gave up the traditional freedom of the seas. Some short-sighted Members tried to excite the country about the passage of the neutrality bill, but the people's confidence in Roosevelt has again paid dividends and we are not going to become involved in this conflict.

I want to tell you all that the time has come that the people are no longer asking the question in an academic manner or as a matter of conjecture, "Will President Roosevelt run for a third term?" That has ceased to be a matter of speculation. The question now, the question that is uppermost in the minds of the American people, is, "Can we induce, can we draft this great leader to make the personal sacrifice and again assume the awful responsibility of being President for 4 more years?" The next 4 years will probably determine whether this Nation and the independent democracies still existing in North and South America can continue a free people. The foresight of President Roosevelt, not after it was too late but from the day he entered the White House, made possible a Navy now under construction and on the waters that makes our Navy the greatest in the world today. That same foresight has modernized and equipped our Army and modernized and equipped our air force. We cannot stop this preparedness. I sincerely feel that it might be the responsibility of every able-bodied man in this country to defend this Nation in the next few years. With this in view I have put my personal house in order by joining the Marine Reserves so that I might be trained when and if this emergency arises. I think every citizen, through participation in the Citizens' Military Training Corps, in the National Guard, and in the Reserves, should accept his responsibility and be ready for this emergency when it arises. We are not going to become involved in the European war. But if it continues to take its present course we are going to have to fight on this continent for this Nation's very existence.

I am proud to be a Member of the Congress and a member of the administration that has recognized this world situation before it was too late. I am glad to have supported a President who had the foresight to prepare this Nation for any eventuality. In all humility I sincerely hope and pray that this great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, will accept the Presidency that is going to be thrust upon him by a people anxious that the future of this Nation in the next 4 years be in the hands of this great statesman aided and advised by that great Secretary of State, Cordell Hull. [Applause.]

PROPOSED FEDERAL TAX COMMISSION

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, sometime ago I introduced a joint resolution which proposes to establish a Federal Tax Commission for the purpose of recommending to Congress certain much-needed reforms in our Federal tax structure, and in the course of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee I had a colloquy upon the subject with the Secretary of the Treasury. I recently addressed a letter to him in reference to the remarks he made at that time, and I have today received a very courteous response from him, which I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks. I also addressed the House on March 29 on this same subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 4, 1940.

Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TREADWAY: I wish to thank you for your letter of March 6, 1940, calling to my attention our colloquy during the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee on the revenue bill of 1939 concerning House Joint Resolution 35. In this resolution you propose the creation of a Federal Tax Commission consisting of 10 members, 4 representing Congress and 6 representing agriculture, labor, business and industry, individual taxpayers and consumers, and tax lawyers, accountants, and economists, to implement the policy set forth in the preamble of the resolution.

As I indicated in my statement before the committee at page 4 of the hearings, I was, and am, particularly interested in the establishment of a small temporary national commission to study and report to Congress on the various aspects of intergovernmental fiscal policy. I contemplated a commission composed of men of ability, high in the public confidence, familiar with fiscal problems, particularly with the intricacies of tax law, and representative of the public at large rather than particular governmental units. I have always regarded the problem of Federal-State conflicts in taxation and overlapping of taxes as one of particular urgency, calling for the earliest possible consideration and solution.

The study which you propose would have considerably broader objectives than the one I contemplated. Certainly the Federal Government is confronted with tax problems beyond those arising from Federal-State conflicts—problems which call for careful and thorough study. These problems are at present the constant concern of many sections of the personnel of the Treasury Department consisting of persons well acquainted both with the economic and fiscal considerations involved in Federal taxation and with the legal techniques whereby a tax program can best be implemented. The Treasury Department has always tried to ascertain the views of various economic groups in the Nation, and is concerned with removing inequities in the tax laws pointed out by such groups. In considering tax problems and possible revisions of the tax laws the personnel of the Treasury Department has always worked in close collaboration with the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and its staff of experts. Thus there exists at hand a body of tax experts well equipped to consider revisions of the Federal tax laws.

As I said at the hearings, I consider the objectives mentioned in the preamble of House Joint Resolution 35 very laudable. It is only because of the particularly great importance of the problems of Federal-State conflicts in taxation, calling for consideration by persons well acquainted with State tax laws and programs as well as with Federal taxes, that I took the liberty of suggesting to Congress that a commission be appointed to consider such problems. If Congress should determine to enlarge the activities of such a commission beyond the subject I had in mind, I can assure you that the Treasury Department would wholeheartedly cooperate in the work of the commission if called upon to do so.

Sincerely yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a tribute made by Gen. Douglas MacArthur to Father Duffy, of the Sixty-ninth Regiment of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial appearing in the New York Inquirer of last Sunday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is existent today as has happened so often before a paramount need for a restraint and reflection before unfolding to the world our reactions to the changing kaleidoscope in Scandinavia. It ought to be said, however, that since March 6 a subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House has been entrusted with the authority to study the streamlining of the Monroe Doctrine in areas neglected by prior studies—neglected certainly as to details.

It might be of interest to say that when the original committee was appointed by the gentleman from New York, Chairman SOL BLOOM, an amendment by me was accepted to extend the original study of the acquisition of land for Panama Canal defenses to include an examination of the problems involved by the presence of part of Iceland in the Western Hemisphere, Greenland, too, the presence of Byrd Land in the Antarctic owned by us, and the ever-present problems of the South Pacific islands.

I have been personally interested in these focal areas and welcome the chance to present to the committee my humble studies in their history, importance, and implications on the Monroe Doctrine.

I shall take advantage later in my extension and revision to include part of these studies.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to place therein a letter from Attorney General Jackson.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Beverly Hills Highlights, on the American flag.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address I delivered last evening at Arlington, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

EFFECT OF UNDISTRIBUTED INCOME

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, the Monopoly Committee of the Senate is now having hearings on very fundamental questions—capitalism, the effect of machinery, whether technological unemployment is one of the causes of the depression. These are some of the questions being inquired into.

Along this line I have done some reading and study. Among the interesting and instructive articles I have recently read is one not yet published. It is by Dr. John Barr, now living in Urbana, Ill., formerly a resident of Redmond, Oreg., in my district. He is a professional man who has given a great deal of thought and study to these vital questions. He has arrived at the conclusion that it is necessary, if capitalism is to be preserved, that all of the income be spent; that the present depression, starting in 1929, was in a large measure brought on by an accumulation of undistributed income. He concludes that the only solution of the problem is inheritance and income taxes of such proportion as will make such a distribution.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include the article referred to by Dr. Barr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EFFECT OF PATENTS ON PEOPLE OF UNITED STATES

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the United States patent system.

With remarkable foresight the framers of the Constitution inserted a clause in that document which did much to encourage inventive genius among our people. It is that clause which insures to inventors the exclusive ownership of their patent rights for a term of years. This clause is found in article I, section 8, of the Constitution, and states:

> Congress shall have the power to pass laws to promote the progress of science and the useful arts by securing for a limited time to the authors and inventors the exclusive rights to their respective discoveries.

In accordance with this power, the patent system was created by the act of 1790, adopted into law on April 10 of that year, just 150 years ago today.

As a resident of New Jersey, whose numerous industries are founded upon inventions, and as a member of the Patents Committee of the House of Representatives, I have peculiar reasons for recognizing the importance of the American patent system. In my State there is a place hallowed by the name and the achievements of a great inventor. You need hardly be told that I refer to Menlo Park and Thomas Alva Edison.

The history of my State and of this Nation gives me further grounds for my interest in inventions and the statutes by which they are both encouraged and protected. Lambert Cadwalader, as a Member of the First Congress from New Jersey, was one of a committee of three to which was entrusted the responsibility of drafting the initial patent law of the United States, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of which we are now commemorating. In addition, William Paterson, Senator from New Jersey, was a member of the Senate Committee which considered the first patent bill and favorably recommended its passage by the Senate. His name is preserved as that of one of our great industrial communities in New Jersey. My fellow citizens of New Jersey share with me my appreciation of the patent system. No more eloquent proof of that fact could be supplied than the number of patents granted to them. New Jersey ranks among the first of our States in the per capita number of inventions patented by its citizens.

Not merely New Jersey, but every other State of the Union and many countries and peoples throughout the world, have an obligation to the inventors and their work fostered by our patent system down through the 15 decades of its existence. It would be perhaps a misstatement to say that American invention is the product of American laws. It is no exaggeration to say that that partnership of the protection which law has given to inventors and that genius which they have received from nature has operated for the benefit of many millions here at home and abroad. The inventor's rights and his property in his inventions require to be safeguarded so that they may be brought to fruition in the machines and methods and manufactures to which they were antecedently necessary.

In the 150 years since President Washington gave his approval to the first patent act our Nation has grown from a population of less than 4,000,000 to more than 130,000,000. In the same period its geographical area has been more than doubled. It would be difficult to conceive how our present population, or even that of 50 years ago, could find employment and support without the inventions which have served to supply both of these. Agriculture, the principal industry of Americans at the end of the Revolutionary War, could not have provided livelihood for even a tenth of our present population. For agriculture itself has been improved and expanded precisely by the great inventions that have been put at its disposal since the days of Whitney and McCormick. We needed other industries and activities to give work and wages to our people. These needs have been met by the inventions which created our railways, our boats, our airplanes, our telegraph and telephones, and the mechanisms of our shops and factories and which are indispensable to their operation. One thought that occurs to me in my consideration of the patent system is the benefits which it has brought to the women of America. Such inventions as the telephone, the typewriter, the computing machine, and even the machinery in our various industries have given women an opportunity for employment at wages and under conditions which could not have been within their reach before the arrival of the inventions I have mentioned and many others besides. I think this fact is important for another reason. It convinces me, at least, that machines have not merely not deprived workers, both men and women, of employment, but have in fact increased the demand for human brains and human hands in our industries.

So, my friends, this brief recital of truths that may not always be evident will, I trust, be sufficient to impress upon you and upon us all the advantages which our patent system has spread among all our people in every quarter of this great country. There is a relation, too, between our industrial prosperity and our national security. Our development in industry, including agriculture, has assured also the strength we must have to preserve for ourselves and perpetuate to our posterity the blessings given to us by our Constitution and our political institutions, including the American patent system.

To read the history of the patent law and those great inventions protected under it is to learn the history of this Nation's development from a sparsely settled wilderness to a Nation with the greatest industrial expansion the world over. It is not an understatement to say that the soundness of our patent system has been a great factor in providing our people with greater comforts and luxuries than are known to the people of any other nation on earth.

GOOD CONDUCT OF FEDERAL JUDGES BILL

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I suppose Members wonder why I am up here again, but the truth is that I have not been able to sit down since yesterday. [Laughter.] I have some suggestions which I want the Members to consider, and I am going to put them in the RECORD. I do not want anybody here to sympathize with me, either. I want you to understand I have no feelings about that vote at all. To show what a good sport I am, I say to the world, without any reservation, that I have as high regard for the foresight and the statesmanship of you who defeated that bill yesterday as you had for the bill that was defeated. [Laughter.]

I am so certain that an additional method supplementing impeachment for removing Federal judges must be devised, or one will develop under pressure of necessity which may not be a basic improvement, that I am taking the liberty of urging you as my copartners in responsibility not to dismiss this matter voted on yesterday from your own sense of responsibility.

This is the general picture as I see it. Nobody yet knows what the Administrative Office of the United States Courts will be able to do in a corrective way but possibly something quite substantial. Everything indicates a continuing increase of Department of Justice interest and influence with reference to these Federal judges. Those two things more or less fit in, not by design but by a natural tendency.

It could be that the Senate will work out a plan to create an agency, possibly a committee of its own Members, who would in effect try the issues presented in an impeachment, reserving to itself the final voice in the determination.

If correction should not come from either of these, I suggest that you reexamine the constitutional questions involved, and if I should not be here then, I suggest that you look in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, page 1894, and get the bill printed on that page and reintroduce it. You will find the sustaining arguments in the RECORD of the next day, and if things have caught up with you by that time, you will not have any difficulty in passing your bill.

Seriously, I urge you not to dismiss this matter from your examination and interest because something has got to be done about it sooner or later if we would reserve respect for our governmental processes and at the same time make certain the preservation of the independence of the Federal judiciary, with the judges holding office for life, subject only to the condition of good behavior.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

SESQUICENTENNIAL OF SIGNING OF FIRST PATENT ACT BY GEORGE WASHINGTON

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, the protection afforded by our American patent system to the creation and application of scientific and mechanical phenomena by our men of genius, has been widely acclaimed during the celebration of the sequicentennial of the signing of the first Patent Act by George Washington in 1790, as probably the dominant factor in the advancement of our Nation. Public Resolution No. 58, of the Seventy-sixth Congress, creating a commission to arrange for the celebration of this anniversary testifies to the interest of Congress in this event. The President signed this resolution March 15, 1940, and in his subsequent proclamation of March 21 designated April 10 as Inventors' and Patent Day.

[Public Resolution—No. 58—76th Cong.—ch. 56—3d sess.—S. J. Res. 206]

Joint resolution creating a commission to arrange for the celebration of the sesquicentennial anniversary of the signing of the first United States patent law

Whereas there will occur on April 10, 1940, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of President George Washington's approval of the first act of Congress authorizing and regulating the grant of patents as contemplated in article I, section 8, of the Constitution; and

Whereas the encouragement and the protection thus afforded to discoverers and inventors have both inspired and rewarded their genius to the benefit of this Nation and the whole world; and

Whereas the American patent system inaugurated by this act of Congress has promoted countless applications of the arts and sciences to the needs and well-being of our people and thereby contributed notably to a higher standard of living in our country; and

Whereas it is fitting that the anniversary of the institution of a system so beneficial to the people of the United States should be worthily observed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a commission consisting of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Patents, the chairman of the House Committee on Patents, the Secretary of Commerce, the Commissioner of Patents, and five other members to be selected by them, with power and authority to make suitable arrangements for an appropriate observance of the sesquicentennial of the first United States patent law.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is requested to set aside April 10, 1940, as Inventors' and Patent Day to invite a general public commemoration of an event which has proved so important and salutary to this Nation.

SEC. 3. That the Senate and the House of Representatives shall conduct suitable exercises whereby Congress may mark the anniversary.

Approved, March 15, 1940.

In accordance with this resolution and proclamation, it seems to me appropriate that the Members of Congress pause in thanksgiving for the blessings of this day which are due, not only to pioneer inventors, who have been honored at many of the functions held in connection with this celebration, but also to our forefathers and predecessors who inaugurated the patent system in the First Congress, and then promoted and contributed to its improvement down through the years. It is fitting indeed that we recall the names of some of these men—legislative pioneers of the patent system.

Washington, who said:

The advancement of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, by all proper means, will not, I trust, need recommendation, but I cannot forbear intimating to you the expediency of giving effectual encouragement, as well to the introduction of new and useful inventions from abroad, as to the exertions of skill and genius in producing them at home. * * * Nor am I less persuaded that there is nothing which can better deserve your patronage than the promotion of science and literature.

Jefferson said:

Certainly an inventor ought to be allowed a right to the benefit of his invention for some certain time. * * * Nobody wishes more than I do that ingenuity should receive liberal encouragement.

The committee of the First Congress, consisting of Aedanus Burke, of South Carolina; Benjamin Huntington, of Connecticut, and Lambert Cadwalader, of New Jersey, which was instructed to bring in bills on patents should be remembered; likewise Benjamin Franklin, himself an inventor, Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina, who submitted to the Federal Convention in May 1787 a number of propositions, among them being "to grant patents for useful inventions," and James Madison, later President, who suggested certain powers as proper to be added to those of the general legislature, one of which was "to encourage, by premiums and provisions, the advancement of useful knowledge and discoveries."

History records that Daniel Webster, in 1824, presented legislation to help relieve the burden of the patentees in the matter of costs in infringement cases, declaring in the course of the debate that a patent was evidence of property—that invention was the fruit of man's brain. In 1835, Senator Ruggles of Maine was made chairman of a committee to take into consideration the condition of the Patent Office and the laws relating to the issuing of patents. It was under his guidance that a report was made to Congress which culminated in the act of July 4, 1836, the basis of the patent system as it functions today. Senator Ruggles' activities were to a great extent responsible for the passage on the same day of a bill providing for the erection of the original Patent Office Building. President Andrew Jackson signed both of these laws.

It would be a stupendous task to attempt to credit all our legislators who have taken part in the construction of the patent system. Not to include the name of Abraham Lincoln, an inventor, a Congressman and a President, however, whose words, "The patent system added the fuel of interest to the fire of genius" have been quoted innumerably, would be inexcusable.

A chronology of legislative pioneers of the patent system would be incomplete without mention of the men who had the double advantage of experience as a Member of Congress and as a Commissioner of Patents. No less than nine of the Commissioners served on Capitol Hill. I shall simply list their names and refer you to the Outline of the History of the Patent Office, Journal of the Patent Office Society, volume 18, No. 7, for their abridged biographies. In the order of their service as Commissioner of Patents, they are: Edmund Burke, William Darius Bishop, Philip Francis Thomas, David P. Holloway, Thomas C. Theaker, Robert Holland Duell, Halbert Eleazer Paine, Benjamin Butterworth, and William Edgar Simonds. Mr. Butterworth served in the House of Representatives before and after his first term as Commissioner; he was chairman of the House Committee on Patents in the Fifty-first Congress and was known as a staunch defender of the patent system on the floor of the House.

Conjunctly with this reference to Members of Congress who served as the head of the Patent Office, it seems to me appropriate that I mention and pay tribute to the legislators whose meritorious service has been rewarded by judicial honors. At this time I shall only mention the fact that three of the five judges now sitting on the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals are former Members of Congress, presided over by the Honorable Finis James Garrett, for more than 20 years a Member of this body.

To complete this memorial to the legislators closely associated with patents in Congress, Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to insert at this point the names of the chairmen of the Senate and House Patents Committees who have served since the institution of the committees:

NOTE.—The first mention in a Congressional Directory of a Senate committee on patents is in the Directory for 1836 (24th Cong., 1st sess.). It is listed under "Select Committees" as "On the Patent Office." John Ruggles, Democrat, Maine, is listed as chairman. In the Directory for 1837 (25th Cong., 1st sess.) the committee is listed with the standing committees as "On Patents and the Patent Office." Not until the second edition of the Congressional Directory for the 42d Cong., 2d sess. (May 1872) is the committee found listed under its present title of Committee on Patents.

NOTE.—The first mention of a House committee on patents in a Congressional Directory is found in the edition for 1836–37 (24th Cong., 2d sess.). It is listed as "Committee on Patent Office" and is grouped as a select committee with James Harper, Whig, Pennsylvania, as chairman. Sept. 15, 1837 (25th Cong., 1st sess.), the present standing Committee on Patents was created. (See Congressional Globe, 25th Cong., 1st sess., p. 34.)

From the House list, may I single out for special approbation, Congressman Thomas A. Jenckes, of Rhode Island, who as chairman when the important revision and consolidation of the patent laws was effected by the act of July 8, 1870, undoubtedly aided in the accomplishment of what must have been a herculean task. I should like also to name especially, some of the chairmen who guided the labors of the committee in recent years—Hon. William A. Oldfield, of Arkansas, who conducted an extensive hearing in the Sixty-second Congress on revision and codification of the Patent Statutes, the printed record of which is often referred to at the present time—Hon. Albert H. Vestal, of Indiana, who is, no doubt remembered and honored in the hearts of many of the Members here today as the chairman in the 1920's when more applications for patents were filed in the Patent Office than at any time in its history—and lastly, my immediate predecessor, lovable Dr. William I. Sirovich, of New York, who while always the friend of the downtrodden, exerted his energies impartially for the improvement of the patent system, as is attested by his words: "While we want to do justice to the corporate interests and play absolutely fair with the inventor, I want to know just where does the public come in; will the public be benefited also?" (P. 164 Hearings on Patents, 72d Cong., February 16, 1932.)

There are some who would nullify and discredit the attainments accruing from the perfection of the patent laws. The theory of a minority in our country that the discovery and adaptation to use of a new invention destroys the jobs of those employed in the industry displaced by the invention, has been refuted many times. To those who persist, however, in the viewpoint that labor-saving machinery should be banned or taxed, I challenge the wisdom of such a proposal. It is my contention that every new patentable idea exploited, not only absorbs an equivalent to the number of people displaced, but opens a wide field of new employment possibilities. The automobile industry, founded on a number of patents, illustrates the potentialities for expansion. It could be contended this mode of transportation obliterated the "horse and buggy", and with the passing of that old-time conveyance there was little further need for the blacksmith or the harnessmaker. Think, however, in addition to the growth and expansion of transportation by automobile, of the collateral fields that have similarly benefited—the garage, selling gas and oil. Here again, it can possibly be contended that agriculture has suffered by the lack of a market for the grain used to feed horses—statistics will show, however, that a far less proportionate part of our population was fortunate in having personal transportation in the last century, in comparison to the present "horseless age." The production, refining, transportation and distribution of fuel is dependent on the automobile. The rubber industry, likewise is a beneficiary of this invention. In the production of rubber tires, a great quantity of cotton is required, and the production and fabrication of this material has been a boon to our farmers and factory workers. The illustration of this one invention has almost infinite ramifications, with its effect on the steel industry, electrical industry, glass industry, hardware industry, instrument makers and even the radio industry—just to mention some of those immediately affected—and passing over the relation that can be drawn to road building, communications, and other fields of endeavor only remotely connected. It will be seen that the automobile assimilates the products of many industries—they are so interlocking that the abolition or destruction of any part of this commercial pattern would result in chaos. It is interesting to note at this point that an article in one of our national news magazines written as a result of a job possibility survey, mentions the need, among other craftsmen, of expert blacksmiths. Consequently, it cannot be truly said that all new inventions utterly efface the need for those skilled in the old-time branches of manual employment.

The advantages resultant in the exploitation of an invention such as that just discussed are not confined to one section of the country. The development of our natural resources for the use of the automobile industry has affected the prosperity of the constituency of every Member of Congress—in my own district, oil-well drilling and oil refining have contributed to our forward strides; in Pennsylvania, steel production; in Ohio, glass production; in the South, cotton production; in New England, cotton fabrication; our Atlantic and Pacific ports bustle with importing and exporting activity, and in the various other parts of our country the automobile in one way or another contributes to our internal commerce.

Mr. Speaker, today we commend and salute in Congress the foresight and militant perseverance of the builders and defenders of our patent system. The clarity of their vision and wisdom cannot be questioned. The inspiration furnished to our creative genius by their enactments supplies the momentum which is carrying us forward today. Despite the elapse of a hundred years since an official of the Patent Office stated that "the advancement of the arts from year to year taxes our credulity and seems to presage the arrival of that period when human improvement must end," and the further fact that many unknown and unthought-of advancements have since been made, there is nothing on the horizon that would indicate to me we are approaching a saturation point so far as inventive skill is concerned, and I venture to predict that the celebration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the signing of the first patent act will be the occasion for an inventory of some now undreamed-of miraculous new wonders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point and insert the names of the Members of Congress who served on the Committee on Patents, both in the House and in the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an address given by Fred Taylor Wilson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up the resolution, House Resolution 408, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 408

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Joint Resolution 265, a joint resolution authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to make studies of productivity and labor costs in industry. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] desires to use any time on this rule?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I have some requests for time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes to make in order House Joint Resolution 265, which authorizes the Bureau of Labor Statistics to continue its studies of productivity and labor costs in industry.

I do not understand that there is any opposition anywhere to the adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLAR], and I ask unanimous consent that he likewise be permitted to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, it was in all kindliness that I offered in the RECORD yesterday a letter sent to me by Dr. Franz Boas, of Columbia University, wherein he called attention to the fear that some 50 professors, representatives of universities, had of what the Dies committee might do in connection with their purported statement that they would examine into the political and social affiliations of textbook writers, professors, and teachers in the various universities.

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman will yield, the committee never made any such statement as that. We are not interested in the social or political views of the professors. We merely say this, that if a man is a member of the Communist Party or of a Fascist organization and uses textbooks in order to get over his propaganda to the youth of this land, we are at least entitled to let the country know what are his affiliations with the Communist Party. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I refuse to yield.

I repeat, this letter was received by me from this gentleman, who is a distinguished professor and an expert on anthropology and known all over the world. I went to Columbia University and know him well. I respect that gentleman's word. He spoke for 50 other professors. He said it was the purpose of the committee to do this. I am glad to receive the word of the chairman that it is not the purpose of the committee directly to examine into the so-called political and social affiliations of these textbook writers. Carrying out such a purpose to its logical extremes would force textbook writers to conform to the exclusive ideas laid down by the Dies committee. Education would receive a deadly blow.

In all kindliness, I repeat, I made my suggestions yesterday. Certainly this committee, presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, has done a great deal of good. I voted on two occasions for appropriations for that committee. But it is a possibility that in the enthusiasm that committee might show it might do some harm. It is well for us to appear in this forum and point out the possibilities of error. In their zeal, their honest and sincere zeal and enthusiasm to ferret out these wrongs, they may be guilty of some abuses. They may invade private rights that are sacred under the Constitution. Are we so intolerant and thin-skinned as to resent criticisms of that sort? I am sure the gentleman from Texas cannot resent criticism honestly made, and I made the criticism honestly.

I was one of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary which helped sponsor the very bill to which the gentleman adverted, namely the McCormack bill, to get after foreign agents now in this country representing Communist governments or Nazi governments. I want the committee in all its power to get after these agents. Nevertheless, there is a limit beyond which the activities of this committee shall not go, and I refer to certain rights known as freedom of speech and freedom against unwarranted search and seizure. Let them search and let them seize, but I caution that they do it in pursuance of precepts of law and in pursuance of the Constitution. I would rather see the committee err in their failure to ferret out communism than in their enthusiasm commit infractions of the Constitution, commit wrongs that cannot be righted.

I called attention yesterday, and I am going to do it again, although I may be accused of repetition, to the fact that Jefferson was so zealous of freedom of speech and freedom of expression that he said:

If I were given a choice of government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I would choose the latter.

I recall that Voltaire said:

I disapprove of what you say, but will defend to the death your right to say it.

Even the meanest culprit has the right to his say. Even the Communist has rights under the Constitution. He can resist unlawful search and seizure of his papers and documents.

A Federal judge in Pennsylvania has held the actions of the agents of the Dies committee illegal and unwarranted. That is serious. That judge may be wrong. I do not think he is. I wish to caution members of the committee in this fashion, that if you are guilty of unwarranted search and unwarranted seizure—and I do not say you are—a Federal judge said you are—but if you are, and I hope you will not be—you defeat your own purposes, because when you use the force and violence that may be unwarranted under our Constitution you have only your labor for your pains, because you are going to strengthen the Communists, you are not going to weaken them. They then become victims of oppression and, as such, grow stronger and stronger.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I earnestly and sincerely hope the chairman will not deem this a personal attack upon him. I meant no attack upon him and did not intend it as such. I intend to set limits or guideposts of caution beyond which the committee shall not go. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to my colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GIBBS] for the purpose of propounding a unanimous-consent request.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. GIBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that subcommittee No. 4 of the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat difficult to understand why the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, or any member of that committee is very much concerned about a letter of criticism from the professors as printed in the RECORD of yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. DIES. I want to make it clear to the gentleman that my purpose was not to answer criticism. We have received so much criticism that it has become an ordinary matter. The point I wanted to make was whether or not the courts of the land are going to sustain these people in denying us that information. That becomes a very material question. But what some gentleman may think about us is, of course, not a very material matter.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would not think so, in view of the manner in which the remarks of the gentleman were received by the House. We all heard the applause; it was ringing and continued for some time. We all heard the reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and we all heard—if you can hear silence—we all heard the silence that followed. There was not one single demonstration of approval that followed the reply to the chairman's remarks.

On every occasion that I can recall when the question of the authority of the committee or the matter of money to be given the committee has come up, the House almost unanimously has sustained the committee and the activities of the chairman. There can be no doubt but this House is enthusiastically back of him and the committee.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. The reason I answered the gentleman from New York was because on yesterday he made the charge that the proceeding was absolutely illegal. I agree with what the gentleman said that in these times we must be careful not, in our zeal, to violate the fundamental rights guaranteed to every citizen, but what I wanted to point out was that this committee has not done that. If it has done so, it will be because the courts hold invalid the State law under which we acted.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think every Member of the House is convinced that the committee is proceeding in an orderly and in a legal manner.

The other day I saw a cartoon in the Chicago Tribune which quite accurately pictures the methods of some who, when the Government attempts to prosecute them, hide behind the Constitution.

The Communists and some of their bedfellows insist upon expressing their opinions upon any and all occasions. The truth in no way hampers them. But the moment the Government attempts to curtail some of their activities on the ground that they are unlawful, they invoke the doctrine of free speech, a free press, and hide behind the Constitution.

This cartoon to which reference is made pictures the Constitution as being spread on the table and on one side a rat was shown chewing into the very center of it; just below was another drawing of the same Constitution showing the damage the chewing and the gnawing which the rat had done, and then, underneath the very document which he had been destroying, he crawled and hid for protection. [Laughter.] That is what always happens when those who take extreme positions and attack our Government and its laws are caught in their unlawful activities.

The gentleman who just answered the chairman of the committee made very much of the Constitution and rightly so, for all too often it is ignored. Of course, we should always obey the Constitution, and the right of free speech we should maintain at every opportunity, but why is it that the gentleman from New York, if he believes in free speech, comes in and criticizes the chairman of the committee or some member of the committee because in their enthusiasm and zeal, as he calls it, perhaps they said something that was not strictly in accord with his views.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that this is an instance where the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has crawled under the Constitution? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I never refer to any Member of the House in a disparaging way for there is no reason to question any Member's motives. Moreover, I heard from the Speaker one day that we should not make personal reference to a Member. [Laughter.] We may all find need to shield ourselves behind that safeguard, hence we should all be careful to see that its terms are not violated.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the investigating committee, that they had discovered that Communists were getting into the navy yards and places of that kind, and in view of the foreign situation, does not the gentleman think it appropriate that we should give them some more money?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MAY. Do you not think we should give them more money for the committee to have more aid in investigating these things?

Mr. HOFFMAN. There is no question but what the opinion of the House is—oh, there may be one or two Members somewhere around once in awhile who may think otherwise, but the opinion of the House as a body is that we cannot give the committee too much aid, too much encouragement, or too much money, and that is one thing and one appropriation that I do not believe you have heard any Republican criticize in any way.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If they have found Communists in the navy yards, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has indicated, why have not the New Deal administrative officers kicked those Communists out of the navy yards?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. In fairness, of course, we found from the files at Philadelphia, on their own record, of the existence of Communists, but if we cannot force them to say who they are, naturally we cannot find out who those Communists are in the navy yards and neither can any other administrative agency of the Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. In the attack made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] yesterday on the Dies committee he included a letter supposedly from some educators, and one of the things brought out in that letter was a criticism of the Dies committee with respect to a study to be made into the textbooks used in the public schools and colleges.

I want to say to the gentleman and to the House that the Communist Party itself, through its leader, William Z. Foster, when, 2 years ago, he proclaimed in a magazine called The Communist that they were going to and should make inroads into textbooks, and I think that is the answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that I am sure he does not want us, as members of this great democracy, to follow the example of the Communists.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. That is very true, but I cannot understand why these attacks are made on the Dies committee which is investigating communism.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And I would like to say to the gentleman from New York, to whom I just yielded, you spoke about free speech, and we all believe in that, and are you going to help us get into this N. L. R. B. law in a week or two an amendment providing for free speech on the part of the employers?

Mr. CELLER. I will be very happy to do that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I hope you will do a little work on that.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I do not believe it is the right of free speech, the violation of which these people are complaining. The right that is being violated is their privilege with respect to giving evidence against themselves which would incriminate them. I call the attention of the Congress to the fact that that is a right which has always been abrogated in democracies when a state of war exists, and this form of organization which the chairman has described is the modern way of making war against us and, therefore, the privilege against self-incrimination should be terminated at this time as a method of defense for our country. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. I may say to the gentlewoman that when these witnesses have refused to answer, I have asked them, "Do you refuse on the ground that it might incriminate you?" because the committee will not compel witnesses to incriminate themselves, but they will not put it upon that ground. They put it upon an entirely different ground, that they have a right to keep this information to themselves.

Mr. COX. That it is secret?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and ask unanimous consent that he may proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Dies Committee on Un-American Activities has rendered a great service to this country in exposing subversive activities, whether they are communistic, Nazi, or propaganda or activities of any other foreign "ism." It seems to me, however, that the time has come when we should stop merely denouncing the Communists, the Nazi, or other un-American groups, and should recommend and bring in legislation. For a number of years different committees have been investigating these un-American activities, and certainly in this Congress, with only a few more months to go, it is about time for the Dies committee to bring in definite recommendations to put an end to these subversive activities in the United States.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. DIES. That is exactly what we are doing now. We are preparing legislation that we are going to present to the House at the earliest possible date.

Mr. FISH. What I am concerned with, is when is the earliest possible date? The gentleman knows that this Congress will probably adjourn by the 1st of June.

Mr. DIES. I may say to the gentleman that the committee has instructed the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], by unanimous action, to confer with the Department of Justice, and the Department of State immediately, and undertake to secure their cooperation in the preparation of a bill that will force full publicity of all these agencies.

Mr. FISH. That is the only recommendation you propose?

Mr. MASON. Some bills have already been passed.

Mr. FISH. I think every Member of the House knows that I am in sympathy with the gentleman's committee and the action of the committee and that I am opposed to the spread of nazi-ism or communism in America. But as long as we permit the Communist Party to be a legal party, certainly a Communist has a right as an American citizen to express his views. Ten years ago the special committee of which I was the chairman, followed by the McCormack committee, made certain recommendations to the Congress. One of them was urging the different State legislatures to enact laws to take the Communist Party off the ballot in the various States. The Federal Government can do nothing about that. It is a State affair, and as long as the Communist Party is on the ballot and it is a legal party the Communists have the right to freedom of speech, the same as any other American citizen. To my way of thinking, the Communist Party is not an American party; it is an adjunct or agency of the Communist Internationale at Moscow; it is a foreign party taking its orders from Moscow and from a foreign country, something they do not deny. It is the duty of the different States of the Union to act, and it is up to the Dies committee and the Congress to urge such action. It is the duty of the States to take the Communist Party off the ballot in these various States. As long as the Communist Party remains on the ballot in the States they have the right of freedom of speech and to put up their candidates and to urge their views. I do not think anyone will question that statement. Let us stop merely abusing the Communists and let us put an end to the Communist Party as a recognized and legal entity. Next, let us write drastic deportation laws that will cause the deportation of these alien Communists and Nazis and others spreading un-American propaganda in the United States and send them back to their native lands. Day after day someone takes the floor here and merely denounces the Communists, and we are getting nowhere, with this session coming rapidly to an end.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman has made some statements about which I would like to put him right.

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Does the gentleman know that at many of the sessions of the Dies committee we have not only discussed the question of legislation, but we have at the present time various bills in preparation. Also, one member of the Dies committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], was instrumental in having a bill passed in this Congress, and just the other day it was vetoed by the President of the United States. I cannot speak for the members of the Dies committee, but I am confident that the members of the Dies committee were favorable to the bill.

Mr. FISH. All I am asking for are definite recommendations for legislative action before we adjourn.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman will get them before we adjourn.

Mr. FISH. So that we can discuss and act on them before we adjourn and if necessary take them into the campaign.

Furthermore, I trust that the Dies committee will investigate foreign propaganda in the United States. Today probably the most dangerous source of propaganda comes from foreign lands—not from the Communists, but from foreigners in this country who have come here for one purpose, and one purpose alone, and that is to involve us in foreign wars. It seems to me that the Dies committee could very well afford to spend more time in investigating this foreign propaganda and this war hysteria that is being spread throughout the land, emanating from foreign sources, and supplied and furnished with foreign gold.

The single biggest issue in America today is to keep us out of foreign wars. It is not communism, it is not even nazi-ism or fascism or un-American activities. The biggest single issue is to keep down this war hysteria, which is inflaming the passions and hatreds of the American people, largely through foreign propaganda, in order to ease or force us into war. I would like to see the Dies committee act on that, and act now.

Everybody knows there are a million or more Communists in America. We have known it for 5 or 10 years, and we have done very little about it. If we are to legislate before we adjourn we must consider the measures now.

I took this time today to say that I believe the American people deplore the invasion of Denmark and of Norway by the German armed forces, but as much as we may deplore it, it does not change our situation in America one bit, in spite of the increased tempo of foreign war propaganda. We should reaffirm our American neutrality, reaffirm our determination to keep out of these foreign wars, no matter where they may spread in Europe. This war hysteria, this fear and dread of war, pervades the country to such an extent that the interventionists and internationalists will make the American people believe that we have a duty to become involved in foreign wars, in order to again make the world safe for democracy.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes, I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Since Greenland belongs to Denmark, suppose Germany should make an effort to take charge of Greenland and establish an airplane base, or otherwise use it, what position do you think our Government should take?

Mr. FISH. Well, I think the American Government should maintain its policy of neutrality. I think the American Government in all cases, unless we are attacked by some foreign foe, should keep out of these foreign wars. However, I will answer the gentleman by saying this, that there is no chance whatever, as long as Great Britain controls the seas, for Germany to seize Greenland or Iceland, or any of those distant possessions of either Denmark or Norway. That is merely an academic question. There is no chance whatever as long as the British Navy is three or four times larger than the German Navy, for Germany to take over Greenland or Iceland.

I think we should approach all these questions when and if they become an accomplished fact, as if affects the interests and security of the United States. Meantime, we propose to maintain our American neutrality, and policy of nonintervention.

Now, I have risen today because of this un-American propaganda aimed against every Member of Congress who opens his mouth in behalf of American neutrality, against the secret diplomacy of the administration, and in favor of keeping America out of war. Eastern newspapers have laid down a vicious barrage of personal attacks, distortion of the truth, and the facts, and utter misquotations of Members of Congress who have the temerity to stand on the floor of this House and say they propose to do everything to maintain our traditional policy of neutrality and to keep America out of war unless we are attacked.

I hold in my hand a cartoon from a New York newspaper, published in the Evening Post last week, and reproduced in the Washington Times-Herald on Sunday. It is a picture of Hitler, holding a half statement alleged to have been made by me, which reads as follows:

I cannot conceive the German Foreign Office fabricating or forging the documents—

Referring to the White Book, stopping in the middle of a sentence, which read in full—

as it is certainly in the interest of the German Government to maintain peaceful relations with us.

This is typical of the extremes to which these propagandists will go in spreading malicious war propaganda. These newspapers took half a sentence, distorting the truth to suit their own purpose, and published that in cartoon form. That is only a part of the war propaganda that is being spread daily to break down the will of the American people to keep out of these wars; to inflame our hatreds and our passions, so that we can in the future be lined up not only to pay for foreign wars but to pay for it by the sacrifice of the lives of American soldiers in foreign lands.

I cannot speak for the Democrats. I think I know the attitude of the American people. I have some right to speak for the Republicans on international issues and foreign affairs. I know that the American people are willing to spend millions or billions of dollars for adequate national defense, but not one single dollar to send an American soldier to foreign lands to fight other people's battles. [Applause.]

I go further and advise my Republican friends if they want to carry this election they had better stop pussyfooting and shadow-boxing on this war issue, and make it very plain where the Republican Party stands; that it is the party of peace, and that it realizes that the greatest issue confronting the American people is to keep us out of foreign entanglements and foreign wars. We should write into our party platform a peace program, so that every American man or woman, whether they be Republican or Democrat, will understand from the beginning that a vote for a Republican candidate, no matter who he may be, means that the United States of America will stay out of these wars unless we are attacked by some foreign foe. [Applause.]

The American people know where Roosevelt stands. They know he has been an internationalist from the beginning; they know that he stands for collective security; they know that he advocates the right to determine the aggressor nation, to apply economic sanctions, and to police and quarantine the world. On the other hand, they do not know exactly where the Republican Party stands. They ought to know where 90 percent of the Republican Members of the House have stood for the last 3 years since the President's quarantine speech at Chicago. I am convinced that 95 percent of the American people have already made up their minds that they want to keep out of war. They want to know how to keep out of war; and as I listened to some of these gentlemen on the Democratic side today imply that President Roosevelt is keeping us out of war, in view of all these documents that have come to light recently quoting Bullitt and Kennedy, and the speeches of our Minister to Canada, and all this secret diplomacy, making promises and commitments that we would be involved in the war sooner or later—it is no wonder there is confusion on this greatest of all issues. In spite of these attempts to defend the President's internationalism and his interventionist views, we know where the President stands and we know where this administration stands, but the public is somewhat in doubt as to where the Republican Party stands. I am asked almost daily, "What is the foreign policy of the Republican Party? You say you differ from the New Deal and the Democratic administration on foreign affairs." We do differ, and it is our duty therefore to write into the Republican platform an antiwar plank—a peace plank—saying, "Yes; we believe in adequate national defense, but we are opposed to all foreign wars," so that every American will know that the Republican Party is the party of peace in America. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal of discussion here this morning relative to communism, and I believe we are all agreed that each and every one of us despise that form of government or that form of dictatorship. But we have another problem in the country today that gives us a great cause to stop and think. This was brought out yesterday, and I want to call the attention of the membership of the House to a very serious situation, and it is growing more serious every day. I am mighty happy to have my good friend and colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] here when this happened.

On yesterday there was brought out before the Committee on Immigration testimony that we have a population in Hawaii of 400,000—in the island of Hawaii that is now in the possession of the United States. In this island of Hawaii there are 153,539 Japanese, 116,584 American citizens, and 36,958 aliens. Mr. Speaker, I want the Members especially to listen to this: We have 73,000 Japanese who are also American citizens—73,000 who have a dual citizenship. Sixty-two thousand of this group are males—this is in the island of Hawaii. We have there to offset that 23,300 American soldiers and 2,000 National Guardsmen guarding this island. Mr. Speaker, 62,000 of this group which have dual citizenship are males, but American citizens by virtue of the fact that they were born in a possession of the United States. We have a right to assume that from 32,000 to 35,000 of this group of 62,000 have served in the armies, the navy, or the marine corps of Japan, yet by virtue of the fact that they are American citizens we cannot stop their coming back to the island of Hawaii. That condition exists today.

Mr. Speaker, I shall very soon introduce a bill that will take away the citizenship of any man who dons the uniform of any other country or fights under another flag. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 seconds to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, at a mass meeting held in Buffalo, N. Y., on Sunday night, at which were present several thousand Polish-American people on the occasion of the welcoming of General Huyler and His Excellency, the Polish Ambassador to the United States, the following resolutions were adopted having to do with the Congress:

Whereas we American citizens of Polish origin or descent stand united in our condemnation of the merciless and brutal attacks on Poland, designed to exterminate the Polish Nation and to rob the people of their historic territorial possession; and

Whereas mass murder and executions of civilians and noncombatants, especially of women and children, were committed systematically by air bombings upon the rural population, hospitals and orphanages, churches and synagogues; and

Whereas the arrest and placement in concentration camps for slow and untimely death of Polish scholars and professors from the Jagiellonian University of Krakow, as well as other institutions of learning and culture, further substantiate our belief that the goal of the barbaric invaders is the destruction of Poland by means of exterminating her leaders first; and

Whereas in furtherance of this aim the Nazi government is expropriating and evicting the Poles from their lands and settling thereon Germans brought from all parts of Europe, and especially from the Baltic states; and

Whereas we base our action at this meeting on reliable and official documents compiled by His Eminence August Cardinal Hlond, primate of Poland for His Holiness Pope Pius XII, in which specific charges are made that almost all Catholic institutions in the archdioceses of Poznan and Gniezno have been seized, and that the priests and nuns have been subjected to unparalleled persecution and humiliation; and

Whereas the Governments of Nazi Germany and of Soviet Russia have repeatedly denied neutral countries and their humanitarian organizations the right to administer to the needs of the homeless, sick, and poor while stark hunger stares 70 percent of Poland's population in the face; and

Whereas this desperately stricken nation is looking across the ocean in its pressing and widespread need to us, Americans of Polish descent, the legitimate heirs of a highly cultured civilization, with ideas of liberty, democracy, and freedom of opportunity, in common with those of these United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we express, first of all, our deepest gratitude to the Government of the United States, and especially to His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President, for granting recognition to the present Polish Government, located in France, thus proving to the world that the United States does not recognize the fourth partition of Poland and that Poland continues in her position in the family of nations; and be it further

Resolved, That we earnestly petition the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the Senate, and the House of Representatives, and especially the members of the Committees on Foreign Affairs, to support and hasten a carefully planned and far-reaching humanitarian work to salvage the human wreckage caused by starvation, disease, and exposure, with the view that our American initiative, generosity, and example may stimulate other nations of the world into similar action; and be it further

Resolved, That we most respectfully urge and implore the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, to use all of the weight of his power and prestige in obtaining prompt favorable action by the House Foreign Affairs Committee on the humanitarian legislation for Polish relief favorably and unanimously recommended to that committee by a subcommittee thereof within the week closing April 6 so that Congress will have an opportunity to pass the legislation while the need is urgent; and be it further

Resolved, That in particular we appeal to all Congressmen to appropriate the sum of $20,000,000 for food, clothing, and medical supplies for all destitute people of Poland; furthermore, we request the appointment by the President of the United States of a commission which will coordinate the work of various organizations endeavoring to bring aid to the suffering people of all creeds and races in the occupied areas of Poland; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge our Congressmen to sponsor humanitarian legislation such as the bill introduced in the Senate by our distinguished senior Senator, ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York State, intended to take care of the orphan victims of persecution, limiting the number to be admitted to a maximum of 10,000 orphans per year; and be it further

Resolved, That we express our deepest gratitude and thanks to all humanitarian agencies, especially to the American Red Cross; the American Commission for Polish Relief; the Friends of Poland; the American Committee for the Polish Ambulance Fund; and to all American people helping to hasten relief to the suffering people in occupied Polish territory, and the refugees in Rumania, Hungary, France, and Britain; and be it further

Resolved, That we all solemnly swear and reaffirm our wholehearted loyalty and adherence to the principles of democracy upon which this Nation was founded, and to the American way of life and government in keeping with the fundamental right to peace with justice for all mankind; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States; to the Secretary of State; to the Vice President, JOHN N. GARNER, President of the Senate; to Representative WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, Speaker of the House; and to the United States Senators and Representatives from the State of New York.

The Right Reverend Monsignor Alexander Pitass; the Right Reverend Monsignor Francis Kasprzak; the Right Reverend Monsignor Andrew S. Garstka; Dr. Stanislaus N. Borowiak; Dr. Ambrose Maciejewski; Mr. Stanislaus Turkiewicz; Rev. Cezary Krzyzan; Mr. Stanislaus Sielski; Dr. Francis E. Fronczak; Marta Mazurowska, secretary, committee on resolutions.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to insert the resolutions I have referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I was promised 7 minutes, but I now find I have but 3. I will therefore speak somewhat out of order for a brief statement and extend what I wanted to say about the bill under consideration. I noticed that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] just came into the room. His words on yesterday are still ringing in my ears—"that we want to get the notion out of our heads that in the Constitution impeachment was the only method provided by which we could remove civil officers." I want to mention the unwritten part of the Constitution against a third term and ask if he has gotten that notion out of his head. Does he think it will be all right for this administration to have a third term? I have been rather suspicious that the gentleman from Texas could not possibly subscribe to that proposition. But if he does, and to all others who are interested in that particular doctrine, I want them to read the editorial which appeared in yesterday's Washington Post on that subject.

I offer this toast to this administration:

Some people bring happiness wherever they go.
Some people bring happiness whenever they go.

[Applause.]

I shall indeed be happy whenever this administration goes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman tell us what difference it makes as to what anyone here thinks about a third term in view of the thoughts of the people of the United States as expressed by the returns in the elections so far?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. These returns worry me greatly. How can our people be longer oblivious to conditions? This is only a $100,000 bill to bring out statistics to bolster up the present regime. If they are unfavorable, you will not hear a thing about them. The T. N. E. C., which I wanted to talk about, is being fed only on favorable statistics, such as can be used to alibi these spending orgies. Only certain witnesses sure to respond favorably to the New Deal contentions were invited to appear. It is an interesting story, and I cannot cover it in 3½ minutes. I promise a little later to take the floor and talk at length about that matter. I have heretofore referred briefly to the subject.

This is a little bill involving only $100,000, but it is my duty and yours to stop it if we can. This is only another method to bolster arguments favorable to this administration. We have now learned this lesson thoroughly. Recall the statistics so carefully arranged and presented during the hearings on the trade agreements. I shall have to vote against the bill for this reason. Again I say, consider the happiness that will come to our people when this method of operation is done away with. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if I thought there was the slightest possibility of the American public misunderstanding the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], by taking seriously the remarks which he made upon the floor of the House a few moments ago, I would request an extension of time in order to make reply.

Mr. Speaker, it appears there is no opposition whatever to the pending resolution and very little to the bill, the consideration of which this resolution is intended to make in order.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

STUDY OF PRODUCTIVITY AND LABOR COSTS IN INDUSTRY

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to make studies of productivity and labor costs in industry.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265), with Mr. HART in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this resolution has been presented to me by the American Federation of Labor for introduction. It is not an administration measure, as has been indicated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], to bolster up the administration. This resolution is requested by the American Federation of Labor, and all groups of labor are in agreement with its provisions. We have had no opposition to the bill from the manufacturers, and I believe there is very little opposition from anywhere.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Labor by unanimous vote during the last session of the Congress, and during the present session a rule for its consideration was reported by the Rules Committee by unanimous vote.

The bill has for its purpose the conducting of a continuing investigation into the productivity and the cost of labor in industry. The W. P. A. conducted a similar investigation which went back to 1910, and the investigation was brought up to 1936. The manufacturers' census also conducted an investigation in 1937. But we cannot base our conclusions in 1940 on what conditions were in 1937. If we cannot have the facts to use at the conference table, we must look forward to a bitter period of industrial strife. The Federal Government alone can provide the information we need.

At present the latest information we have on productivity and labor cost in industry is that for 1937, and, of course, we cannot use the 1937 information for the problems of 1940.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter from the American Federation of Labor, and with your permission I will read it. It is as follows:

The American Federation of Labor is anxious to preserve industrial peace and at the same time maintain workers' living standards in the face of uncertain conditions arising from the war conditions abroad. For the accomplishment of these objectives of the federation it is imperative that up-to-date and specific information on productivity and labor costs be at hand for negotiations with employers. The present factual data available through the Labor Department is not sufficient.

One of our major concerns has been to try to adjust wages and hours of work so that the constant technical improvements characteristic of American industry may assist the workers to desirable additional leisure and higher living standards instead of destructive unemployment and poverty. If we have the necessary facts and figures which we are requesting, we can go to conferences with employers with a good working bas and a reasonable hope for adjusting working conditions to the levels which the industries in question can support. Without the necessary facts the danger of innumerable disputes and possible disorder looms large. Arguments as to what are the true facts will avail nothing; strikes occasioned by lack of information are sheer waste.

So far as we are able to discover there is no up-to-date information whatever on productivity and labor costs. The only comprehensive study ever made was that of the W. P. A. in cooperation with the United States Department of Labor, and this gives information from 1910 to 1936. The 1937 census furnished information in some fields of manufacturing, but since that date there has been no information whatever on individual industries. It is obvious that successful wage negotiations would be impossible in 1940 if based on 1937 information.

The task of getting 9,000,000 unemployed men and women back to work in American industry is one which should concern everyone, not merely labor organizations. We estimate that 3,000,000 of these 9,000,000 are jobless today because of labor-saving devices introduced within the past 10 years. We estimate that between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 more would have been unemployed today had it not been for the adjustments which were made in work hours. By reducing work hours from an average of 50 in 1929 to an average of 40 in 1939 technological unemployment has been held to 3,000,000 instead of going to 6,000,000. We need to know what industries are able to make the adjustments that will help to absorb these unemployed. We have accomplished much already, but much more can be done if the necessary information is made available. Wages must be increased to increase buying power, which in turn will create more work, and hours must be reduced progressively as rapidly as possible.

As an example of the great increases in productivity today, consider the story of the hot-strip-steel mill which has replaced thousands of workers where it has been installed. In New Castle, Pa., the steel-strip mill of the American Rolling Mill Co. wiped out the jobs of 1,500 workers. It has been estimated that the program outlined for the installation of the continuous strip mill process in steel will eliminate 85,000 jobs.

The increased use of electric-control instruments in many plants has almost eliminated the need of human hands to operate gangs of machines. These instruments now make it possible to control the operation of a large section of machinery from one central point.

These are only samples of the technological advances which are characteristic of progressive American industry. If we are to meet these advances and adjust fairly and peacefully, the information for which we ask on productivity and labor costs is of vital importance.

But adjustment of work hours and the reduction of unemployment constitutes only part of our problem. Those who are employed are faced with a definite increase in the cost of living, and it is up to us to secure wage adjustments such that living standards will not be forced down. As between August and December 1939 the figures of the Department of Labor show that wholesale prices had increased substantially. For example, men's topcoats had gone up 5 percent; men's work shoes were up 13 percent; sheets and pillow cases were up 17 percent; cotton blankets, 16 percent; wool blankets, 20 percent; and white denim overalls were up 6 percent. We must expect a steady extension of retail prices as these higher-priced wholesale goods reach the consumer market. Some advances have already reached the retail market; blankets and comforters are up 5 percent now and furniture 6 percent.

We are also being warned against the substitution of poorer quality materials by manufacturers in an effort to keep prices down. Substitutions have already been reported in women's dresses, handbags, and coats. It is expected that the size of blankets will be cut in order to avoid a 15- to 20-percent price increase. It is obvious that substitution of poorer materials will make it necessary for the worker to replace oftener and so place an additional burden on his earnings.

In view of these unbiased figures, it cannot be denied that American workers have an immediate problem in adjusting their living standards to price increases brought on by war conditions abroad. If these conditions continue, we must expect still greater increases in living costs. If the war ends, a widespread industrial readjustment will be necessary. In either case, there is clear need for immediate facts if workers are to adjust to changing conditions without industrial strife. American labor is willing to cooperate in the solution of the problems arising from conditions abroad, and it must not be asked to bear the entire brunt of the war.

There is one other consideration which should be mentioned in connection with the request for the funds necessary to secure information on productivity and labor costs, and that is economy. We have a good background in the data which was available up to 1937 The cost of bringing this information up to date now and keeping it so from year to year will be much less than would be the case if the request were put off to some future time when it would be necessary to do the groundwork all over again.

We sincerely hope that the Congress will help make possible the equitable industrial peace for which we are working by granting the request for means to secure information on productivity and labor costs which is essential for successful wage negotiations.

Mr. Chairman, I also have a letter from Mr. A. F. Hinrichs, Acting Commissioner, Bureau of Labor Statistics, reading as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, April 8, 1940.

Hon. REUBEN WOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WOOD: This will confirm our telephone conversation of today, in which I discussed with you, in Mr. Lubin's absence, the reasons why we regard as most desirable and important the passage of Joint Resolution 265, authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to make continuing studies of productivity and labor costs in industry.

The Department of Labor has always been greatly concerned with the problems which are created by the continuous improvement in technology in American industry. Increasing labor productivity, as machines are introduced, often means displacement of labor. There is not only the general problem of whether the rapid development of new techniques has increased total unemployment, and if so, by what amount; but there are the immediate personal problems of workers who are displaced, and who must be placed in other jobs and often re-trained. Some of them never readjust themselves satisfactorily. It is an important continuing matter of public policy to find ways to reduce the maladjustments arising from the introduction of new and improved processes and machines.

The importance of the subject of technological change is well recognized. A joint committee of the Congress—the Temporary National Economic Committee—is today beginning a series of hearings at which outstanding leaders in labor and industry will testify on the changes in methods of production. (See attached press release.)

It is important that some public agency, such as the Bureau of Labor Statistics, should keep constantly informed of the development of new techniques in leading industries, by means of periodic studies, and should determine the changes in the productivity per man-hour of labor, the ensuing changes in labor costs, and the extent of displacement of labor. Revolutionary technical changes are generally known to members of the industry long before they are widely introduced or are known to the general public, and the problems they involve can often be foreseen before a major change occurs. It should be possible by bringing the matter to the attention of industry, labor, and the public in the localities concerned to find some way to ease the situation created by that change.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has made a number of studies on labor productivity from time to time and has followed developments as closely as its limited personnel would permit. However, it has not been in a position to carry on continuing comprehensive investigation or to bring its earlier studies up to date with any regularity. Early studies covered developments in blast furnaces, the manufacture of rubber tires, and the production of electric-light bulbs, among others; more recently studies were made in the cotton-garment industry, in shoes, leather, and cigars. They described new techniques and measured the gains in output per man-hour as a result of new processes over a period of years, and the effect of these changes upon labor.

The importance of continuous surveys of technological developments in industry becomes more significant in view of the fact that revolutionary changes in industry, such as, for instance, the invention of the Owens machine in the glass industry or the recent invention of Nylon, occur but seldom in any one industry. Much more important, from the point of view of employment of labor, are the smaller day-to-day changes in techniques, in methods of operation, of handling the supply of raw material, and of determining output through time studies, which occur in both small and large plants and affect practically all industry. They displace individuals and groups of workers and in the aggregate they cause tremendous changes in the labor market. An indication of these smaller cumulative changes in a single industry may be found in the Bureau of Labor Statistics Survey of Labor Productivity in the Tire Industry (pp. 24–26, inclusive, of the enclosed bulletin), where examples of ostensibly minor changes and their effects on the employment situation in a particular plant are given. This is a situation in which cumulated effects were considerably more significant than the primary revolutionary changes in that industry.

A further illustration for the need for continuous study of labor productivity is found in the present "Nylon" situation. The new product is about to appear on the market, with considerable effect on the silk industry and particularly on the silk-hosiery industry. The Bureau of Labor Statistics should be informed on the effect it will have on the tens of thousands of silk-hosiery workers if this new product proves to be at least three to four times as lasting as silk.

At present there is no agency which has assembled data upon the effects of technological changes upon the well-being of workers. There has been no study assembling and analyzing the efforts which have been made by farsighted industrial managers and trade-union leaders to minimize the human suffering through dislocation and curtailment of job opportunity inherent in major technological changes. As you know, the Bureau of Labor Statistics is an appropriate agency to which the public, employers, and trade-union leaders turn for a discussion of this problem.

For example, a recent study by the Bureau for its report to the Temporary National Economic Committee describes the way in which one firm introduced new machinery, under collective agreement with its workers, in such a way as to avoid personal hardship to individual employees. If more instances of this kind were known to industry and the public, through studies of this kind by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, such agreements might be more generally adopted and a more effective direct attack be made on the problem. This unpublished report, which describes a shoe factory, the identity of which is confidential, says in part:

"Negotiations with employees sometimes play a role in the decision to introduce a new machine, and in the rate at which they are introduced, particularly if the machine is likely to displace considerable labor. The heel-seat laster, installed by Company X in plant 2 in July 1936, involved a substantial displacement of labor. Company X agreed informally with the employees' association in this plant that it would increase the work on the new machines only as bed lasters left the company's employment, and as production increased. By following this procedure in introducing the machine no operators were laid off, but no new employees were hired to replace those who left the company. During the years 1936–38 the machine was run on a very limited scale, somewhat on an experimental basis, with employees paid by the day. In June 1936, on the basis of the production experience with the machine, piece rates were set and piece-rate workers assigned to the machine. In September 1939, after the machine had been installed more than 3 years, only about half of the plant production was handled on this machine; the other half was still being handled on the less economical bed-lasting machine. The company anticipates eventually using the new machines for the total volume of production, but only in line with the agreement with its employees."

The general assumption is that a new machine or procedure always results in a reduction in labor cost. Some of the experimental studies which the Bureau is just now concluding, in connection with its work for the Temporary National Economic Committee, indicate that this is not always the case. Often they are introduced for other purposes, such as improvement of the quality of the product. These studies of labor costs and technological changes in the shoe, paper, cotton-textile, and agricultural-implement industries make clear the importance of knowing a great deal about the relation between changes in wage rates and changes in labor costs and about the importance of labor costs, if there is to be a sound appraisal of the effects upon business concerns of measures which affect wage rates. Technology in its broadest sense is constantly reducing labor costs and diminishing the effect of wage-rate increases on total costs.

This resolution would permit the Bureau to assemble, interpret, and present to the public existing information on all of these phases of labor productivity and labor costs in terms of needed public policy.

If there is any further information which we can provide, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Very sincerely,

A. F. HINRICHS,
Acting Commissioner.

Mr. Chairman, for the past 7 years we have been struggling with the No. 1 problem of unemployment and it is time that we know something about the ravages of unemployment and to what extent this has been brought about by the application of science and inventions of the modern machine of production.

Certainly, the manufacturers' census of 1937 was a good basis on which to work, but if we are to be able to have the proper information we must have continuing studies, to be made by the statistical department of the Department of Labor, so that we may be able to know something about productivity and the cost of labor when we sit around the table to negotiate wage agreements.

Something has been said about the many congressional investigations and the hundreds of thousands of dollars spent in such investigations, but if we had made available proper facilities to the Department of Labor to enable them to employ personnel sufficient to make these continuing investigations it would not have been necessary for the investigation to have been made by the W. P. A. and for more hundreds of thousands of dollars to have been spent in the gathering of data through the manufacturers' census. If this were done in the proper channel in the Department of Labor, that is, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, it would cost far less money and we would be able to have the statistics up to date at all times to use, so that we would not only avoid many labor controversies that could be avoided if we knew the facts about productivity and the cost of labor, but we could eventually ascertain to what extent the intervention of science and its application to the machine of production is the cause of unemployment.

I do hope the bill will pass. It is not a political measure. I repeat, it is a measure sponsored by the American Federation of Labor. It has the approval of all other labor groups as well as most of the manufacturers of the country, for that matter all of them, as far as I know, because no objection has been offered to this resolution either in the committee or since we have reported out the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

MINING, MEDICINE, AND JOBS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution provides for continuing studies on productivity and labor costs in the manufacturing, mining, transportation, distribution, and other industries. In view of the fact that it specifically mentions the mining industry, it seems to me appropriate at this time to call attention to a thing which does not bode very well for the development of employment in the mining industry. I refer to the selection of a physician as Director of the Bureau of Mines.

You will recall that Dr. Finch, who had been the Director of the Bureau of Mines, and a very efficient Director, highly respected in the profession, resigned his position a few weeks ago. It developed, according to the stories in the papers, that he resigned because the Secretary of the Interior said he lacked iron in his blood, and the Secretary wanted somebody who would have iron in his blood. Those of us who come from the West and know something of the feeling of the mining industry, however, believe that the reason Dr. Finch was removed, in effect, was not that he lacked iron in his blood, but that he had too much iron in his blood to bow down and sacrifice his professional opinions.

Imagine, then, the feelings of the mining industry when the announcement came out 3 days ago that a gentleman had been selected for the position of Acting Director of the Bureau of Mines whose principal service has been with the Public Health Service and who professionally is a physician. His only connection with the Bureau of Mines is that during a period of time when the safety work of that Bureau was conducted by the Public Health Service this particular doctor, then a member of the Public Health Service, was in charge of the Bureau of Mines safety work.

It seems to me a peculiar physiological pathology that the Secretary of the Interior has sought to put iron into the blood of his Director of the Bureau of Mines by naming an M. D. for the job instead of a mining engineer. What the Bureau of Mines needs is someone who knows something about mining as an industry, mining as a source of producing new wealth, mining as a source of jobs, if we are going to create employment and bring the mining industry back to where it ought to be in this country.

In this connection I wish to call attention to a resolution adopted by the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America on February 23, 1940. This resolution has now been sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Members of Congress. Probably most of you have received this in your mail, but because many of you do not come from districts in which there is any mining I wish to call your particular attention to it, and read it at this time:

HONORABLE SIRS: The Mining and Metallurgical Society of America having submitted to its membership, through its regularly constituted method of a referendum ballot, the resolution following herewith, and the result of this referendum having been that 99.09 percent of the ballots cast—

Note that—99.09 percent—

by members of the society resident in the United States were in favor of the resolution, it is hereby presented to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and to each of the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, with the request that it be given due and careful consideration as representing the opinion and sentiment of the membership of this Nation-wide organization, composed of mining and metallurgical engineers of experience and responsibility in vital industries of the United States, who are seeking the best interest of the country and of all citizens.

Preamble: Since first formed, about 25 years ago, the Bureau of Mines has operated quite independently of partisan politics.

I may interject at this point that a great many fear that politics had something to do with the removal of Director Finch, although no one can say that he played politics in handling his office. The Bureau of Mines should not be made a political football.

The resolution continues:

It has been of outstanding value to the mining industry in promoting education for better health and safety in mining, in developing technical improvements in mining and metallurgy, in the collection and distribution of metal statistics and in many other useful projects and services.

Over this long period the Bureau has earned and retained the confidence of the mining industry through its integrity and its impartial service.

Whereas it is widely reported in the daily press that the Director of the Bureau is now forced to resign on account of disagreements with the Secretary of the Interior, which in no way reflect upon the professional integrity of the Director, but do involve a change in regard to the policy of maintaining the present independence of the Bureau: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Members of the Senate, are respectfully urged to maintain the long established and well deserved confidence of the mining industry in the Bureau by selecting a new Director whose professional attainments and personal integrity will insure the continued support and respect of the members of the mining profession; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Members of the Senate, and in addition to Members of the House of Representatives.

Adopted February 23, 1940.

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the constitution of this society I declare this resolution to be an act of the society.

GEORGE A. EASLEY, President.

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 23, 1940.

I am not trying at all to suggest that the new Director lacks the proper personal integrity. I assume that he is an estimable gentleman. I assume that he stands high in his profession but a man can be a great doctor and know little or nothing of mining as a source of new wealth and employment. The Director of the Bureau of Mines should be a man of high professional standing in mining. He should know something of geology and engineering and finance and other things that deal with mining as a practical problem. I submit that if the administration really wants to solve some unemployment problems in this country that the Secretary of the Interior should give us a Director of the Bureau of Mines for what he knows about mining rather than for what he may know about medicine. [Applause.]

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am wholeheartedly in favor of the passage of this joint resolution authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor to make a continuing study of productivity and labor costs in the manufacturing, mining, transportation, distribution, and other industries. I think it is a step in the right direction. It is endorsed by the American Federation of Labor. The purpose of it is to get the facts upon which employers of labor and their employees in the negotiations which must naturally arise between them in the making of wage contracts can rely, facts that are essential, because when they know the facts with reference to any industry they can deal intelligently in the making of wage contracts. It affects not only the employees, but it affects the employers and the public.

I take it that every enlightened person in this country now recognizes the right of laborers to organize and collectively to bargain through representatives of their choice. In my district hundreds of thousands of men and women are employed in manufacturing, in mining, in transportation service, and in other lines of productive industry. There is not a strike today anywhere in that district. The relationship between the employer and employee is on a friendly basis. I made my race for election to this body on the proposition that the employer and the man who works for him are not enemies but friends and that industry, as a rule, is a joint enterprise, and when we get to a full realization of that fact and bring about a harmonious relationship and a full understanding between employer and employee we have gone a long way toward solving this depression. We have been waging war on it now for 7 years and that war has not been won. There are 10,000,000 unemployed in America today. This is a challenge to the thoughtful consideration of every patriotic American, and I believe that this investigation will throw light upon this question and will help to effect a solution of this great problem of unemployment. To get out of the depression is to save America. To triumph over unemployment and to put these willing employable workers back to work is a challenge to America, and when we have answered that challenge and solved that problem I fully believe that prosperity will return to the American people. To win this fight we have got to have all hands and the cook engaged on our side. It is going to take a long pull and a strong pull and a pull all together, and I believe that the adoption of this resolution will be a step toward the solution of the problem of unemployment which confronts this Nation and which has confronted us for the past 7 years. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, about 5 years ago I offered an amendment to a revenue act which provided for an investigation as to what effect labor-saving and labor-displacing devices had on unemployment. My amendment was not accepted in the House. However, I went to the other side of the Capitol and I had a Senator add that amendment to the revenue bill. It was adopted by the Senate, but, unfortunately, the conferees struck it from the bill.

It seems to me this proposed legislation is more important than the Members of the House realize. Out of the present census we are going to secure definite information in reference to the number of people that are actually unemployed in this country. We have all kinds of unofficial statistics but the census will bring the exact number. Then we are going to be required to find the reason for the unemployment.

If anyone here has had any business with Dr. Lubin, of the Department of Labor, who will be responsible for the gathering of the statistics provided under this bill, I am sure he will realize that the job is going to be well done. He is an outstanding public official who always does his work well.

The one thing we have lacked has been information. Then again there has been no suggestion advanced by either party or by any group whereby unemployment could be eliminated permanently.

I am sure the day is going to arrive—and they are not going to be driven to it, but they are going to walk up to the table themselves—when businessmen in this country are going to get together and say that we have a situation in this country that is going to require the best minds in the country to solve, and it is our duty to do everything we can to solve the problem and cooperate in every way.

It is further my view that if they do not take this course they are going to make a very serious mistake, especially those who are in the class that have something. The class of people in this country that have property, real and personal, have money, or have a going business and are making money, want to keep it. They are not going to be foolish enough to see a condition arise in this country where everything they possess might be worthless. They are going to get together one of these days, forget politics, and say that they want to help. It is going to be necessary that they do it and do so willingly. There is no use of talking from a political standpoint. Republicans and Democrats, it is our duty to solve this problem some way. As I said, neither party has a concrete plan for the elimination of unemployment in this country. What we have been trying to do is to alleviate the condition by providing emergency employment for unfortunate people who cannot secure work in industry in the hope conditions would improve.

I have placed in the RECORD from time to time information that has come to me concerning labor-displacing devices. The most outstanding one had to do with a steel corporation in Pennsylvania. Eighty-six thousand people were formerly employed by this steel corporation. They put in some kind of machines; as a result, 800 people now do the work of 86,000. What is going to become of the rest; who is going to feed them? Those machines do not require food. All they require is oil and grease.

I say that this resolution will bring information that is badly needed and will help us reach some kind of decision, whereby it might be possible to do something for the people who now have emergency employment.

I recall the days when we reduced the hours of labor from 14 hours to 12 hours, and I recall when we reduced the time from 12 hours to 10 hours, and from 10 hours to 8 hours, and it was said that we were ruining the country, that business would be destroyed. However, those industries where the hours of labor were reduced still exist, none has gone out of business. It might be a reduction in the hours of labor that will be absolutely necessary to put the unemployed people of the country back to work. If it is, I am willing to vote to meet that situation, wherever we have the power under the Constitution to do it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The author of this bill indicated that for a number of years these statistics have been compiled by the W. P. A. In view of the fact that we now have more than 10,000,000 unemployed, does not the gentleman believe that we should incorporate an amendment to use certified unemployed workers who are on relief to perform this work?

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD], as I understood it, said the W. P. A. projects brought this up to a certain date. This work belongs with the Department of Labor, with a permanent organized force to do the job and do it properly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, this week we are observing the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the creation of the original Patent Office. On display down at the Department of Commerce I understand there is an array of patent contrivances to indicate the mechanical progress of this country. It is rather interesting in the light of the resolution that is before us today. I am not only in favor of this resolution and will support it, but I invest in it my hope that we can find some accurate data that will once and for all dispel this problem and controversy as to whether or not advancing technology actually produces unemployment or whether it produces more jobs, whether it is harmful to the country or beneficial. People have been discussing that question since the time the wood supply in England gave out a long time ago, and they had to get coal from the mines. They could not get the coal out of the English mines unless they fixed up some device whereby they could take the water out of the mines, and that is the way the steam engine was born. In 1788 we have had what is known as the industrial revolution, and I expect for a century there has been before us the problem of whether the machine is good or bad for society. I note in the report accompanying the resolution a statement to the effect that estimates show that between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 men and women are unemployed today because of labor-saving devices installed in industry since 1929.

Whatever is done under this resolution might be very well correlated with what is done by the National Economic Committee, the distinguished chairman of which introduced a bill not so long ago ostensibly to put a tax on the machine in proportion to the machine's capacity to displace human hands. I expect we get this sort of thing in every depression. On occasions I have made speeches myself about the reduction of working hours, and wondering whether or not there is an answer to this machine question that has been disturbing labor and industry. The other day I sent to the Library and got the 1,600-page report that was made by Dr. Carroll Wright, Commissioner of Labor back in 1894. The Congress, on the 15th of August 1894, passed a joint resolution directing an investigation of the effect of the use of machinery upon labor. That, you see, was 44 years ago, and Dr. Wright was a considerable economist in his own right, and a very distinguished Commissioner of Labor of the United States Government.

In the preface to this report he uses these words, and they are rather interesting:

> It is evident from an examination of the statistics presented in this report, and especially from a study of the text analysis, that there has been a larger increase in the number of persons required for the production of articles considered in order to meet present demands than would have been necessary to meet the limited demands under the hand-labor system.

Now, that was in the preface of this statement that he reported to the Congress in 1898 when he was Commissioner of Labor. But Commissioner Wright had great anxiety and great concern about the effect of the machine on labor, and when he made his report in 1886, which was 10 years before, he had this to say:

> Industry has been enormously developed. Cities have been transformed, distances covered, and a new set of economic tools has been given in profusion to rich countries and in more reasonable amount to poorer countries. What is strictly necessary has been done oftentimes to superfluity. This full supply of economic tools to meet the wants of nearly every branch of commerce and industry is the most important factor in the present industrial depression.

That was the Commissioner of Labor speaking in 1886, and indicates that he was concerned about machine development in this country and its displacement of human hands.

I fancy that since 1886 this country has probably seen the greatest material development in the history of all civilization. I confess frankly that I have grave doubts as to just where this study is going to lead. I hope they will approach it with absolute impartiality, and that probably there will be adduced some basic factual material to see whether or not the machine is at the root of all trouble.

It adds so materially to the blessings that we enjoy today that I hope these statistics will enable us to dissociate certain conclusions that are so necessary in the light of the bill that has been introduced by the Senator from Wyoming for the purpose of putting a tax upon the displacing capacity of the machine. If that theory is wrong, then we come to an industrial standstill in the country, and I would have no great stomach for going down some time this week and witnessing this great parade of inventions and patents that have added enormously to the benevolences of American life.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. May I say that I commend to the gentleman from Illinois the research made by the General Motors Co., which shows that where a few years ago, before development of the mass-production methods in the automotive industry, there were only 1 of every 20 men employed in industry who were employed either directly or indirectly because of the automotive industry; today, instead of there being only 1 of every 20 employed either directly or indirectly because of the automotive industry, there is 1 out of every 7 so employed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You, know, there is a disposition to feel that there is a ceiling over the industry of the country today. It has been argued along this line that first of all we are approaching a static population. Secondly, the pattern of the highways has been laid out and the best you can do today is to widen them, tear them up and put down new highways, but the pattern is there.

It has been said that because we abandon railroad lines every year, the transportation pattern has been established. So there is no horizon to which we can look with any degree of hope. It has been said that no new big industries are in sight. In other words, it is like the great Frenchman said under the title of the book America Comes of Age. It seems to me that along with age there is still hope; along with age there are still opportunities for our country, and for our civilization.

So that as we move along, despite the machine, despite the gloom and melancholy that is disseminated on every hand, I believe there are many opportunities for expansion today, and for bringing to the people—to those who need them—the benefits of our machine civilization. They made a survey of Whiteside County, Ill., some years ago. It was made by the Department of Commerce. I think there were 2,100 farm families in that county. There were only 400 of the 2,100 who had bathtubs. About an equal number had porcelain sinks in the kitchen. Well, look at the opportunities for industrial expansion if we ever come anywhere near approximating the needs of the people. The way to do it, of course, is not to have less machinery but more machinery, because that will mean lower prices, and this in turn will mean that these things which are now in the class of semiluxuries and luxuries can be brought to every household in the United States of America, because it is within the reach of their purchasing power.

I hope, therefore, that under this resolution data will be adduced so that we can find out just what the situation is, and if this is one of those everlasting bugbears that comes up in every period of dislocation, then let us cast it to the winds once and for all; and, maybe, I say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD], under this resolution much good will be done. I am for it. [Applause.]

It may be that the machine is at the root of our present difficulty, but I entertain emphatic doubt on that subject, not only in our own country but in England as well. In periods of economic distress has the machine been blamed for such trouble. History records say that for the last 150 years there have been recurring instants of artisans and craftsmen attacking new machines with hammers and breaking them to pieces on the ground that they were inimical to the interest of labor, yet in that same 150 years we have witnessed the development of the steam engine, the hydrocarbon engine, the incandescent lamp, the motorcar, the radio, electrical household appliances, power farm machinery, and a host of other devices which have added materially to the comfort, the subsistence, and elevated living standards of the American people and at the same time created jobs for countless hands. The classic example, of course, is the motorcar. If it were abruptly snatched from the American scene today there would go with it hundreds of thousands of jobs in automobile factories, in tire plants, in accessory establishments, in service stations, repair shops, highway restaurants, cafeterias, hot-dog emporiums, parking lots, and a multitude of other enterprises which are the sweet fruit of the motorcar and its capacity to take people places at a low cost. Along with this fact we must consider that the 25,000,000 motorcars humming the highways of America today actually exist and are in operation only because technological progress has brought them within the reach of the average American pocketbook. It therefore proves nothing to point to a single machine and compute the number of jobs which it has displaced unless that fact is taken in connection with the whole industrial economy of the United States and of the world.

The Brookings Institution has advanced the rather intriguing thesis that the solution of our present unemployment problem is most likely to be found in reducing the price level of needed goods in order to effect volume consumption. This in turn would utilize not only idle plant capacity but actually require an expansion of the fiscal industrial facilities of America and make genuine inroads on unemployment. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the studies to be conducted under the pending resolution will throw light upon all of these problems and develop a body of information which will prove useful in dealing with the allegation regarding technological unemployment. I know that I share with the great majority of the House some real light upon this highly controversial subject.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN].

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I am told that I am the only man in the House who is against this resolution.

Mr. Chairman, I am against this resolution because I do not believe we should waste this $100,000. I am against it because I do not believe in spending $100,000 to get up some more claptrap to put on the desks of Congressmen, editors, and so forth, to find its way into wastebaskets. If we are going to spend $100,000, I feel it could better be spent giving employment to 300 men that we know are now out of work. We have sufficient information about unemployment now to take up all that we can do or that we have been able to find an answer to.

The gentleman from Missouri very accurately said awhile ago that the census would provide us with definite information on this point. I say again, Mr. Chairman, that I am against this resolution because I do not want to see this $100,000 wasted in sending out useless stuff to find its way into the wastebaskets of editors.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman certainly does not hold that the investigations and researches made by Dr. Lubin, of the Statistical Division of the Department of Labor, is a lot of claptrap to be put on the desks of country editors, does he?

Mr. BOREN. I do not believe the gentleman would want me to tell him my real opinion of the money that has been spent in the Labor Department on this sort of stuff.

Mr. WOOD. I am asking about the Statistical Division of the Labor Department.

Mr. BOREN. I am very much opposed to the principle set forth in this bill originally—setting up a new division. That, of course, has since been stricken out.

Mr. WOOD. The bill does not set up any new division.

Mr. BOREN. That is what I just stated. But, answering the gentleman's question specifically, I have not found the Congress making use of any of the material that has been put out by Dr. Lubin and his associates—unless the use of wastebaskets is to be subsidized by the Government.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Edsel Ford was before the Monopoly Committee this morning in connection with the study it is making of this problem. Mr. Ford stated that whereas a motor now contains 1,600 parts as a result of technological advances, as against some 5,000 formerly, yet the number of man-hours used in producing the motor with fewer parts is greater than that which used to be used in producing the motor with the greater number of parts.

Mr. BOREN. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that if there is just one Member of Congress who is against this bill, I want the RECORD clear that I am against it and against the wanton waste of $100,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no more requests for time.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, coming up on the train this morning from Atlanta, where I have been visiting down in my home State, I encountered a friend who told me about a new factory located in north Georgia where they make machinery for road building and grading and heavy type of construction work. This new machine can pick up 47 yards of dirt and carry it down the road at the rate of 28 miles per hour—and it is operated by one man.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I read in the paper this morning where a tire made out of rayon was tested along with the best rubber tire. The new tire was 3,000 percent more durable than the tires we are now using. Does not the gentleman feel that we ought to have some information with reference to what extent this new product is going to affect the tire industry of the country?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri. I think we ought to have all the information we can get in dealing with the problem of industrial employment. There is no question about the fact that labor is being displaced by new machinery. There is, of course, some question as to whether the eventual result is loss of employment or creation of employment.

I do not know the answer, but I think we ought to make a study of it.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. The research laboratories of this country, of course, are the great revolutionary centers of our economic life. I have often wondered if it would not be possible to devise some way whereby when these scientific men discover some labor-saving device a study will not be at the same moment addressed to the problem of solving the dispossession of labor attached to the new discovery. In other words, the social aspects of their discovery should take an equal place with the economic aspect of it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think we must come to that sort of consideration of these new inventions that displace manpower.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. I am supporting the pending bill. I read the other day, and I have in my office, a report of the Commissioner of Labor of 1885 in which he discusses the depression of 1837, and one of the causes of the depression of 1837 was the invention of machinery.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, that has been going on ever since the industrial age started. I do not see any reason why this Congress should not spend a little money to authorize the Department of Labor to make an investigation and find out to what extent the owners of these machines are keeping the profits of their invention, and to what extent they are passing on to the people who operate the machines and to the consumers some part of the benefits which come from the improved machinery. That is one of the purposes of this resolution.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] takes the position that this will be a waste of money. A week ago the gentleman and myself voted for an increase in the appropriations for the N. Y. A. and the C. C. C. Of course, we were in agreement about that, but that is not an answer to the problem which is facing this country today. That is simply a temporary expedient to take care of people who cannot find employment, and we are not going to get out of this depression and we are not going to be able to balance the Budget, as a great many people want us to do, until we find ways of putting back into private employment the millions of people who are out of work in this country at the present time.

We are not asking for the creation of any new agency of government. We are only authorizing an existing agency to study a problem that I believe 99 percent of the people of this country realize is a most important problem.

Mr. BOREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. BOREN. Is not this money to be used exactly as it would have been used, had line 5 of the bill not been stricken out?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; I do not think so. The bill as originally introduced would have created a new division in the Department of Labor. The present bill as reported by the committee simply authorizes and directs the Department of Labor to make a study through existing divisions.

Mr. BOREN. I notice in line 6 the words "continuing studies" are used. Does that mean we are going to be asked for $100,000 this year and $200,000 next year, and so on, for the same purpose?

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is only $100,000 authorized for the first year. If any further funds are to be authorized, they will have to be appropriated by some future Congress. The thing that interests me about this thing is this: We know from figures which have been given to us by authoritative sources that last year the productivity of the industries of the United States rose to a point equal to or beyond that of 1929, yet those industries did not employ as many people in 1939 as they employed in 1929. There is some reason for that, which presents a problem that is not going to be solved by a so-called return to prosperity. We had a return of prosperity to a point equal to the banner year in this country's history, 1929, insofar as industry is concerned, yet we had from a million to a million and a half less employed in producing the same volume of goods 10 years later, which indicates that the productivity per employee had increased in these industries. This presents a permanent problem in the social life of this country which we must meet.

Mr. BOREN. This authorization does extend it definitely year after year?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, the gentleman is as well able to judge of that as I am. It says "a sum not to exceed $100,000" for the first fiscal year. My answer to the gentleman would be that for subsequent years it would be a question for the Appropriations Committee to decide.

Mr. BOREN. The authorization is for $100,000 or more, as might be necessary, from year to year. The authorization is established in this resolution if passed.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is established in this resolution at not to exceed $100,000.

Mr. BOREN. For the first year.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The Appropriations Committee may not give them that money.

Mr. BOREN. But even that limitation does not extend beyond the first year.

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; it does not. This is for the first year.

Mr. BOREN. So each year thereafter, whatever sum the Appropriations Committee might decide, whether it be two, three, or four hundred thousand dollars, could be appropriated for this purpose under this authorization?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am not sure about that. The language of the resolution is not plain on that subject and I have not looked into it. It certainly could not exceed $100,000.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOOD. Money spent by the W. P. A. in making surveys in 1936 and subsequently the money spent in taking the manufacturers' census would be lost if we did not establish a continuing investigation. It is not to be assumed that the Department of Labor is going to undertake a comprehensive investigation of the productivity and cost of labor in industry this year. Naturally, we expect it to make a continuing investigation in the next year and the following years. If it did not, the investigation would be no good because a few years later the result of this investigation would be obsolete.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will be passed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 265

Resolved, etc., That there shall be established in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor a Division of Labor Productivity. It shall be the duty of this Division to make continuing studies of productivity and labor costs in the manufacturing, mining, transportation, distribution, and other industries.

For the purpose of making the study, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $100,000 for the first fiscal year. The Secretary of Labor is directed to submit annually to the Congress a report of the findings of the Division of Labor Productivity of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "there shall be established in" and in line 4 strike out "a Division of Labor Productivity. It shall be the duty of this Division" and insert "is authorized and directed."

Page 2, line 3, strike out "Division of Labor Productivity of the" and in line 4 after the word "Statistics" insert "in complying with this joint resolution."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I beg the indulgence of the Committee in delaying action on this joint resolution in order that I may take this opportunity to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] regarding Hawaii. I was not on the floor at the time those remarks were made, but I have been told by those who were present that in the course of his remarks the gentleman from Indiana quoted some figures with regard to the racial background of our citizenry and expressed some apprehension as to the loyalty of the people of Hawaii.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended to ask permission to speak out of order, and I hope that my doing so without obtaining that consent will be permitted. I shall make my remarks very brief, if I may be allowed to continue.

I wish to assure the Members of this House, as one of your fellow Members and as a former naval officer, that you need have no fear as to the loyalty of the people of Hawaii of whatever racial background. [Applause.] I feel that the gentleman from Indiana has been misinformed as to the circumstances with regard to those people to whom he referred. This question of dual citizenship extends to a great many different groups of people in our democracy. A number of the European nations make a claim of dual citizenship. I know of no single instance of a Hawaiian-born, an American citizen, of Japanese ancestry who has voluntarily returned to Japan to serve in the Japanese Army. I do know of one instance where a boy inadvertently in Japan at the time was impressed into military service. The same thing has happened in Italy, in Germany, and in many other European countries. We have been unable to protect our own citizens against such impressment.

I understand the gentleman from Indiana proposes to introduce a bill that would expatriate any American citizen who voluntarily serves in a foreign army. I would be pleased to support such a bill, and only regret that I do not have a vote with which to support it. Of course, that bill would apply to all Americans who voluntarily serve in foreign armies.

As far as Hawaii is concerned, our people are just as loyal, as shown by their enrollment in the National Guard and the R. O. T. C., as any community under the American flag, and that goes for all of them, regardless of their racial background. My people there, coming from these different racial groups, take enjoyment and pride in their American citizenship. In proportion to their population they served in higher numbers in the World War than the people of many mainland communities. Therefore I believe the apprehensions of the gentleman from Indiana are unfounded, and that he will find on further research and investigation that he need have no fear as to the loyalty of Hawaii and its people. [Applause.]

I am informed by the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization that any native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States who takes an oath of allegiance to a foreign country automatically terminates his American citizenship by such action. This is provided by existing statute—title 8, United States Code, section 17. Any American citizen of Japanese ancestry, upon entering the United States, either at Honolulu or any other American port, is required to prove his identity, his right to be considered an American citizen, and in case of doubt to establish affirmatively that he has not lost that citizenship through military service to Japan or any other foreign country requiring an oath of allegiance, which practically all countries demand of those entering their military service. These circumstances are carefully scrutinized by the Immigration and Naturalization officials. The danger which the gentleman from Indiana envisages simply does not exist—that any number of our American citizens of Japanese ancestry serve two masters. I know from my intimate acquaintance with thousands of the citizens of my Territory, whose parents or grandparents migrated to Hawaii from Japan for the same reasons which actuated Europeans in their migration to the mainland, that they are overwhelmingly patriotic and loyal Americans; that their dual-citizenship status is a matter which they do not acknowledge, and over which they have no control.

The figures quoted regarding the number of dual citizens of Japanese ancestry in Hawaii and the proportion of those who are male adults, I am certain, are incorrect. The statement as to the number of those who have served in the military forces of Japan is obviously incorrect. There must be some confusion or some misinterpretation of the data supplied to the gentleman from Indiana.

The Joint Congressional Committee on Hawaii, appointed pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution 18, made a thorough study of this subject, as well as others, in the fall of 1937—just over 2 years ago. Its report is printed as Senate Document 151, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, and presents authentic and impartial facts regarding the American citizens of Japanese ancestry residing in Hawaii. I can do no better than quote in part from that report.

Japanese immigration to Hawaii commenced in 1885 and continued until 1908. In all, some 180,000 came to Hawaii; but of this number, about 126,000, including 20,000 Hawaiian-born children, left Hawaii—about 28,000 for the mainland and the rest returning to Japan. After 1908 the only immigration permitted was that of picture brides, providing wives for those who had come without any. The great majority of the alien Japanese now in Hawaii are those who were or became married, the single men in most cases leaving the islands. There being no occasion for the immigrants to marry outside of their own race, few did so. Hence the fable that the Japanese do not intermarry with other races. The new generation, growing up together with all the racial groups, "outmarry" at a steadily increasing rate. The partial restriction on Japanese immigration accomplished in 1908 was made complete in 1924. In the meantime, the character of the Japanese in Hawaii had been changing from that of an alien group to a native-born-citizen group, although the latter is still largely composed of children. Of the present total of 151,141 persons of Japanese race, 37,852 are aliens.

The citizens number 113,289, of whom approximately three-fourths are minors. Among the latter, a considerable number—14,259 in 1930—are of the second generation native-born. The entire discussion of the Japanese in Hawaii has been too frequently marked by prejudice and by erroneous statements given forth as facts. They are the largest single group in the islands, but are not in a majority, and have already begun to lose their proportionate place. To support the contention of the Japanese domination of the Hawaiian scene, the term "Asiatic" is often loosely applied to include such divergent elements as the Chinese, Koreans, Filipinos, and even Hawaiians of Chinese ancestry in part, with the Japanese. The term is then employed as synonymous with Japanese. As already noted, their political strength would appear to be approaching its maximum of between a fourth and a third of the electorate. Their total numbers will probably bear about the same proportion to the whole population. Natural causes, such as a higher death rate and lower birth rate, an increasing rate of intermarriage, and some emigration, together with the substantial increase in the Caucasian and Hawaiian groups and lesser increases in the other racial elements, has already brought this ratio down from its high of 42.7 percent in 1920 to the present 37.8 percent of the whole population.

It should be remembered that the privilege of naturalization is denied the alien-born Japanese except in certain special cases, or their reaction to the American environment of Hawaii might have more nearly paralleled that of European immigrants. Undoubtedly many would gladly become citizens of the United States if permitted to do so. In any event, the alien group will pass off the stage within a short time, since they are all reaching old age almost simultaneously. As it is, the younger generation show the same attitude toward America that the first generation American-born of European origin do—an appreciation of the material benefits received, a high conception of the freedom enjoyed, and an earnest endeavor to comply with the standards of the new culture.

On the basis of behavior, the American citizens of Japanese ancestry leave little to criticize and much to praise. As an orderly, law-abiding group their record is unexcelled. Their thrift and industry and willingness to cooperate with other groups are all well-marked traits. The evidence of schools and civic organizations, of church and political activities, all point to a desire on their part to share to the full the community responsibilities and to do so as fellow Americans, expressing a common loyalty to American ideals and institutions. Much is made of the foreign-language schools and press, but it should be realized that these agencies serve a real purpose in the adjustment of an immigrant group to new conditions. Many European immigrants have turned to the same means of establishing contact between the two generations. When these transitory vehicles have served their purpose they cease to exist, and there is no occasion to doubt that Hawaii will follow the same pattern already familiar to us on the mainland. The Americanization of the Japanese in Hawaii has perhaps made greater progress than it has with many immigrant groups of longer residence in America living in mainland communities. Time will automatically solve many of the problems that seem to loom up as insurmountable today. The people of Hawaii are to be commended for the manner in which they have undertaken the task of maintaining the democratic principles of America and for having extended them to all its citizens. They are to be congratulated for the degree of success shown by all races in absorbing the spirit of American institutions. In this effort those of Japanese ancestry have taken their full share. * * *

In any discussion of Hawaii's people the subject of dual citizenship invariably comes up. The matter was gone into quite exhaustively by the committee, and the problem appears one of international relations rather than a local question. The usual process of Americanization of European immigrants is by the naturalization of the immigrant generation. That automatically eliminates all question of dual citizenship of the native-born who becomes American both by birth and inheritance. The American-born children of alien European parentage, however, are more often than not claimed as citizens by the country of their parents. Indeed, the citizenship of both naturalized and native-born Americans has often been denied and disregarded by European nations on various occasions. But when the alien parents are not eligible for naturalization, their American-born children will be dual citizens through no fault and by no affirmative action of their own. This is the case with the Chinese, Japanese, Koreans, and Filipinos, both in Hawaii and on the mainland. As to the Chinese, no procedure is available to them to disclaim their dual citizenship. The Filipinos are as yet American nationals, and the Koreans are involved with the Japanese as coming under that country's laws. So it is with the last-named that the problem presents itself to the people of Hawaii.

Under American law all persons born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are American citizens. But Japan likewise formerly recognized the children of their nationals, wherever born, as subjects of Japan. This provision is, as has been pointed out, not peculiar to Japan. It is well-nigh a universal practice among the nations of the world. The United States follows the same principle by conferring American citizenship upon children born of American parents in foreign countries, in some of which such children may also exercise the privilege of citizenship, thus becoming American dual citizens.

The Japanese Government, by a law adopted in 1924, went further to meet America's position on the question of citizenship than any other foreign government appears to have done. Since that year no claim to jurisdiction to any American-born child of Japanese parents is made by Japan unless the parents register such child at a Japanese consulate within 14 days after its birth. Dual citizenship is prevented at the beginning instead of being left to possible termination after the individual comes of age. For those born prior to 1924, and even those who were born after that date and were registered as Japanese by their parents, a procedure for complete expatriation from Japan is provided, which was simplified and made easier by the act of 1924. From testimony before the committee, it appears that over half of the citizens of Japanese ancestry in Hawaii were born after 1924, and as only a negligible number were registered with the Japanese consulate, the question of dual citizenship does not arise with these children. Of those still considered subjects of Japan by the Japanese Government, a fair number have expatriated themselves.

After all, the issue of dual citizenship, both for the Japanese in Hawaii and on the mainland, and for the many more thousands of Europeans, can only become a live one if the persons involved visit the country of their parents' origin, and subject themselves to its jurisdiction. Otherwise the claims of some foreign government in no way affect their ordinary way of life or their rights and obligations as American citizens. It would seem that some machinery could be provided by the National Government to help all of its dual citizens to divest themselves of the claims of foreign governments. The approach to the problem should be from the standpoint of the country as a whole, rather than that of the situation in Hawaii alone. It is obvious from the sentiments expressed, that a means of eliminating dual citizenship by application to American officials and within the framework of the American Government would have the wholehearted support of the Americans of Japanese ancestry in Hawaii. In the meantime the number of such dual citizens grows steadily less each year, as the older group continue to expatriate themselves in increasing numbers, and Japan abandons all claims to the younger generation.

In conclusion, let me again say that as an American, in part of Yankee ancestry, whose progenitors helped found this Nation, and as a naval officer of nearly 20 years' service in the United States Navy, I unhesitatingly affirm that the citizenry of Hawaii of Japanese ancestry, and of every other racial strain, are just as loyal Americans as may be found anywhere under the American flag.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago I called the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] to an article I had read in the paper. I have just located it in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. It reads as follows:

RAYON CORD TIRES HOLD UP FOR 80,000 MILES IN TEST—3,000 PERCENT MORE DURABLE THAN OTHERS IN HOT-WEATHER DRIVING, CHEMICAL SOCIETY IS TOLD

CINCINNATI, OHIO., April 8.—Automobile tires with cords made of rayon were described to the American Chemical Society today as 3,000 percent more durable in hot-weather driving than standard tires of cotton cord.

The rayon is made from the same raw cotton which is commonly used in tires, so the improvement does not threaten any economic dislocation in use of cotton. William H. Bradshaw, director of rayon research for the du Pont Co., said results in road tests were "astounding." On an overloaded, high-speed run, in a hot country, rayon tires gave 80,000 miles of service under conditions that wore out ordinary tires in 3,000 miles. Rayon tires held up for 18,000 miles in a 106° temperature which wore out standard tires in 600 miles.

This legislation, if enacted into law, would enable the Congress and the country to secure information as to what effect the use of tires that are 3,000 percent more durable than the automobile tires we are using today will have on unemployment. I believe those engaged in the manufacture of tires—employers as well as employees—will certainly want this information, as will the country. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. COOPER) having resumed the chair, Mr. HART, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to make studies of productivity and labor costs in industry, pursuant to House Resolution 408, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOREN) there were—ayes 61, noes 9.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present, and object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Obviously a quorum is not present. The Chair has just counted.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 306, nays 14, answered "present" 1, not voting 108.

[Roll No. 64]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. DOUGHTON. On this bill I voted "nay." If the gentleman from North Carolina were here, I understand he would vote "yea." I therefore withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] and the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] are unavoidably absent on account of business. If they had been present, they would have voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein several tables.

TEMPORARY STUDENT'S VISA

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2598) which was stricken from the calendar last Tuesday be restored to the calendar in view of the fact that the objectors to it have agreed to this request, and I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point and give the reasons for doing this.

Mr. COCHRAN. What is the bill?

Mr. MASON. S. 2598, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, SCOTT LUCAS.

Mr. COCHRAN. What does the bill provide?

Mr. MASON. The bill provides that a temporary student's visa be changed into a permanent visa and one member of the quota be stricken in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, S. 2598, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, Senator LUCAS, is a bill that seeks to change a temporary student's visa into a permanent visa, and subtract in lieu thereof one person from the regular quota for Czechoslovakia. Kurt Wessely, the young man affected by the bill, is a Bohemian, a former citizen of the Republic of Czechoslovakia, a graduate of both medical and dental colleges in Prague and Vienna. He came here on a regular student's visa to carry on advanced work in his chosen fields at the medical and dental schools of the University of Chicago. Kurt Wessely's people have been doctors for the past 300 years, his father having been the family physician and personal friend of President Benes, and a stanch supporter of the Republic. Naturally, under present conditions in Bohemia, Kurt Wessely would be persona non grata with the Hitler regime.

The young man is a brilliant chap. He has developed a new technique for straightening teeth and has received offers to act as instructor in several colleges of dentistry in the Middle West.

Kurt Wessely is here. We know what he is. We know his background. He has proven himself. The question this bill presents is whether we will accept him in lieu of another emigrant, an unknown, who can and will come in under the quota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at the end of the business today on the Speaker's desk, and the special orders, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FRIES. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to extend my remarks and to include an editorial which appeared in the Philadelphia Record of Saturday, March 9, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore entered, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] for 30 minutes.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts from an article appearing in Liberty magazine of this issue in connection with remarks that I expect to present to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement made today by the chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], I rise to follow through and develop some more important facts that, in my opinion, are just as serious as those he has stated on the question of communism. I do not have to make a long speech about that. I think the House knows where I stand. I think the gentleman from Texas is doing fine work, and I wish him lots of luck, but he is paying a little too much attention to one particular phase of un-American activities while this country is still infested with propagandists, espionage, spies roaming around the country, some of them becoming citizens of the United States, although still in the pay of the Nazi Government. I do not have to remind this House that 4 or 5 years ago I called attention to all of the activities in this country of the agencies of the totalitarian states, and that then I predicted there would be a war, and that the only way they could create sentiment in their favor in every country was through propaganda.

That machinery of propaganda organized by the dictators has taken hold of every European country. They tried to do it in this country, but we were fortunate enough to catch them in time. There are still a number of men and women parading under the guise of citizens, and friends of democracy who are on the pay roll of the German Government, and I am sure that the Dies committee has not reached them and I think it is serious enough to call this to the attention of this House and to state that the Dies committee had better do a little overtime work in order to find out just how many we have in the country and who are working under the rule of the dictators to spread propaganda and do damage to our beloved country.

There appeared several articles in the Liberty magazine lately, in which my name is referred to at least 10 or 15 times. It is the most cockeyed article you have ever read; not alone cockeyed, but it is a fairy story in which it is stated that a man named Paffrath was sent here from Germany as a spy for the purpose of obtaining secrets which I received from certain other stool pigeons who were sent from Germany to the United States in order that he could send back a report to the Hitler Government and find out where I got all my information on the activity of propagandists in the United States. And, lo and behold, this gentleman was given proper passports and he came to this country in 1932 and immediately was told to be a citizen, and he applied for citizenship papers.

He became a citizen about 4 years ago, and he was directed to come here and get in my good graces or the good graces of the committee of which I had the honor to be vice chairman and obtain copies of our records. He had to report back in this country to someone who represented the German Government all that he found in my office, whether here or in New York. He writes these articles, and Liberty falls for that bunk. It seems that you cannot get anything in that paper unless you write a lot of bunk. This genius, this confessed spy, who writes these articles, I do not know what he got for them, but his confessions make good reading stories.

In this particular article he heads it this way:

I was a Hitler agent in the United States.

He became a citizen about 3 years ago. So he did exactly what he was told to do; he became a citizen and he refers to other spies in this country who did likewise. They all worked together and they reported their information to some man whose fictitious name appears in the article. This man in turn would report it to somebody in the consulate or some John Jones or John Roe, who in turn would report it back to the Nazi Government.

I am not going into a lot of discussion of how I am referred to here. They thought that some of their associates were giving me information, and they almost said so in the article.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is the writer of this article, which appeared in Liberty, registered as an agent for the Nazi Government under existing law.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He is not.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If that be so, why did not the Dies committee bring him before the committee and find out the facts to present to the American people—find out whether this article in Liberty magazine is another piece of Liberty magazine poison propaganda or whether it is based on actual facts?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am surprised, in view of this article, that the Dies committee has not had this fellow before them under oath before this time. If this man's confession is true, then the Dies committee is derelict in its duty and asleep on the job. They should have devoted some time to investigating this fellow who wrote the Nazi-spy articles for the Liberty magazine. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not alone investigate him, but they should bring him before the Dies committee. At least he confesses he was a Nazi agent on the pay roll of the Nazi Government, and that his purpose not only was to get information through my office and report back to his superior here and in Germany, but that he was working with dozens of other agents on the pay roll of the Nazi Government in this country, to create more strikes and disturbances within our own United States; that he was working under orders of a foreign government; that he was paid by a foreign government as recently as 1 year ago. Aside from his activity, he confesses there were dozens of others, and he should be forced to give us their names, whether fictitious or otherwise; the names of those who were actively engaged, and who were a year ago engaged in propaganda and members of the spy system within the borders of the United States. He ought to be sent to jail if he does not give that information.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Why could not the Attorney General of the United States bring a proceeding to vitiate this man's citizenship, when he publicly confesses that he obtained it under false pretenses?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is nothing to stop the Attorney General from doing that, now that we have this man's confession. But I suppose that will be followed up properly. I think we ought not only cancel his citizenship papers, but send him back to his boss, Hitler, and let him stay there. But, according to his statement, there are dozens of other persons actively engaged in propaganda, and in undermining our Government, according to his own article.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is that not a case for the Dies committee, because in this spy's confession he named the big shot in the spy ring, anonymously?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is this the same article that referred to Masonry?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; this is not the article. This is a new one. This is something new. You will get a kick out of reading it.

Mr. THORKELSON. This is a new one?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. You will have to put some dope in your fingers to make believe that that story is all true. I mean as far as I am concerned and as far as the Committee on Un-American Activities is concerned. He says he was in my employ. That was way back in 1936. The committee of which I had the honor to be vice chairman expired in January 1935. So that the article on its face is absolutely untrue, as far as I am concerned.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. If I may say so, I read that article. That man was, on his own words, a self-confessed liar, and he was paid to lie. Whether or not he might be a subject for the office of the Attorney General, I think the one thing the Dies committee would not get out of him is the truth.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That may be so, but at the same time he refers to other agents by fictitious names. I think the Dies committee could force him to tell the true names of the fictitious persons who are the higher-ups in this country in a scheme to undermine this Government. Irrespective of what the gentlewoman thinks, sometimes a liar might tell the truth as to who his boss is.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The trouble is one could never tell when he was telling the truth.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That I cannot control.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that, whether or not he is telling the truth, the Dies committee should investigate; and if there is no truth to his fantastic story, they should put the brand of subversive propaganda on the magazine Liberty?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I fully agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SHANNON. I would like to ask this question in response to the one that was asked by the gentlewoman from Illinois: Does the gentleman think it matters whether it is the truth or the contrary before the Dies committee if certain members of the committee can get plenty of publicity?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know. I do not think that is a fair question.

Mr. SHANNON. I will say that that is what they want. That is the heart and soul of it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I might not agree fully with the gentleman.

Mr. SHANNON. I say it; I repeat it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Listen to me. I talked my head off here for 4 or 5 years before the Dies committee was set up, but you, and all of you, paid not the slightest attention to me. So what is the use of getting hot about it?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. I would just like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whom he means when he says "they."

Mr. SHANNON. Certain members of the committee.

Mr. MASON. I would like the gentleman to be specific. What members of the Dies committee are seeking publicity?

Mr. SHANNON. Why, the chairman, always.

Mr. MASON. And who else?

Mr. SHANNON. Does the gentleman want me to name others?

Mr. MASON. The chairman can defend himself. I am here to defend myself.

Mr. SHANNON. I do not know what the gentleman has done, but I do know that the chairman has been at it ever since the committee was established, and he was at it today.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield further.

Mr. Speaker, you will find that on pages 48 and 49 of this magazine this man in this article says "Less than a week later I had to go down town to Mr. Black in the absence of Mr. Rich."

Now, I have an idea who Herr Rich is, the vice consul in the city of New York, and Mr. Boucher was another man he had to report to as to just how far he and his group of men who were working on espionage had progressed and what they had accomplished in the way of finding out information, or which one of their squealers was squealing on the Nazi Government. He then discusses me and the Dies committee. Listen to this, Mr. Speaker:

Neither Mr. Dickstein nor the Dies committee have effectively handled the secret activities of the Nazi propaganda in the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Who says that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This agent.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is his name?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Paffrath, a Nazi agent.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The name means nothing. Who is he, and what is he?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He is a Nazi spy who came to this country for the Nazi Government and became a citizen of the United States but worked for the Nazi Government against the United States Government. That is the agent whose articles are being published by Liberty. I do not know how much he was paid for them.

True—

He goes on—

the latter has played a lot of chaos with the bund, but the bund was little more at any time than a straw organization.

He goes on to say that there are higher-ups and that he reported to the higher-ups on what he had been doing and what his group engaged in espionage was doing in this country. He states that he got into labor organizations for the purpose of initiating, continuing, and prolonging strikes and he names persons to this Mr. Rich, who is the dummy for the Nazi Government.

Not only that, he goes on to say that at one time he was instructed to steal two checks in my office—blank checks—and he admits that, following orders, he committed forgery and cashed them. This part of his story, I know, happens to be true. He took a rubber stamp that we use on congressional stationery and stamped the signature, then went over it with pen and ink. He cashed those checks with the idea of getting into jail because he was afraid of the Nazi Government—afraid they would think he was not doing enough work for them and not producing enough results in getting sufficient information from my office.

He goes on to state that he met other agents of the Nazi Government—and this is only about a year ago—in the office of Mr. Rich somewhere in New York, where they all congregated, and that they matched notes as to how they obtained information important to their Government and how they could create disturbance within our form of government.

He says that in order not to be prosecuted he had himself committed to an insane asylum; but now he says that he was not crazy, that he was as sane as any other American. Not alone that, but that he practically spied on the Dies committee, in addition to spying on my office, and everything he found in the files he had access to he reported and, by the way, I do not think the files dealing with un-American activities were in New York at all at that time. He never was on my pay roll. I never gave him a quarter. In order to attract my attention to his persecution by the Nazis, he said they were going to kidnap him, and a group of spies did kidnap him. He filed a complaint against the group of Nazis from the North German Lloyd Lines. They went into court and, by the way, there was a record of that. He says this was done on orders of Herr Rich, a higher-up, so as to attract the sympathy of the American people. He would thereby have the American people come to his aid, get their confidence, and in that way he would find out information and be able to report. I am not vouching for whether he will tell or is telling the truth. But here is a man who is now a citizen of the United States and confesses that he was a Nazi spy at the time he became a citizen. There are hundreds of cases like that.

On the 13th of last month I pleaded with the House to give my committee the opportunity to study all these applications for citizenship, but that proposition has been bottled up in the Rules Committee. I would have gone into that. According to our information, there are hundreds of people who took the oath of allegiance to defend the Constitution of the United States, but they cannot possibly do it because they do not intend to remain citizens of the United States. They only want to protect themselves for the time being.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would the gentleman deny citizenship to those people?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would absolutely deny citizenship to those who owe allegiance to a dictator or a potentate.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would deny citizenship to any person employed by a foreign government or who represents a foreign government in connection with espionage, sabotage, or whatever you wish to call it against our Government or who seeks to find out secrets for a foreign government, because that person could not take an oath of allegiance.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman mean he wants to do that by the enactment of a statute?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The statute is on the books now.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not understand what the gentleman is trying to get at.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have a lot of information in connection with similar cases. These people appeared before the courts and became citizens with no intention whatever to carry out allegiance to our country. They could not have possibly taken the oath of allegiance in good faith. This includes the Fritz Kuhn crowd who took the oath of citizenship several years ago.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman mean he would revoke their citizenship?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think I would.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Because they did not take the oath in good faith?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Absolutely.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How is the gentleman going to get at that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is very simple to get at it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Through court procedure?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why not? Take the case of this man Paffrath. He admits he was a spy from 1932 until about a year ago. He became a citizen of the United States 3 years ago. At the time he raised his hand and swore he would defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, he was in the employ of the Nazi Government. If he could have helped destroy this country, he would have done it at that time. That was his job.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I can see how you could get his papers revoked, but how is the gentleman going to show that the average fellow who takes the oath does not intend to obey it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There are crackpots who write hundreds of letters which give you this information, but we have no means, no appropriation, and no power to go into these matters. We cannot call attention of the proper bureaus and the courts to it. I have asked for a resolution from the Rules Committee to do that very thing and other things in connection with the border question, but I got nowhere.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. Has the gentleman heard about the proposed federal union of states? Would he also deny citizenship to anyone who was connected with such an international proposition as the proposed union of states?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I cannot answer that question because I have not gone into it. I have taken some of these isolated cases in which they held what is known as a dual nationality. I do not know what I would do or what I would not do in any other cases. But I would accept the broad principle, and I would say that no man should be permitted or allowed to become a citizen of the United States unless he absolutely severs his relationship with all foreign dictators, kings, and potentates and is ready to abide by the principles laid down by our Constitution.

Mr. THORKELSON. I believe when a man swears to preserve and protect this Government according to the Constitution, then he has ceased his relationship with foreign governments.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. When they took the oath they were actually engaged in sabotage and espionage, and they just stopped until the judge finished his sentence, and they took the oath, and the next morning they went right back to their dirty work and continued actively engaged in sabotage against this Government. I say the papers of such men ought to be revoked.

Mr. THORKELSON. I believe they ought to be deported.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The article in Liberty written by Mr. Paffrath, a self-confessed Nazi spy, indicated that he stole two of the gentleman's checks and forged the gentleman's name. Is that correct?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. He actually did steal the gentleman's checks and forged the gentleman's name to them and cashed the checks?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then why is he not in the jailhouse for larceny and forgery instead of running around the country writing fantastic propaganda articles for Liberty?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We could not find the gentleman until he sold his brilliant detective story to Liberty, which published it and advertised that they were going to run this great detective story of a German spy working in our Government.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Cannot the Department of Justice take care of that man now?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We will take care of him now. I rose simply to ask the Dies committee to bring Mr. Paffrath to court and let him disclose the other agents to whom he referred as having worked with him and having reported to a superior in New York City, whether it is Black, White, or Green. All of these persons should be subpenaed before the committee.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. There has been some criticism this afternoon of the Dies committee. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe the Dies committee has done a fine work with reference not only to the German Bund but the Communists of this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is taking in a broad territory.

Mr. PITTENGER. Is not that an easy question to answer?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. So far as I am concerned, I believe they are doing a good job, but they could do a still better job.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is not that true of all of us?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I know, but when you have something right under your nose you should not pass it by; in other words, you ought to have a 50–50 break. The Communist, the Nazi, the Fascist—they are all cousins. It does not make any difference, get them all. Let us clean house.

We ought to pass enough laws to deport them. They have no business in our democracy. At the same time, let us not overlook the Fascist espionage movement in this country, because they as a rule hide in the cellar. They do not come out in the open. When the trial of the Christian Front men is over when the 17 cases now pending in the Federal court at New York are disposed of, I propose to go before the Dies committee, and I will startle the country with certain activities of that group. I do not want to do it now because I think it would be unfair while they are on trial.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then why criticize the Dies committee until the gentleman gives them that information?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not criticizing the Dies committee. I say they can do a better job. If that is criticism, I do not know what criticism is.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I take it the 17 men the gentleman refers to are these boys who were arrested recently as representing the so-called Christian Front?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman how far along are they with those prosecutions? What have they done with them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are on trial now. The Federal Government is still putting in its case.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How does the gentleman classify them with reference to whether they are Communists or Nazis?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are another group of crackpots.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. They are all in the same class?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The 17 are only a little sample. There are at least 200,000 who can be traced to other parts of the country outside of New York, and who more or less have a new scheme and order of things on how to start trouble in this country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman, I believe, can well afford to classify them all in one group, these Communists, anarchists, and so forth?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are all cousins.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. However, the gentleman gave one classification there which I think he probably got in the wrong category.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I may make a mistake or two. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] says we all make mistakes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman included atheists. I do not believe atheists ought to be included with these other groups.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For the purpose of the record I will take them out, if that will help the situation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have been waiting to find out the name of the man who furnished all this information in the magazine article. The gentleman gave the name but I did not understand it. What is it again?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. His name is Paffrath, Joachim Paffrath.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman know what his nationality is?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He is a Nazi spy. That is his nationality. He came in here, as he admits, sent here by the German Government for the purpose of joining any American organization and relaying the information gained to the superior in New York, who in turn relays it to the Nazi Government.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman says he is a Nazi. By that we would ordinarily think him to be a German.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have nothing against the German people. I want you to know that. I have the highest regard for every race and creed.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What is his race?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He is a German, born in Germany, and he has been a so-called stool pigeon in Germany and he thought he would be a good stool pigeon in the United States.

He was told not only to work on the Republican National Convention but to work on the Democratic National Convention, too, and to find out all their secrets and to get into the good graces of Members of Congress and to find out just what files they had on the Nazi Government and to report to his superiors.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There is one other question that I do not believe you went into details about. How was he able to get himself into an insane asylum willfully and on purpose all by himself?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Because he is a good actor. He was trained by somebody in the espionage service. They know all the tricks of the game. I do not know all of them, but I am learning some of them.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What asylum did he get into?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It was some place in New Jersey, and he stayed there for 2 or 3 weeks and then he said, "I am sane now," and they let him out. Some of his Heinies or some of his coworkers helped him come out of the insane asylum, and he disappeared from that time on.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Do you not think it would be worth your while, if you have not done so, to find out how he manipulated that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am checking on that now, but I ask this House and I ask my good friends of the Dies committee to go into this. I can give them the address. This man should be immediately subpenaed, and let him tell us all about this. So far as his incorrect references to his place in my office, I will handle that situation myself, and I will handle the deportation and the question of the cancelation of his papers, because he could not honestly defend the Constitution of the United States, and you and I know it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And you say that he had something to do with the committee of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] was the chairman and you were the vice chairman and I was a member?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You were a member of that committee, and you never heard of such a man?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know that I did.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is all fantastic.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. When you did see him, did he masquerade or operate under this same name or did he have a different name?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He operated under one or two names. They introduced him as Paffy and other names, but it is Paffrath. I did not know the man from Adam, except that

I met him several times, but not in the fashion he describes. Some gentleman told me he wanted to split up some activity in the way of espionage by the Nazi Government, and then he came to see me in my office once in the presence of three or four people, and he wanted to talk, and I did not want to talk to him. He wanted to do it all alone. I always have company when I talk to people who are doing something I do not think they ought to be doing. I did not know, until I was informed of it, that he had become a citizen of the United States. I checked on that, and I found that out after this article was published. He became a citizen 2 or 3 years ago in the courts of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRINGTON. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, I may be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRINGTON. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, among the greatest historical tragedies of all times the subjugation and enslavement of Czechoslovakia will be so recorded. This land of cultured and liberty-loving people, an outstanding example of democracy and progress, has been trampled beneath the heel of Nazi-German militarism. Information which from time to time trickles through the cordon of the Gestapo indicates that what was once a nation of free and happy people is now one vast prison camp, where freedom, liberty, and the pursuit of a given calling have been ruthlessly suppressed and where imprisonment, execution, and mass enslavement became an everyday occurrence in the existence of the unfortunate Bohemian populace.

This nation, which in 20 years assumed a leading place in the family of nations and pointed the way in commercial and cultural progress, a nation where the suppressed culture of its more than a thousand years of recorded history was revitalized and brought to the fore, today is shackled in chains and confined to a dungeon forged by the gory hands of depraved and heartless nazi-ism. The great accomplishment of the modern Czechoslovakian patriots and heroes, like the handiwork of ages, of a thousand and one heroes, and saintly and scientific men, battered and crushed, will rise again. As sure as there is a God in the heavens, this blasphemous desecration and ravishment of a great and noble people will be avenged, and justice will restore this ancient nation to its rightful place in the family of nations.

There is not another people on the face of the earth more progressive, more democratic, and fundamentally sound and religious than the people of enslaved Czechoslovakia. The world under the direction of a Higher Power will free this noble people from bondage. It is my hope and prayer that they will bear their cross silently and patiently, for the day of delivery is not far off.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRINGTON. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

HOG PRICES

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, in a speech made to this body under date of February 23, I said:

> American hog lard, which for decades past has built the brain and brawn of the American people, is such a drag in the domestic markets of the United States that the Department of Commerce actually reports that lard is being bought by the soap manufacturers and dumped into soap kettles of the Nation. Overburdening surpluses and carry-over have driven hog lard prices to the lowest in 73 years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me now read what the Department of Agriculture has to say of present lard stocks in a bulletined report as of March 1, 1940:

> Storage stocks of lard again mounted, figuring 258,029,000 pounds. Lard holdings were 28 percent greater than a month earlier, 106 percent above those of March 1939, and 104 percent above the 5-year average.
> The total holdings of lard in cold storage as of March 1, 1940, were greater than those of a month earlier, and materially exceeded those of the same period last year and the 5-year average for the month.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the same report by that Department discloses the fact that all the while stocks were mounting during the last 2 years that lard prices were declining and did decline, month by month, from a price of 10.1 cents per pound as of February 1, 1938, to a price of 5.87 cents as of today.

This morning's mail brought to my desk a copy of a statement made yesterday to the press by Col. C. C. Hanson, the secretary of the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture. The Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture is a member of the National Association of Agricultural Secretaries, Commissioners, and Directors.

Mr. Speaker, we, who legislate here in Congress, as fittingly becomes a democratic institution, legislate entirely on a broad national basis. Many of us are far removed from our constituencies. Our work in Washington has to do legislatively with many diverse subjects.

During a session of Congress it is practically impossible for us to engage in much individual research on economic or agricultural trends, and yet we must be informed. We must, therefore, seek out some satisfactory method whereby we may keep reasonably well informed on what the "feel" is in the farm or other industrial circles. The commissioners of agriculture of the several States, the duly elected administrators, are on the other hand charged only with the administration of agricultural affairs. Consequently, they are in close daily contact with our farmers. The price of oats, or of rye, of barley, hogs, or cattle are a matter of daily concern to them. The rainfall, aridity, temperature, storm, flood, transportation conditions, market trends, prices, and so forth, are problems which, unlike a representative to Congress, concern them every hour of every single day. It has been my pleasure to have met many of the commissioners of agriculture of these United States. I have come to regard them individually and collectively as a body of public servants, who are doing a splendid work in behalf of American agriculture in every phase of its activity, from production to marketing.

Mr. Speaker, I have learned that when I receive a communication from the Association of the Commissioners of Agriculture, the members of whom, in their official capacities know no party, no section, no State line; I know they are speaking for the dirt farmers. I know also that it is on some subject that has to do with a question of vital importance to American agriculture. Therefore I read the statement of Colonel Hanson with a great deal of interest. Though a very short statement, it is so replete with facts that I propose, with the consent of my colleagues and at the end of my remarks, to insert the same into the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, the statement made by Colonel Hanson is a clear, lucid expression of the tremendous benefits which are to accrue to American agriculture and industry by and through the new cotton-stamp plan, to be put to a test this month in Memphis, Tenn.

The statement also includes some short hard-headed factual expressions by the Honorable William Green, president of the Federation of Labor, showing the need of increasing the purchasing power of the American people and particularly the purchasing power of our low-income groups and public-assistance families.

Believe me, sir, when I say that the soundness of that statement is entirely axiomatic. There is nothing theoretical about it. Entirely factual, it is so clear and so compelling that even a child could comprehend its economic and its factual soundness.

Colonel Hanson's statement looks primarily to the improvement of conditions of the cotton planters of our southern country. After reading it, I determined to do a little fact finding for myself. I did this selfishly in order to see for myself whether or not there was not something akin to the suggestions offered by Colonel Hanson that could be extended to the corn and to the hog farmers of my district.

While I realize full well the problem presented by the great cotton surplus piled up in our docks and in our warehouses, I am far more conscious of the ever-increasing surpluses of hog lard that are piling up on our farms and the cold-storage plants in the Mississippi Valley Corn Belt area, and the distressingly low prices prevailing throughout the country both for hogs and for hog lard, as well as other domestically produced animal and vegetable oils and fats.

In order to exhibit just how critical the present price situation is to the farmers of the Middle West, if not to every farmer and planter in the United States, let me now make reference to the daily press. I needed to look no further than the press of yesterday to find that hogs sold in the market of Sioux City at from $3.50 to $4.90 per hundred pounds—prices comparable to those which obtained in our markets in the dark days of 1932.

Now, hear me well on this, Mr. Speaker! I mean that good, choice 140- to 350-pound hogs—not packing sows—sold at from $3.50 to $4.90 per hundred pounds.

For the benefit of the Members on both sides of the aisle, let me now present the hog quotation as of Friday, April 5, in Chicago as well as the other principal markets of the country.

HOG QUOTATIONS IN PRINCIPAL MARKETS

The prices following cover the quoted range on good to choice 140- to 350-pound hogs—packing sows excluded:

LIVESTOCK IN CHICAGO

CHICAGO, April 4.—Hogs dropped 5 to 15 cents today. The United States Department of Agriculture report follows:

"Salable hogs, 12,000; total, 16,500. Market opened 5 to 10 cents lower than Wednesday's average, closed fully 10 cents, with numerous instances 15 cents off; general clearance slow and draggy throughout session; top, $5.15; very few deals completed above $5.05 late; bulk good to choice, 200 to 300 pounds, $4.75 to $5.10; 300 pounds upward, largely $4.60 to $4.80; extreme heavies, downward to $4.50; choice light lights very scarce, fully steady; others little changed; few good to choice, 150 to 170 pounds, $4.60 to $4.90; good packing sows, 400 to 500 pounds, mostly $4.10 to $4.30; lights, upward to $4.50."

Could anything be more cogent or expressive of the deplorable price conditions that obtain in our hog and lard market today than those cold-blooded short cryptic quoted market prices abstracted from the New York Journal of Commerce of Friday, April 5, 1940?

Mr. Speaker, I want you to believe with me that when an Iowa hog farmer loads his truck and starts down the highway to market with his load of hogs that wrapped up in those pigskins is the result of all of his year's sweat and toil in the sweltering sun of our western prairie countries. Also wrapped up in the hides he is hauling to market on the "hoof" are all of that year's hopes and ambitions of his wife and his family. Out of that crop of hogs it was expected would come moneys that would pay the taxes, meet the interest on the mortgage, possibly provide some small creature comforts in life, and, who knows, perhaps meet exigencies that have arisen from illness and distress.

Maybe it was hoped also, as is often the case, that there might come a contribution toward the education of some child in the higher institutions of learning of our State. Above all, believe me, gentlemen, that when I stand on this floor and talk hogs and lard to you I am not talking of just animal meat and fat, that I am speaking of a thing that means not alone hard money, but either success or failure, happiness or misery, to the farmers of your every district as well as of mine in Iowa.

Mr. Speaker, by far the greatest question before this country today is the question of the status of American agriculture. It must be obvious to every Member of this body that we can legislate here until kingdom come and that it is absolutely useless for us to spend day after day in pursuing other courses in an attempt to solve the problem of our national economy so long as our American agriculture languishes.

Thus far our success has been measured only in the expressions of pious hopes. Let me prove that point. Session after session we have met in this body and have legislated in an endeavor to achieve parity price of farm products. In order to assess the actual results of our labor I made contact with the Department of Agriculture to learn exactly the per centum of parity prices which have resulted from our legislation. Now let me read a few of the farm prices received on certain selected crops and to tell you the per centum of parity achieved as of this very day:

Commodity	Farm price	Percent of parity
	Cents
Wheat, bushel	88.6	77
Corn, do	56.09	70
Oats, do	38.8	72
Cotton, pound	8.40	63
Butterfat, do	28.1	83
Wool, do	26.8	114
	Dollars
Veal calves, hundredweight	8.81	102
Cattle, do	7.00	101
Hogs, do	4.66	49

Now hear me well on this—while the wheat farmer, the cotton planter, the dairyman, and the wool growers, are receiving from 70 to 85 percent of parity price on their commodities, and, while the cattle raiser is receiving a full 100 percent of parity, the hog raisers of my district and the entire Mississippi Valley in the Corn Belt area are receiving less than 50 percent of parity for their hogs.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that not alone should all or even some farmers receive a parity of price for the products which he sells, but that there ought in decency be a parity of prices existent between various farm commodities themselves.

With the price of hogs dropping from an average of 10.15 cents in 1937 to—in some instances—less than 4 cents today, the condition of the lard and for that matter the vegetable shortening industry has been so bad that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation recently declared hog lard to be a surplus commodity. In order to assist both the hog raisers and the cotton planters by the removal at least in part of the surplus, they recently placed lard under the orange and blue stamp program for disposal, at its economic value, to those receiving public assistance in our country.

But Mr. Speaker, it now appears that the oils and fats producers are now to be denied even that modicum of help. The appropriation budgeted by the President for the continuation of the Surplus Commodities Corporation lard disposal was stricken from the Agricultural supply bill by this body 2 weeks ago on a mere point of order.

The supply bill is now in conference. The conference has continued for the last week or 10 days. The conference is the court of last resort and this the last opportunity that this body will have of doing something concrete in behalf of the American corn and hog farmers, the soybean and the cotton planters, as well as the livestock and dairy industry, in order to save them from impending doom in the sale of their vegetable oils and fats.

I am here and now appealing to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to do all in their power to have the conferees on the House side yield to the conferees of the Senate in order that the moneys appropriated for the removal and economic disposal of surplus commodities as recommended by the President in his Budget be voted.

I would further propose that they agree that the sum of $8,000,000 be allocated for the impounding of 120,000,000 pounds of surplus lard and domestically produced vegetable-oil shortenings, and that the same be held off the market until at least a parity price is achieved in the price of lard, equal at least to other agricultural commodities.

This matter is so urgent that only last week a formal request for such action was directed to Secretary Wallace by the Livestock Exchange of Kansas City and their request has already been endorsed by many other farm organizations and associations.

This money will not be lost to the Government; in fact, it would most likely prove a profitable transaction. Certainly it would restore and bring the price of hog lard up to approximately 75 percent of a parity price, and thus place it on a plane with other agricultural staple commodities. It will help not alone the hog raisers bu the cottonseed and soybean oil products.

Mr. Speaker, let me read from a bulletin, LS–9, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture under date of March 20, which shows the precarious condition of the hog farmer today.

In reporting on the livestock situation the Department of Agriculture writes as follows:

The seasonal increase in hog marketing will get under way during the next month—April—when marketing of fall pigs begins in large volume.

The number of hogs on the farms as of January 1, 1940, was about 18 percent larger than a year earlier. Since the major part of the hogs on the farms on January 1 will be marketed by the end of summer, the slaughter supply of hogs is expected to continue materially larger than the year earlier—throughout the balance of the marketing year and up until September 30.

Hog prices for March were about $2.50 per hundred lower than a year earlier. A seasonal increase in hog marketing probably will get under way during the next month or so as marketings of fall pigs begin in large volume.

Marketings of packing sows will increase seasonally during the late spring and summer. The number and proportion of packing sows in total hog slaughter during the last half of the hog-marketing year—April–September—may be somewhat larger than in the corresponding months of the 1938–39 season.

Hog marketings during the remainder of the 1939–40 marketing year ending September 30 will continue materially larger than a year earlier. The total number of hogs on January 1, 1940, was 58.3 million head—about 18 percent greater than a year earlier. On the basis of past relationships, the number of hogs on January 1, 1940, indicates an inspected slaughter for the January–September period of around 35,000,000 head. Slaughter in January and February totaled 9.6 million head.

On this basis, total inspected hog slaughter in the 7 months—March–September—may total a little more than 25,000,000 head, or about 4,000,000 head more than in the corresponding period. This indication of about 25,000,000 head of hogs for inspected slaughter March–September 1940 is in line with statements in earlier issues of the Livestock Situation that slaughter for the 1939–40 marketing year—October–September—will total about 48,000,000 head.

In January and February the number and proportion of sows in receipts at leading markets were larger than a year earlier. This indicates that a larger-than-usual proportion of sows bred for spring farrow have been marketed this winter. Present indications are that the hog-corn price ratio will continue unfavorable—or at least considerably less favorable than a year earlier—during most of 1940. It therefore seems likely that both the 1940 spring and fall pig crops will be smaller than—

The 1939 crops and total production of pork and lard in 1940–41 will be smaller than during the 1939–40 season. A decrease in the 1940 spring pig crop will mean smaller marketings of hogs in the winter of 1940–41 than were marketed this year.

Consumer demand for hog products in the period April through September is expected to be stronger than a year earlier, and this, together with seasonally smaller hog marketings in the last half of the year than in the first half, probably will have a strengthening effect upon hog prices. Export demand for pork and lard this spring and summer probably will be no stronger and may be weaker than a year earlier.

The average price of butcher hogs at Chicago for the week ended March 9 was about $5.20, compared with $5.15 a month earlier and $7.75 a year earlier.

The ratio of hog prices to corn prices continued about steady at a level considerably below average during February and early March. The ratio of Chicago hog and corn prices for the week ended March 9 was 8.8, compared with the very favorable ratio of 16.0 a year earlier.

Inspected hog slaughter in February totaled 4,277,000 head, or about 48 percent more than in February last year, and the largest slaughter for the month since 1932. The percentage increase in slaughter over a year earlier in February was much the largest for any month thus far in the current hog-marketing year, which began October 1.

Inspected hog slaughter for the first 5 months (October–February) of the current hog-marketing year totaled nearly 23,000,000 head, or about 23.5 percent more than in the corresponding period of the 1938–39 season. (The 1939 spring pig crop was about 20 percent larger than that of 1938.) The average weight of hogs slaughtered in January and February was somewhat lighter than a year earlier.

Mr. Speaker, it is for the foregoing, among many other reasons, that I urge that an action program be started by my colleagues. I am asking that they join me in seeing that the conferees of the House yield to the Senate conferees in the matter of the item inserted in the agricultural supply bill by the Senate for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, as presented to this House by the President in his Budget, and originally lost on a point of order in the House and restored by the Senate.

I would have every Member realize with me the small percentage of that money that will be required to restore lard to its proper pricing in our markets. I would have them also realize that the program of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation since the very inception of that congressionally established body have been of immeasurable benefit to the dairy and the orchard industry. That it has been of incalculable help to the cotton South. That their programs have helped, and will continue to help, the wheat growers and the tobacco planters, the poultry raisers and fruit growers not alone of the west coast but of the Nation in general.

Moreover I would point out that the continuation of their program will not alone help the labor in our cities, both by virtue of the health benefits they could enjoy by increasing their food and raiment, but also by increasing the purchasing power accruing to our agricultural industries through the purchase of farm goods by persons now receiving public assistance.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, the restoration of that appropriation will tend in part to rectify the double injustice now being suffered by hog raisers of our country. They today are compelled to stand in our market places and see their products bring less than half of their worth, while all other agricultural groups enjoy from 50 to 100 percent better return in the markets than they receive for the product of their soil and their toil.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks the statement of Col. C. C. Hanson to which I referred in my opening remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. This statement includes the remarks of the Honorable William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and I would ask the Members of this House to read this clearly illuminating document at their leisure if they want to get a clear picture of the wonderful work now being done by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF ASSOCIATION OF SOUTHERN COMMISSIONERS OF AGRICULTURE

Col. C. C. Hanson, secretary to the southern commissioners of agriculture, today declared that the benefits which will result from placing cotton under the orange- and blue-stamp plan will be of immeasurable advantage to both the agricultural and industrial sections of the country.

In discussing the cotton-disposal program to be put into effect by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation in Memphis, Tenn., he predicted that the trial test would prove so successful as to result in the extension of the program on a Nation-wide basis.

"It is to be remembered," he said, "that the value of the raw product which enters into the manufacture of the cotton textile be sold under the new stamp plan is but a percentage of the value of the labor added in fabricating the raw cotton. This added labor value," he declared, "will prove to be of immense benefit, not alone to the textile industry, but to all branches of commerce, transportation, and trade. Moreover," he said, "the program is not alone economically, but it is socially, fundamentally, and factually sound."

He stated that the greatly curtailed foreign markets for cotton, which followed in the wake of the second world war, made it highly imperative that some method be found which would economically and successfully market the great exportable surplus of this historic cash crop of the Southern States.

Colonel Hanson continued, "It is generally conceded that the activities of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation represent the finest type of all current Federal Government activities. The entire American agricultural industry is, therefore, ardently hoping that the House conferees, now in deadlock, will agree to the restoration of the budgeted appropriation made in the Senate, not alone for carrying on but for extending the activities of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, under the 1940 agricultural supply bill."

In discussing the social soundness of the cotton stamp program, Mr. Hanson went on to tell of the terrific need for cotton goods in the shape of sheeting, pillow casing, and toweling, as well as the need for under and outer garments, that now exists in practically every home in the United States. He cited facts and figures from commerce and trade associations to portray the inability of our publicly assisted families to make direct purchase of cotton goods.

He went on to point out that the sale of manufactured cotton made available under the stamp plan would not alone improve the conditions of the producers and processors of cotton, but will build comfort, health, and hygiene among the families of our underprivileged people.

In discussing the patent need for increasing the Nation's purchasing power which he declared the underlying motive of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation's program, the colonel quoted from a speech by the president of the American Federation of Labor, in which Mr. Green recently declared:

"We would be going far toward a solution of our national economic problems if the businessman, the banker, the farmer, the housewife, and the worker himself had a better conception of the importance of the expenditures of the low-salaried worker to our national economy.

"The consumption of consumer goods, directly affects the activities of our industries that supply equipment for conversion of the products of the farm, mine, forest, and all other raw products. Now, everyone knows that persons with small incomes spend a greater proportion of their income for consumers goods.

"The wages of the nearly 40,000,000 regular workers in the United States are therefore the biggest factor in our whole national economy. * * * We know that not more than 7 percent of all incomes exceed $3,000 a year; that the vast majority of nearly 40,000,000 workers earn less than $1,500 a year; that they buy more than 75 percent of all consumers goods; whose movement represents prosperity in stores and in factories and the consumption of which effects the employment of millions of other workers."

"It is unbelievable," Colonel Hanson said, "that any voice whatsoever could be raised in opposition to the program of the Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation. Basically, its purpose is to remove surplus agricultural crops which are already existent and to sell them to the underprivileged and the unemployed at their economic value."

The sooner the American people understand the wholly cooperative character of the stamp program of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation the sooner we will be able to intelligently attack the great problem of disposing of our surplus cotton. Certainly we cannot approach the problem intelligently without all fundamental facts, and these made available by the test to be conducted at Memphis will perhaps enable us to make answer to the question as to why millions of workers in a nation of plenty cannot purchase more freely of our overburdening surpluses of agricultural products of which they stand in need.

It will indeed be a national tragedy if, through a lack of sympathetic understanding, the Senate conferees do not prevail and as a result thereof afford to our cotton producers, cattle and hog raisers, fruit and vegetable growers, and dairy farmers, as well as the national welfare, the great opportunity to increase our purchasing power offered through the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation surplus-disposal program.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the National Tribune on the subject of the Dies committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, some language was used this afternoon that might belittle the work of the Dies committee or might question some of the motives of the members of that committee. I had occasion last year to attend those hearings, and I say that no committee of this House has done finer work than has the Dies committee. The suggestion that the chairman or the members of the committee get publicity is beside the point. They ought to get publicity. They get it because they are doing a work that ought to be done in this country.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. Yes.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman read the opinion of Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts, of the Federal court in the District of Columbia, this morning?

Mr. PITTENGER. No; I did not; and what I say and his decision do not conflict. The work of the Dies committee is an outstanding contribution to the cause of Americanism. I have no time for those who would undermine the foundations of this Government, and those are the people that the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, and his associates have been trying to get at.

Mr. Speaker, as I have heretofore indicated, I was present at several sessions of the Dies committee during 1939, and I have personal knowledge of the fact that the committee proceeded in an orderly manner and that their only objectives were to ascertain the truth from the witnesses who testified. When you find someone who says unkind things about the committee, or its members, or its method of procedure, you can make up your mind that that party is not in sympathy with the purpose for which the Dies committee was created.

In other words, that party is trying to protect someone who does not like the pitiless light of publicity which the Dies committee casts upon them. There are too many people who are in sympathy with our communistic friends.

The National Tribune, under date of April 11, has a very interesting editorial, and I quote a portion of that editorial. It reads:

The more we learn from the Dies committee investigations, the prouder we become of the National Tribune's part in obtaining legislation to establish the committee and in keeping it going despite the efforts of highly influential groups to end the revealing un-American inquiries.

Citizens of the United States of America and some aliens who have neglected to become citizens have a sacred heritage. This is the Bill of Rights written into the Constitution, the fundamental law of our country. These rights include freedom of speech, freedom to worship as one sees fit, freedom of the press, and freedom of peaceful assembly. These rights, given to us by the men who won our independence, must be guarded jealously and zealously.

The revelations of the Dies committee have awakened the people of our country to a realization that there are subversive elements among us busily engaged in trying to undermine our system of government.

Refusal of Communist witnesses to answer questions propounded by members of the committee is proof conclusive to us that the so-called Communist Party in the United States is dominated by authorities in Moscow. The defiance of the "reds" from Pittsburgh and Baltimore toward the legally constituted House body is indicative of the attitude of all Communists toward law and order in this country. World conditions are in such a state of chaos the United States must maintain a careful guard to search out enemies within our borders. That is what the Dies committee is doing.

It is of great interest to note that the so-called Communist Party is one of the very few organizations that keep their lists of members secret. There are many groups with secret rituals, but their membership is well known, if not nationally, at least locally. The members of these organizations are enrolled under their real names, not fictitiously as Communists are. They are proud of their membership. This is true of fraternal orders. It is also true of churches, something with which the Communists are not familiar.

This editorial then proceeds to point out that the Dies committee has proceeded in accordance with law in securing evidence, reports to the contrary notwithstanding. It also points out that some witnesses who have refused to answer questions before the Dies committee have had contempt proceedings instituted against them.

In endorsing the work of the Dies committee the National Tribune concludes the editorial with these words:

The Dies committee has done a wonderful piece of work, and we believe from past performances that it will continue to reveal the activities of alien agents in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. My time has expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the special orders fixed for tomorrow, and the business on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I take this time because I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] a question. His brief oration delivered here a few moments ago seemed to indicate that the gentleman from Minnesota thought that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] was criticizing the Dies committee.

Mr. PITTENGER. Oh, I did not mean to say that. There was some criticism, however, of that committee.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] this afternoon performed a real service in giving some advice and helpful suggestions to the Dies committee. If a self-confessed spy, an agent of a foreign government, comes to the United States while performing spy duty, on the pay roll of his government—falsely swears and obtains American citizenship, and then writes a magazine article confessing to those facts, I believe it would be far more important for the Dies committee to have him as a witness for a thorough and complete public investigation than to spend a great deal of time running around the Mexican border asking for advice and testimony from Trotsky.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. DIES. And I say to the gentleman that we have given instructions for a subpena to issue to this individual. However, we had this experience before. Someone wrote one of these lurid stories in the Liberty magazine, in which he purported to be telling a lot of things that had happened, and when we got him to the office we found that he did not know anything at all.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the Liberty magazine is putting out this false propaganda then the publishers of that magazine are as guilty of circulating false propaganda and un-American activities as this self-confessed spy who has written the false propaganda articles in order to stir up hatred and prejudice in the United States. Millions of American people read Liberty magazine and that magazine should be denied the use of the United States mails if it has become a peddler of false, inflammatory propaganda poison. The Dies committee should completely investigate Liberty magazine as well as the writers of the false-propaganda articles.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; I yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I want to make this observation with regard to criticizing the Dies committee: Since when has it become treason to criticize the Dies committee, or is the Dies committee a sacred cow that Members cannot criticize?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I do not think the Dies committee is a sacred cow. I do not think the members of the Dies committee resent justifiable criticism or constructive advice. There are a few things about the operation of that committee that I do not approve of. I do not like the portion of the printed testimony which indicates that the committee was not going to investigate the Ku Klux Klan. I understand from press reports that the Ku Klux Klan is now on the ride down South.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The committee has given out no such statement. I do not know where the gentleman got his information.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. When do you intend to investigate the Ku Klux Klan?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the committee investigate the Ku Klux Klan? The chairman is here. Let us have an answer.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the fact that the Ku Klux Klan is again in action down South, they should be investigated now.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. THORKELSON. Do you not believe the court ought to sustain the Dies committee?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The courts should sustain the Dies committee when the Dies committee is right; but if the Dies committee makes a mistake, and every human being makes a mistake now and again, the courts should not sustain the Dies committee.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is not the Dies committee right when it is investigating communism?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, I have fought communism in Congress and out of Congress. I have some information myself as to Communist attempts to undermine and overthrow our Government. We have sacred rights and liberties under our Constitution. I do not want to adopt a precedent of riding roughshod over those sacred rights and liberties, even in our battle against communism, because such a precedent, like Banquo's ghost, will rise to haunt us in the future.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. None of us thinks that the Dies committee is a sacred cow, but obviously it is a very good barking-dog warning against communism. Most of us are for it for that reason.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Absolutely; and the Dies committee should bring this poison peddler, to whom the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] called attention, before them and ask him to name these anonymous big shots of the spy ring, and produce the evidence which he refers to in his Liberty magazine articles. I think myself that the man was a bona fide inmate of an insane asylum, and he wrote those articles when he had hallucinations and delusions [laughter and applause], and that he is being used as a front and a stooge for un-American and subversive false propaganda activities.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, April 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father of mankind, to whom all souls are dear, harken to our prayer as we come into Thy presence, and do Thou turn Thy face from our sins and put out all our misdeeds, for Thou requirest truth in the inward hearts, and makest us to understand wisdom secretly. We long for the solution of our spiritual problems and release from our spiritual bondage by the increase of a true faith that alone can win reality and color from each changing experience. In our thoughts and in our actions, in our private and our public life may we show forth the faith that comes to us in the strength of righteousness—the very spirit of unsparing truth. So shall we learn that joy has enriched our belief, that sorrow has deepened it, that doubts have sobered it, and that labor has purified it till at last it carry us through the river into the life beyond where we shall hear "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." We ask it in our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the able and distinguished Chief Justice of the United States is 78 years young today. He is one of the great, stalwart figures of his time. The history of this country has not produced a greater jurist, a nobler character, or a sturdier patriot. I take the liberty of expressing to him the felicitations of the United States Senate upon this happy occasion; and I ask that a very brief editorial from this morning's New York Times be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the editorial, as follows:

MR. HUGHES AT 78

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes is 78 today, but many people around Washington must be surprised to hear it. Judging from all reports, he still works as hard as ever. He has not missed a day in Court this term; his opinions show that he reasons with the same cogency as ever, and he continues in helping to guide the great institution that he heads with rare tact and statesmanlike judgment. That guidance will be needed in the years just ahead no less than in the past. To millions of Americans Mr. Justice Hughes peculiarly symbolizes the Supreme Court in his own figure. They wish him, both as man and symbol, long life and happiness.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Res. 265) authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to make studies of productivity and labor costs in industry, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 9016) to amend the joint resolution creating the Niagara Falls Bridge Commission, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. IV—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 692)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

One year ago the Congress directed the President to investigate the organization of the executive establishment and to submit plans for such transfers, consolidations, and abolitions of agencies as were found necessary and desirable.

Shortly thereafter I submitted Reorganization Plan No. I which improved the over-all management of the executive branch. This was followed by Reorganization Plan No. II which effected a better allocation of certain agencies and activities among departments. Although these two plans have been in effect less than a year, their benefits have already been gratifying. I have found the task of coordinating the work of the executive branch less difficult. Many improvements in service have occurred, and substantial economies have resulted.

Reorganization Plan No. III, recently submitted, is a third step which will improve intradepartmental management through internal adjustment in certain agencies.

I am now proposing a fourth reorganization plan which provides for a number of interdepartmental reorganizations. These changes are designed to increase efficiency in the administration of Government services by a more logical grouping of certain functions and by a further reduction in the number of independent agencies reporting directly to the Chief Executive.

Accordingly, I am transmitting herewith Reorganization Plan No. IV, which, after investigation, I have prepared in pursuance of section 4 of the Reorganization Act of 1939 (Public, No. 19, 76th Cong., 1st sess.) approved April 3, 1939; and I declare with respect to each reorganization made in this plan, that I have found such reorganization necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a) of the act:

1. To reduce expenditures.
2. To increase efficiency.
3. To consolidate agencies according to major purposes.
4. To reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions and by abolishing such as may not be necessary.
5. To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

The plan I now transmit I shall describe briefly as follows:

Department of State: The Dominican customs receivership is transferred to the Department of State from the Division of Territories and Island Possessions in the Department of the Interior. The State Department is the most appropriate agency to supervise this activity, which involves relations with a foreign government.

Treasury Department: The plan transfers to the Secretary of the Treasury the function of the Attorney General of approving out-of-court settlements—technically termed compromises—of cases arising under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act which have not, prior to compromise, been referred to the Department of Justice for prosecution. The present requirement that the Attorney General approve all compromises results in a cumbersome, time-consuming procedure which the small amounts involved do not warrant. The proposed handling will be simpler, less likely to cause delay, and consistent with the procedure now followed in compromises arising under other acts which the Treasury Department administers.

Department of Justice: Executive Order No. 6166, issued June 10, 1933, provided for the centralization of the disbursement function in a Division of Disbursement in the Treasury Department. The resulting increase in efficiency has amply demonstrated the wisdom of centralizing disbursement work. In effectuating the plan, however, I have found it necessary to postpone its application to United States marshals because of the unusual character of their disbursing work in serving the courts. Experience indicates that this arrangement should be continued. I am proposing, therefore, the permanent transfer of the disbursement function of United States marshals from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice.

Post Office Department: It has also been found desirable to continue permanently in the Post Office Department the disbursement of post-office funds. The special character of the work of this Department, involving disbursements in thousands of post offices throughout the Nation, requires here, as well as in the case of the United States marshals, a departure from the sound theory of central disbursing. With its far-flung facilities, the Post Office Department is better equipped to carry on this work than the Division of Disbursement.

Another proposal affecting the Post Office Department relates to the transportation of mail and other material between departments. In the early colonial days the interchange of correspondence and messages was by the simple hand-to-hand method. Gradually a more systematic device became necessary to transport messages, with the resultant evolution of the Postal Service. Business and private citizens in general have made use of that Service, and today we have in our Post Office Department the most efficient organization of its kind in the world. However, here in the Capital City the Federal Government, instead of utilizing fully the resources of the Post Office Department to maintain its mail and messenger service, has permitted a multiplicity of interdepartmental messenger services, each serving its own department, bureau, or agency. This duplication of services is uneconomical and results in a constant crisscrossing and overlapping of personnel and equipment, all engaged in a common activity. I am sure that the average citizen in Washington, as well as officials of the Government itself, have wondered at this paradox whereby the Federal Government is failing to make the fullest use of one of its own agencies which is specially equipped to render a simple, centralized service for all the other agencies. This reorganization plan proposes to do exactly that; to provide for the transportation of mail, documents, packages, and similar material between all buildings occupied by Government offices on a regularly scheduled basis of sufficient frequency to meet the reasonable and normal requirements of these offices and to reduce to a minimum the constant dispatching of messengers on so-called urgent and emergency errands. This service will be available on a reimbursement basis to the agencies exempted by the Reorganization Act.

Department of the Interior: I propose to transfer to the Department of the Interior the activities of the Soil Conservation Service relating to soil and moisture conservation on lands under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department. With respect to private lands, the soil-conservation work of the Federal Government is primarily of a consultative character and can best be carried on by the Department of Agriculture through cooperation of the farmers throughout the country. In the case of Federal lands, this work includes the actual application by the Government of soil-conservation practices and is an appropriate function of the agency administering the land.

Department of Commerce: One of the purposes of the Reorganization Act is to reduce the number of administrative agencies and thereby simplify the task of executive management. We have made substantial progress toward this objective under previous reorganization plans. I am now proposing another step in this direction by placing the Civil Aeronautics Authority within the framework of the Department of Commerce. Reorganization Plan No. III, which deals with intradepartmental changes, draws a more practical separation between the functions of the Administrator and the Civil Aeronautics Board. In plan IV, which is concerned with interdepartmental reorganization, I am bringing the Authority into the departmental structure. The Administrator will report to the Secretary of Commerce. The five-member board, however, will perform its rule-making, adjudicative, and investigative functions independent of the Department. In the interest of efficiency it will be supplied by the Department with budgeting, accounting, procurement, and other office services. As a result of the adjustments provided in plans III and IV, I believe the Civil Aeronautics Board will be able effectively to carry forward the important work of accident investigation heretofore performed by the Air Safety Board. In addition to the effective and coordinated discharge of accident-investigation work which this transfer will facilitate, economies in administration will be possible.

The importance of the Weather Bureau's functions to the Nation's commerce has also led to the decision to transfer this Bureau to the Department of Commerce. The development of the aviation industry has imposed upon the Weather Bureau a major responsibility in the field of air transportation. The transfer to the Department of Commerce, as provided in this plan, will permit better coordination of Government activities relating to aviation and to commerce generally, without in any way lessening the Bureau's contribution to agriculture.

Department of Labor: The plan transfers to the Secretary of Labor the functions of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior relating to the enforcement of the minimum-wage provisions in contracts for Federal construction. The Secretary of Labor is responsible by law for the determination of the prevailing wage rates included in Government contracts and should properly have complete responsibility for their enforcement.

United States Maritime Commission: I propose to transfer to the United States Maritime Commission the functions of the Secretary of the Navy relating to State marine and nautical schools. These schools are devoted to training young men for junior officer positions in the merchant marine. The general responsibility for developing facilities for the training of merchant-marine personnel is vested in the Maritime Commission. The proposed transfer will thus permit closer coordination of the nautical schools with the training work of the Maritime Commission.

Federal Security Agency: The Federal Security Agency has as its major purposes the promotion of social and economic security, educational opportunity, and the health of the citizens. The functions of St. Elizabeths Hospital, Freedmen's Hospital, Howard University, and Columbia Institution for the Deaf plainly come squarely within these purposes. Consequently, I find it necessary and desirable in pursuance of the objectives of the Reorganization Act to transfer to the Federal Security Agency the responsibilities of the interior Department relating to these institutions. The work of St. Elizabeths Hospital and Freedmen's Hospital is much more akin to the activities of the Public Health Service in the Federal Security Agency than to those of any other Federal establishment. Similarly, Howard University and Columbia Institution for the Deaf can derive more benefit from association with the Office of Education in the Federal Security Agency than with any other Federal organization.

I further propose to transfer to the Federal Security Agency the Food and Drug Administration with the exception of two activities intimately related to the work of the Department of Agriculture. The work of the Food and Drug Administration is unrelated to the basic functions of the Department of Agriculture. There was, however, no other agency to which these functions more appropriately belonged until the Federal Security Agency was created last year. I now believe that the opportunity for the Food and Drug Administration to develop along increasingly constructive lines lies in this new Agency. There is also need for coordination of certain of its functions with those of the Public Health Service. To accomplish these objectives, the plan establishes the Administration as a separate unit within the Federal Security Agency.

Economies: Functions may be transferred or consolidated under this Reorganization Act, but the abolition of functions is prohibited. Congress alone can curtail or abolish functions now provided by law. Savings must come from administrative expenses which comprise only a small fraction of Federal expenditures. This precludes the making of large reductions in expenditure through reorganization plans. The major achievements in reorganizations under this formula must inevitably be found in improved management and more effective service. However, some savings in administrative expenses will be possible under this plan. I estimate the immediate annual savings at approximately $300,000.

Future reorganization needs: The reorganization plans thus far submitted do not exhaust the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions that may be necessary and desirable. Some changes that now appear to have merit require further study. It is the responsibility of the President as Chief Executive to see that needed adjustments and improvements in administrative organization are made. But this he cannot adequately accomplish without proper statutory authority. The present Reorganization Act entirely exempts some 21 administrative agencies from consideration. Furthermore this act expires on January 20, 1941.

I strongly recommend the reenactment of the Reorganization Act, without exemptions. The structure and management of our Government, like the activities and services it performs, must be kept abreast of social and economic change.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 11, 1940.

REIMBURSEMENT OF COTTON COOPERATIVES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] that the pending bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCNARY. A parliamentary inquiry. Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon I prepared an amendment which I think should be satisfactory to the Senate; it certainly should be satisfactory to every member of the Senate who is a friend of the farmers. Under the bill it is proposed that a very large sum of money, about $4,355,000, be turned over to officials of the cooperatives. The farmers, who the officers of the cooperatives say, compose the cooperatives, have never been paid anything. They get what Creekmore calls "reserves." Reserves cannot be used as money unless they are put into the form of money and paid to the farmers. All the farmers have ever gotten out of the cotton cooperatives association has been an interest in so-called "reserves."

If anyone is entitled to any money from the Congress of the United States it is the farmers themselves, not those who have been milking the farmers and milking the Congress for the last 10 years.

I see the distinguished senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] in his place, where he usually is during sessions of the Senate. He had occasion to examine into the cooperatives some years ago—this matter has been pending a long time—and I wish to read from the report the distinguished Senator made after his examination. The report was made August 23, 1935. He stated:

> Another section of the report deals similarly, but more briefly, with the American Cotton Cooperative Association, Cotton Stabilization Corporation, and the 14 State cotton cooperatives—borrowers to whom the Farm Board made loans aggregating slightly over $409,000,000.
> But officers got that, farmers did not get it.
> It was in connection with these two groups of loans—involving, as they did, the major stabilization activities, and also involving the principal instances of sharp dealing with the Government—
>
> To which I referred Tuesday, and up to this time my statement has not been answered—
> Sharp dealing with the Government—
> A euphemistic way of saying what I stated a little more directly on Tuesday—> by cooperative organizations—that the most of the Board's losses occurred.

I am still reading from the report made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

> The losses were costly. The committee in its report has sought to summarize the Board's experiences in a manner most useful as a guide to future policy in financing farm marketing. The prominence which, accordingly, the report gives to the Board's losses and its unfortunate transactions, ought not to obscure the value of the assistance afforded by the revolving fund to scores of smaller-scale cooperatives which utilized it in good faith and punctiliously met their obligations.

Mr. President, this bill should not be passed, but if it is passed, the money should be paid to the farmers who produced the crops and lost enormous sums of money by the action of the cooperatives.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. If the bill proposed by the able Senator from Georgia should be enacted, and money were made available to the cooperatives, would not the farmers comprised in the cooperatives receive the payments which would be made under the appropriation when made?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Does the Senator mean the farmers comprising the cooperatives?

Mr. MCNARY. Yes.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Not a single dime of it. It is provided that the money shall go to pay the debts which the cooperative associations incurred through money borrowed several years ago and turned over to the central office of the A. C. C. A.

Mr. MCNARY. Will the Senator permit a further question?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. The basis for the proposed legislation is that the money was loaned to the cooperatives, which consisted of farmers, to bring about a withholding so as to fix the price of cotton at 16 cents a pound. That is the theory upon which this proposal rests, as I view it.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. MCNARY. The farmers who comprised the smaller cooperatives were working through this national organization.

Mr. MCKELLAR. That was the theory of it.

Mr. MCNARY. If this national organization, or the cooperatives, are released from this obligation, does it naturally have the effect to render free from the debt the farmers who composed the cooperatives? That is the point I am trying to get at.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The evidence is undisputed that no farmers can personally be held or have ever been personally held for any debt of the cooperatives. They are not liable at all. The only thing the farmers have gotten out of this thing is an advance on their cotton, at enormous rates of interest, when Creekmore and company got their money from the Government at almost nominal rates, such as one-eighth of 1 percent to three-eighths of 1 percent. Then when the Government withdrew its priority on cotton, Creekmore got money at the rate of 1 1/16 percent, and then later when the Congress cut him out of both of those means of getting money, he came back here and got the Farm Credit Administration to loan money not to the American Cotton Cooperative Association, but to the subsidiaries, nearly all which were in bankruptcy, with which to buy stock in the central organization, and to put up the stock as security for the loan; so that it is the central company which gets this money. That is the truth of the business.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. I am only in pursuit of knowledge in this matter, and I do not desire to enter into any controversy.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I am sure of that.

Mr. MCNARY. But is it not a fact that the growers or producers or makers of cotton in the South, however they may be termed, received 16 cents a pound for their cotton in the way of loans?

Mr. MCKELLAR. They received that when cotton was selling at 17½ cents a pound. Of course, they afterwards lost that equity, because cotton went down, and that ended it.

Mr. MCNARY. The purpose of the whole transaction was to prevent the falling of the price level?

Mr. MCKELLAR. But it did not do so.

Mr. MCNARY. I know it did not, but that was evidently the purpose of the transaction, and the farmers did receive a loan to the amount of 16 cents a pound.

Mr. MCKELLAR. But the Senator understands that those farmers belonged to the predecessor of this concern, the American Cotton Growers Exchange, which has no connection with this organization. The purpose is not to reimburse the officers of that old concern. It is not to reimburse the farmers who were connected with that concern. The purpose of the measure is to reimburse the officials of the A. C. C. A., which was formed in January and started operations in May or June 1930, after these transactions occurred in 1929.

Mr. McNARY. What I want to do is for a moment to dissociate the growers or the makers of the cotton from the organization.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senator can do that. Suppose the officers of this organization had said to the Senate, "We want you to pay our debts. We have been gambling in cotton; we have been working both the farmers and the Government for many years, and we find that we cannot pay the old debts, because everyone would be in bankruptcy if we paid the debts; we owe debts we cannot pay, and we want Congress to give us the money to pay those debts." If they had made such a request, it would not have been granted. But it was, no doubt, under the guise of being cooperatives, under the pretext that it would do something for farmers, that this bill was reported. I wish to say that the farmer is not taken care of in the slightest degree in this bill. I have an amendment which I propose to offer. I shall probably withdraw my motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Claims, because if we are going to make a gift—and that is what it will be if the bill shall pass—I want the money to go to the farmers who actually compose the cooperatives. Therefore, I want my amendment to be adopted.

I hope the Senator will vote for the amendment, for I know the Senator, like many others of us, is a lifelong friend of the farmers. He has been on the side of the farmers ever since I have been here, and if he fails to vote for my amendment, which gives the money to the farmers themselves, and makes it certain that the farmers themselves will get this gift from the Government, it will be the first farmers' bill the Senator has failed to vote for since I have been here.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator for his kind words. I do not think the Senator is following the course that will be indicated by my question. Is it not true that the farmers, or makers of cotton, received 16 cents a pound, and that they are members of cooperatives?

Mr. McKELLAR. They were members of preceding cooperatives, not the present cooperatives.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator bear with me please for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Is it not also true that the money was paid out of the Treasury to the cotton growers, through the cotton cooperative agencies, so that it would prevent a fall in the price level?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. However, after the cotton was withheld by the growers from the market, the price fell, and a loss was sustained?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; an enormous loss; $139,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. And the reason the farmers withheld the cotton from sale was because of an implied obligation on the part of the Government that they would be reimbursed for any losses they sustained. Is that the philosophy of this transaction?

Mr. McKELLAR. No, it is not, so far as the cooperative officials are concerned, for this reason: The cooperative officials, the best lobbyists in the world, lobbied with the Farm Board in 1929, and got the Farm Board to make the 16-cent loan on cotton, and after full settlement with the Government, and after the Government lost $139,000,000, they now want to reopen that settlement and get an additional amount of a little more than four and a quarter million dollars.

Mr. President, I wish to speak a few minutes for the cotton farmers of my section of the country. I am going to follow a somewhat unusual procedure. I am going to speak from a text, and that text is taken from Matthew 25, twenty-ninth verse:

For unto everyone that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

Abundance. Every one of these lobbyists who are here has abundance. Mr. Creekmore gets a salary of $35,000 a year. Every one of the members on his board of directors—because that is all it is—gets, I believe, from $6,000 to $8,000. I know some get $6,000 a year, and in many places in this country $6,000 a year is abundance. But the small farmer, the poor Negro who borrows from the seed loan office, or the poor white man who does not want to go on relief, and who borrows from the seed loan office, and pays back the loan by toil and sweat behind the plow and working with the hoe, was deprived by these men, as I showed 2 days ago, of two-fifths of the value of the cotton because of the extraordinary rates charged the poor borrowers.

The importance of this matter is so great I want to read again what those charges were. They are remarkable charges.

Let me read the charges on one bale of cotton. Oh, think of the poor sharecropper in my section of the country. Think of the colored sharecropper, who does not want to go on relief, the white sharecropper who does not want to go on relief, the white renter, or the colored renter, who does not want to go on relief. He wants to live an independent and honest life. Creekmore and his associates sneak up here and get the Farm Credit Administration to require the cotton to be sold through the A. C. C. A. or one of its affiliates. These are the charges on one bale of cotton:

Gross proceeds, $51.31.

Previous cash advance, $5.59.

That item has never been explained, but I believe it to be a commission.

Interest on cash advanced, 60 cents.

Insurance, $1.30.

Charges other than seasonal charges, $1.40.

No one knows what that is.

Storage, $4.55.

Membership fee, $5.

These great merchants, Creekmore and company, sailing under the false colors of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, charged the poor, hard-working Negro in Tennessee, Mississippi, or Arkansas $5 for being a member. They would not take his cotton unless he signed an agreement to be a member. The farmer was charged 50 cents for a farm publication. Of course, that farm publication was gotten up at Government expense. The United States Government paid for it; the taxpayers paid for it. The colored man might not have been able to read, but, just the same, he had to pay "four bits," as we call it down South, for that paper. He may never have read it. I doubt whether he was interested in it, but it was charged up against the cotton, and he had to pay $19.34 charges out of the proceeds of $51.31 for one bale of cotton.

These figures were taken from the seed-loan office. That practice was followed every day. It has not been denied. It cannot be denied, because the head of one of the associations paid for the cotton.

Is the Senate going to stand for such practices? The poor farmers have nothing, and we are permitting a great, rich organization, the head of which received $75,000 a year until the Congress stopped it, to take away what they have. It is for that reason that I quoted the statement of the Holy Saviour of mankind, who knew human nature as no other person in the world ever did:

For unto everyone that hath shall be given—

We are giving to this rich merchandising organization, not a cooperative at all—and he shall have abundance—

We are going to see that he has abundance. We do not give every cotton firm, every wheat firm, or any other firm, nearly four and a half million dollars every day. This is money—but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

Mr. President, it was for that reason that I offered an amendment to the bill. I shall read the amendment. I pray those who feel kindly toward the farmers, those who know what they have to undergo, and what their trials and troubles have been for the past 10 years, to listen to the amendment. It does not give them riches, but it gives them a pittance. My God, what a boon it would be to the farmers in these hard times.

The cooperative officers are lobbying here every day, and have been lobbying all the time for years. They are constantly after the Congress or after the Department to give them something—"give me, give me, give me." They have not done any work. I propose to give this money, not to the lobbyists, but to the dirt farmers. My amendment is in the nature of a substitute, and provides—

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,355,141.40, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture—

I am turning it over to Mr. Wallace—for making payments as hereinafter provided to members of the cotton cooperative associations designated in section 2, who are also farmers engaged in producing cotton.

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to ascertain in such manner as he deems most appropriate the names of the persons who are, on the date of enactment of this act, farmers engaged in producing cotton and members of any of the following associations: Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association, successor to Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton Association; California Cotton Cooperative Association; Georgia Cotton Growers' Cooperative Association; Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association; Mid-South Cotton Growers' Association, successor to Arkansas Cotton Growers' Cooperative Association and Tennessee Cotton Growers' Association; Mississippi Cooperative Cotton Association; North Carolina Cotton Growers' Cooperative Association; Oklahoma Cotton Growers' Association; South Carolina Cotton Cooperative Association; Staple Cotton Cooperative Association, Mississippi; Texas Cotton Growers' Association; Texas Cotton Cooperative Association; Southwestern Irrigated Cotton Growers' Association.

I give the names of the associations just as they are in the bill, beginning with the Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association and going down the list. I include the Mississippi Cooperative Cotton Association, which is a long-staple association, but having no connection with the cooperatives, concerning which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] introduced an amendment yesterday.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. How many farmers are represented by that list?

Mr. McKELLAR. The cooperatives testified that altogether there were about 250,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator's plan is to divide the money——

Mr. McKELLAR. To divide the money among the farmers, instead of giving it to those who have an abundance.

It was stated on the floor the other day that the A. C. C. A. had over $6,000,000 in assets. I am not advised as to that. I do not know where the information came from.

Why should we give this money to the A. C. C. A.? If the A. C. C. A. receives the money, it will go into the pockets of the officials. Why should we give it to them? Why should we not give it to the farmers themselves? In subparagraph (b) of section 2, I propose to do it:

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to pay to each person who is shown to his satisfaction to be, on the date of enactment of this act, a farmer engaged in producing cotton and a member of any of such associations, an equal part of the money appropriated pursuant to the first section of this act.

That will give every one of these poor devils between $15 and $20 each, one of the greatest possible boons to the poor farmer who has been robbed for these many years. It will not reimburse the poor devils sweating, plowing, and hoeing from early morn to dewy eve, who made loans from the seed-loan office. It will not reimburse them, because the cooperatives charged them an average of about $19 apiece in commissions, fees, subscriptions to newspapers, and various other things with the consent of the Farm Credit Administration. They would not be reimbursed for all that. Surely we might give the farmers this money, however, instead of giving it to the others.

No such payment shall be made to any officer of any such association, or to any cotton merchant, unless he is a farmer engaged in producing cotton. In the event that any person entitled to a payment under this act dies before receiving such payment, the Secretary is authorized to make such payment to such person as he deems to be entitled thereto.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and pursuant to an estimate submitted in accordance with law, such sum as may be necessary for the administration of this act. In the administration of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall not utilize the services of any cotton cooperative association or any cotton merchant or the Farm Credit Administration or the Commodity Credit Corporation, except for the purpose of obtaining information from them.

In other words, if this amendment should be adopted, it would mean that the money would go to the farmers themselves. We are about to make a gift. We are about to give somebody four and a half million dollars. It seems that the Senate is determined to get rid of that much money. It will go to somebody. The question is, Shall it go to those who have been in control of these associations all the time, drawing rich salaries from the Government of the United States, or shall we give it to those who need it and who are justly and honestly entitled to it? All they ever got was what was called reserves. Reserves will not buy meal, flour, meat, coffee, or sugar.

A poor farmer has to have something else besides reserves with which to buy. So if the Senate adopts this amendment, it will be one time when we can say that we have not subtracted that from him that hath not, and from him that hath not we have not taken away even that which he hath.

Mr. President, there is an old Negro spiritual, which my friend, the distinguished junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], with his beautiful tenor voice, I have no doubt has often sung. I am not a singer and I cannot sing it. If I thought he remembered the spiritual, I would ask him to stand up and sing it at this time:

Everybody talkin' 'bout heaven ain't goin' there
Heaven, heaven, heaven!
Everybody talkin' 'bout heaven ain't goin' there.

I have been in the Senate for 23 years. I have heard Senator after Senator, practically all of them, talking about farmers, talking about the dirt farmers, talking about those who toil and sweat to make their living out of the ground, but it is not everybody who talks about the farmer who is willing to do anything.

Farmers, farmers, farmers.

Everybody talking about farmers is not for them.

I propose by this amendment today to see who in the United States Senate are the friends of the dirt farmers, the friends of those who toil and sweat for their living. I am wondering how many of them there are in the Senate. I wonder how many will join me when making this gift to give it to those who are justly entitled to it, if anybody is. I do not know that anybody is, but if we are determined to give $4,322,000, if I recall the amount correctly, to somebody, do not let us give it to those who are well to do, who put up in the best hotels when they come to Washington. These men have been coming here regularly, lobbying with Congress ever since 1930. I do not know whether any of them are farmers or not. They have been farming the Congress; they have been farming the farmer; but whether any of them work the ground, I do not know.

Whom are we here for? Are we to turn over the taxpayers' money to these men who are lobbyists and are probably sitting in the Senate galleries today, as they were the other day? Is it right? What right have we, as representatives of the people of the United States, to deal out $4,322,000 cash to men whose principal business is lobbying here in the Congress and mulcting the cotton farmers of the South, as I have already shown, by enormous charges?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has made reference to one of the most beautiful of all the southern colored folklore songs.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have, and I have enjoyed it every time I have listened to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like very much to vote the relief the cotton farmers and tobacco farmers of our country are entitled to have. I wish to ask the Senator if he recalls the other words of that song? Some of our people in that section, some of the colored people in the southern section who are tenant farmers do not expect much here but look to the hereafter. In the words of that song—

I got shoes; you got shoes; all God's chill'un got shoes.
And when we get to heaven we're goin' to put on shoes.

They did not expect them here; they expected them hereafter; and they said, "When we get to heaven we're going to put on shoes and we're going to walk all over God's heaven."

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. No more beautiful song was ever written, in my humble judgment. I am not an expert on songs or music, as is my distinguished friend from Kentucky, but I love that kind of music; nothing ever gave me more pleasure than to hear the spirituals sung, and I am struck by that particular verse which the Senator recites—

I got shoes, you got shoes, all God's chill'un got shoes—

But not here.

Mr. CHANDLER. "When you get to heaven"——

Mr. McKELLAR. But "when you get to heaven."

Mr. CHANDLER. "You are goin' to put on shoes."

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the people who were singing that song and have sung it so often were borrowers from the cooperative association that imposed on them all these enormous charges.

Oh, Senators, I do not know how many of you have ever worked with your hands; I do not know how many of you have plowed behind a horse or a mule; I do not know how many of you have ever taken the cradle, as we call it, but which is a large scythe, and cut the oats and the wheat. I do not know how many of you have taken the hoe and followed it day after day to get the grass out of the cotton or the corn; I do not know how many of you have had that experience, but it is a hard experience to those who have undergone it; it is a hard life.

Think of the poor Negro—I will say "the poor Negro" because the Negroes of my community borrowed much from the seed-loan office. One of them may borrow $40 to make a crop in order to to feed his family, or he may borrow $50. The law prohibits him from borrowing over $200. Think of it! Two hundred dollars, to take the highest amount, for a man and his family. What a horrid life it must be to live for a whole year on $200 cash; that is all that he has in cash. He has that with which to make his crop, to buy his coarse food, to buy his cornmeal, to buy his side meat, to buy his molasses, and occasionally, perhaps once a month, to buy a little coffee, and probably, if he has the money, to buy a little sugar to put into the coffee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED. There is one part of the bill in section 5, on page 6, which attracts my interest. It reads as follows:

SEC. 5. If any of the original cotton cooperative associations that participated in said loans shall have ceased to exist or shall be in receivership, then the sums to which it and its members would otherwise be entitled under this act—

This is the part to which I particularly call attention—shall be paid to the cotton cooperative association now doing business in said State.

It does not say "the successor in interest."

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. The big fellows could not get the money if it was phrased in that way. Mr. Creekmore, who was getting $35,000 a year, could not get the money if the language were not written as it is.

Mr. REED. If the distinguished Senator from Tennessee will indulge me——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will.

Mr. REED. I was in a committee hearing all day, day before yesterday, and, therefore, was not privileged to listen to the debate. I am wondering about this language and I shall afterward ask the distinguished Senator from Alabama concerning it. It strikes me as being about as loose as any language I have ever seen written in a bill presented to the Senate during my short membership. In other words, if there were cotton cooperatives doing business back in the Farm Board days, and they have disappeared, any money due them shall all be paid to the cotton cooperative associations, regardless of the fact, if I correctly understand the language——

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does.

Mr. REED. Regardless of whether the present cooperative is a successor in interest or whether the members of the present cooperative are the same as of the previous cooperative.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is so.

Mr. REED. I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee if my doubts are justified?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think they are not only justified but I think they are verified. I think the Senator by merely stating the case has shown that the purpose of that section is to give to a man by the name of E. F. Creekmore, the principal lobbyist in this matter, a merchant of New Orleans who is buying and selling cotton, a million and a half dollars, and he will do with it—the Senator has a pair of eyeglasses in his hand—he will do with it just what he pleases, as the Senator will do what he pleases with the glasses he has in his hand. Creekmore has absolute control of the entire cooperative situation.

Mr. REED. Really, so far as my State is concerned, it has no interest in this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it does not have; the Senator's State does not make cotton. I am surprised that Creekmore and his associates did not come to the Senator to get him to introduce a cotton bill. They first got the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to introduce a bill.

Mr. REED. But I am certainly surprised to find in a bill of this nature a section of the character I have described, which passes benefits, the payment of which might or might not have been justified, to some former association, to an association now existing, regardless of whether or not the present cooperative association is a successor in interest and regardless of whether or not the membership of the present cooperative association is similar to or has any relation to the membership of the former association.

In time I shall ask the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], for whom I have a very high regard, to explain that section, because to me it is an impossible thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I do not lose my place on the floor, I will yield to let the Senator from Kansas ask the Senator from Alabama that question at this time.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Tennessee will be good enough——

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield at this time.

Mr. REED. I have no desire to take him off the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will get it again.

Mr. REED. I desire to have that provision explained, if the Senator from Alabama will be good enough to do so. It is certainly an extraordinary provision from the point of view of my legislative experience.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I recognize the viewpoint of the Senator, but I am sure he never before dealt with legislation which covered cooperative associations.

Under the law which authorized the organization of associations, and by which the Federal Government is authorized under certain conditions to encourage them by assistance and financial aid, the cooperatives are not profit-earning corporate entities. They are more like churches in their membership and in their organization. They are service organizations rather than primarily profit-earning organizations.

The members of cooperatives come and go. This is not peculiar to cotton; the same thing is true of grain cooperatives, of tobacco cooperatives, of dairy cooperatives, and in all the fields of agricultural cooperation. Members remain in the association for a time, because they are seeking certain services. They may fail to pay their dues and drop out, and others come in, but still the association itself goes on in its field of activity, in its field of service to the farmers engaged in the production of the commodity which the particular cooperative is serving.

I do not criticise the Farm Board. I think, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] said, they did a good job. I may have more to say about that matter later. These activities were tremendously helpful to the cotton growers, and to the grain growers, and to others to whom price stabilization was of pecuniary value. The cotton-loan plan of 16 cents a pound was put into operation when cotton was selling at 17½ cents a pound. It was put in operation to prevent a collapse in the price and to encourage the public. The Farm Board announced that they figured that 16 cents was a fair price for cotton under the price conditions and other conditions which prevailed at that time. When they put in the loan, as I say, cotton was selling for 17½ cents a pound, and for some months it continued above the loan price. The Farm Board were authorized to make loans only to cooperatives. They wanted to help the producers in the matter of price, so they had to arrange with the cooperatives to make the loans directly to the farmers on their cotton, or wheat, or whatever commodity went into the loan. They made the loans to the cooperatives, not to the American Cotton Cooperative Association.

All the argument the Senator has heard here has referred to the national association, but these transactions were conducted by the various State cotton cooperative associations. There are no members of the national association. It is simply a representative of the various State organizations. All the State cotton cooperative associations together make up the American Cotton Cooperative Association. The membership is in the State associations; so the members of the State associations got the benefit of the maintenance of the price of cotton and its stabilization.

Finally, as stated, the price went below the point of 16 cents, after most of the crop had been sold. It went down and continued to go down, as the prices of everything else in the country continued to go down in the year 1930. These transactions, for the most part, were in 1929–30. Some of them were in 1930–31, but most of them were in 1929–30. As the price continued to go down, the loan being 16 cents a pound, the cotton was held by the cooperative associations of the members who had put it into the loan; and when the price went down the cotton could not be sold for sufficient to pay the loan to the Federal Farm Board; so settlement day came, and settlement was made.

The reserves which had been accumulated—the profits, so to speak—of the various State cotton cooperative associations, as a result of their experiences up to that time in the cooperative field, aggregated $2,600,000. We had had these cooperatives for many years before the Farm Board was organized. They had accumulated these reserves. That amount was insufficient to pay the loan to the Federal Farm Board; so the Federal Farm Board had organized what is called the Cotton Stabilization Corporation, which took over all of the cotton under the loans, and then a settlement was made under which the entire reserves of $2,600,000—all the available assets of all the State cooperative associations—were taken over by the Federal Farm Board; and in addition to taking over all their assets a balance of $1,700,000 was still due by the State cooperatives to the Federal Farm Board under that settlement. So the cooperative associations gave their notes for the balance of $1,700,000, cleaned it up, wiped it off, gave their notes, reorganized, and started over in the same field of service to the farmer. Of that amount of $1,700,000, up to this time, they have actually paid back $1,100,000, representing losses they had sustained in cooperation with the Federal Farm Board in carrying out the loan program as authorized by the Federal Farm Board, and under the request of the Federal Farm Board not to sell the cotton because they did not want to dump more cotton on the market, and thereby further depress the price.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I take it that the later payments to which the Senator refers were made either by the original cooperative association or by its successor in interest.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Their successors in interest, the State organizations; yes.

Mr. REED. Very well. What I am trying to get at from the distinguished Senator from Alabama, whose friendship for agriculture is unquestioned, as I hope my own is——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure of that; I so recognize the Senator.

Mr. REED. What I am unable to conceive is, why payment should be made to any cooperative association that is not a successor in interest, that has assumed none of the responsibilities of the original cooperatives, that has paid nothing upon the debt of the original cooperatives, whose membership may be partially different, or—taking an extreme illustration—wholly different than the membership of the original association.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will state to the Senator that if it is a matter of legal title, he is correct, because there is no other privity in property ownership; but, as I have stated to the Senator, these cooperatives are service organizations which are encouraged by the Government for the service they render to the producers of the commodity they represent. When the Federal Farm Board wiped out the assets of a cooperative in a State, they left the members who belonged to it with that loss. In equity and good conscience, why can they not reorganize and start over in the same field of effort without being deprived of the money represented by the losses to which they have been subjected? In the service they render, they need money. They have to have money. In effect, it belongs to the same people. They do not expect to get dividends from profits and things of that sort. They profit through the cooperative movement, through the services which are rendered to them by their cooperative association.

Mr. REED. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama that, while I have never had any experience with cotton cooperatives, I have had a fairly wide experience with wheat cooperatives. I have seen many of them go into bankruptcy and disappear. It never would have occurred to me that a sum which in equity, if not in law, might possibly be due the original cooperative, should, 10 years later, be paid to a cooperative which had no connection with the original one, which had assumed no liability, which was not a successor in interest, and whose membership—I am now applying this to wheat cooperatives——

Mr. BANKHEAD. The same situation exists as to the wheat cooperatives. They are not going back and trying to pay the money to individuals. In cases where they were bankrupted by this program, their successors have gone right along, because in effect it is the same entity.

Mr. REED. If I ever see a bill, while I am a member of the Senate, relating to wheat cooperatives which proposes to do what section 5 of the pending bill proposes to do, that is, to give money to people who are not successors in interest, who have assumed no responsibility, who have no liability depending upon them, whose membership may be entirely different, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if I may explain one matter to the Senator about the wheat cooperatives; the wheat people had a bill here. They evidently have not as good a lobby as the cotton people have, because they had a bill passed which provided that every claim against the Government for losses should be referred to the Court of Claims. I should be perfectly willing to have a bill go through instantly referring this matter to the Court of Claims, taking the same position Congress took about the claim of the wheat cooperatives. I am perfectly willing, if they have a claim of any kind or description, to have it go to the Court of Claims, where it could be handled.

But that is not what the pending bill provides. The bill gives credit to the cooperative associations—and they are all one, as I shall show the Senator in a moment—for about three and a quarter million dollars, and under section 5 or section 6 the remaining money is to be used in another way. The Senator is entirely correct; there is no successorship; there is no connection between the American Cotton Growers' Exchange, which lost the money, if anyone lost it, and the present American Cotton Cooperative Association. There is no legal connection; there is no successorship. The only thing they have in common is that they both claim to be for the farmers. But they were working the farmers and the Government at the same time; they were working both sides of the street. As I have shown, by their exorbitant fees they worked the farmers. They worked the farmers by getting the money from the Government under an old law at from one-eighth of 1 percent to 1⅛ percent, and lending it to their middlemen, so to speak, their State associations, at a profit of 2 percent, and then the local associations charged the farmer 2 percent more. So the farmer paid 6 percent, or about 6 percent. They worked him in that way. They worked him by sampling his cotton, by reconcentrating his cotton all over the country at high prices.

It was stated day before yesterday that the reconcentration was done upon bids. The proof shows that there were bids for reconcentrating that cotton, and that John M. Parker & Co., a firm of New Orleans, offered to do it for 40 cents a bale, but the Department let it out at 48 cents a bale at first and 45 cents a bale afterward. A warehouse firm in Memphis, Tenn., offered to do it for nothing, but the Farm Credit Association was so enraptured with Mr. Creekmore that Mr. Creekmore got the job at 43 cents a bale.

Mr. REED. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama that I rose to inquire about this particular section because it so happens that during the period with which the bill deals I happened to be Governor of Kansas. The wheat farmer was suffering from a diminution in price similar to the decline in the price of cotton, and it so happened that many of the cooperatives came to me while I was Governor to discuss their situation. I did what I could to help them. I worked with the Farm Board as much as I could, and some of the wheat cooperatives of the days of 1929 and 1930 have entirely disappeared. It never would occur to me that if the cooperatives of those days, because of some transaction with the Farm Board, might have not a legal claim but some equity, that equity should now be transferred to a present-day cooperative, which might have been organized since that time, and whose membership might be wholly different, and there be no succession in interest and no liability or responsibility assumed by the later cooperative.

If I may be permitted to say it without offense to my very good friend the Senator from Alabama, I think section 5 of the bill is a most extraordinary section. It sets up a very unsound precedent. I am not now discussing the merit or lack of merit of the other provisions of the bill, but I do not believe section 5 can be adopted by the Senate without creating an unsound precedent which in the future might rise many times to haunt us.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I had in mind to ask the Senator from Tennessee or the Senator from Alabama for an explanation of another provision of section 5 which was not referred to by the Senator from Kansas and which I do not understand. It provides that the sums "shall be paid to the cotton cooperative association now doing business in said State, less the amount, if any, of the unpaid obligations of such original associations to the United States."

I am ignorant of cooperatives, and I do not know what obligations they owed to the United States or whether they should be deducted, whether this money should come back to the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very happy to explain that to the Senator. When Congress broke up the practice of lending money at one-eighth to 1⅛ percent interest, at which rates the money was borrowed originally, and when the custom of lending money to the individual associations at a 2-percent increase obtained, and then the individual association charged from 5 to 6 percent for the money which they got for one-eighth of 1 percent—when that was broken up, Creekmore and company, which is a big company dealing in cotton, just as much of a company as Weil & Co. or McFadden & Co., of Philadelphia, also cotton dealers, they did not like it.

These lobbyists, these gentlemen who are getting this bill through did not like it, so they came here. They seemed to have some undue influence over the Farm Credit Administration, and they went to that Administration and got them to do what I believe was an illegal act. They got the Farm Credit Administration to waive the Government's prior lien on this cotton, so that they could go to the Chase National Bank, I think it was, and some other banks in New York—I may not name the right ones, but they were very large institutions in New York—they went to them with the waiver of the prior lien on the cotton and borrowed money at 1⅛ percent, or 1.65 percent. Then they continued to operate with that cheap money. They made a tremendous amount of interest, lending the money at 4 percent to the subordinates, and the subordinates lending it to the poor farmer, for whom they claimed such affection. I think in some cases the farmers got it for as little as 5 percent, but the ordinary rate was 6 percent.

When that was found out, the practice was broken up. I protested against that practice to the Farm Board and said I thought it was perfectly outrageous and illegal. By the way, that was done for 2 years before we found it out. When we found it out, we protested against it, and the Farm Board said it could not continue to waive the prior liens. That left the cooperative associations—and I shall refer later to the closeness with which they acted—without money, and they had to have money.

Mr. President, this man Creekmore has more schemes in his head than any man I ever knew. Turn him down one day, and he will turn up the next day or a few days later with a scheme to get money from the Government or through Government influence. After the waiver of prior liens was broken up he evolved this plan. All his State affiliates were either in the hands of a receiver or had just been in the hands of a receiver. To use a common expression, they were all busted financially. One or two of them may have had a little property, but I doubt if all of them had as much as $100,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Did the cooperatives go through bankruptcy?

Mr. McKELLAR. All the State cooperatives; yes.

Mr. ADAMS. That is, those that are named in the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; those that are named in the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. And they were in that way liquidated?

Mr. McKELLAR. They were liquidated; yes. All the cooperatives went through bankruptcy except one. I must say that the Mississippi concern, which was left out, did not go through bankruptcy.

Mr. ADAMS. How much did the operations of the Farm Board in connection with the stabilization of the cotton price cost the Federal Government?

Mr. McKELLAR. About $207,000,000; that is all.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not cheap money; it is free money, I gather, which is being reached for now.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is free money. There are no strings on it. It is not necessary to go to a court to obtain it.

Mr. HUGHES. But, Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to answer the question asked me by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the statement just made is not correct. I think the Senator wishes to make a correct statement.

Mr. HUGHES. When the Senator said that these people could go down to the Treasury and get this money——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will show you how it is obtained.

Mr. HUGHES. Would it be deducted?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes. I will give the Senator the deductions.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator tell us how much would be deducted by the Government? Under the bill a part of the appropriation would come back to the Government, less the amount, if any, of the unpaid obligations of such original associations to the United States, and that is the question I had in mind. I myself do not understand these things.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from Tennessee would answer that question and not wander all over creation to get to the point——

Mr. McKELLAR. I regret that I am unable properly or intelligently to express myself. It may be that I am not. I do not know. But I am going to answer the Senator's question just the same.

When Creekmore found that he was without the means of borrowing this cheap money, he went to these bankrupt affiliates of his—bankrupt in all the States perhaps except one—and got them to come up here to the Farm Board. Of course, he brought them up. He took them right along with him. He got them to borrow certain sums, which are set out fully in the report, and I shall give the sums which he got his affiliates to borrow. They are set out on page 20 of the report which I hold in my hand.

The Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association, which has gone through bankruptcy, borrowed $400,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am advised the Alabama association has never been in bankruptcy.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken. I will give the Senator the book and page with respect to that matter. I will find it for him.

The Brazos Valley Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed $425,000. The California Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed $175,000. The Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed $800,000. The Mid-South Cotton Growers Association, which is in Memphis, Tenn., borrowed $800,000. The Oklahoma Cotton Growers Association, which went into bankruptcy twice, borrowed $500,000. The South Carolina Cotton Growers Association went through bankruptcy. It borrowed $200,000. The South Texas Cotton Growers Association borrowed $200,000. Southwestern Irrigated Cotton Growers borrowed $200,000. The West Texas Cotton Growers Association borrowed $500,000. Which makes in round figures $5,000,000.

Mind you, the affiliates borrowed the money, but who got it? Creekmore got it. They gave their note to the Government for these several sums aggregating $5,000,000, and what security did they have? They had as security the stock of the A. C. C. A.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another interruption?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I am rather inclined to follow the Senator's argument as to these cooperatives, but I am wondering now as to the substitute which the Senator proposes to offer. It seems to me that the same line of argument which would deny the bill as it stands would eliminate the substitute which the Senator offers.

Mr. McKELLAR. The same line of argument does; but I say that if the Senate has made up its mind to make a gift to these persons who have been despoiling the farmers for all these years, in Heaven's name let us make it to the farmers themselves, so those who have been despoiled can get some benefit.

Mr. ADAMS. Would it not be better to lay down some sort of formula?

Mr. McKELLAR. We can do it by adopting my amendment.

I now wish to answer the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES]. These organizations all owe this sum of money to the Government today. They have not paid it back. They have paid a few thousand dollars on it. The Government still holds the stock of the A. C. C. A. and the obligations of its affiliates.

What does the bill propose to do? It proposes to give a credit on the Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association's debt, which borrowed $400,000. It is to pay the Government $412,097. In other words, it is to pay the Government the principal and the interest on the money that the Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed from the Farm Credit Administration, or the Government, and turn it over to the American Cotton Cooperative Association, the central organization. That is, principal and interest.

The California Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed $132,000, and has paid back some money. But the bill provides that $29,938 is to be credited for that concern.

The Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed $800,000, and they are given a credit of $290,522.38.

The Mid-South Cotton Growers' Association borrowed $800,000, and they are given a credit of $110,121.

The Mississippi Cooperative Cotton Association borrowed $800,000. When the proof in this case was taken, all the concerns except one admitted they were in bankruptcy. The South Carolina Cotton Cooperative Association had been through bankruptcy.

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. They said so. I do not know. The Senator from South Carolina says no. All I know is that the witnesses testified that it had been through bankruptcy, and I assume the witnesses were telling the truth until the Senator shows otherwise.

Mr. SMITH. I may tell the Senator from Tennessee that, according to my information, only one of the State cooperatives went into bankruptcy, and that was the one in the State of Georgia. That was the only one that I know of that went into bankruptcy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me give the Senator the facts. The Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association had been wound up in a receivership. Receivership and bankruptcy are generally comparable terms. There is not much difference between them.

Mr. HUGHES. They are equally serious.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are equally serious. A concern is in bad condition when it goes into receivership or bankruptcy. A receivership action takes place in the State court; a bankruptcy proceeding takes place in the Federal court. That is the principal difference between the two procedures. The organizations are in bankruptcy.

The Brazos Valley Cotton Cooperative Association had no assets of any kind, and the officers of that concern so testified in the record, volume 1, page 356.

As to the California Cotton Cooperative Association, there was no proof at all.

The Georgia Cotton Producers Association was at the time being wound up in a receivership.

There was no evidence at all about the Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association.

The predecessors, so-called, of the Mid-South Cotton Growers Association, were the Tennessee Cotton Cooperative Association, the Arkansas Cotton Growers Association, and the Southeast Missouri Cotton Association. All three had failed and gone into bankruptcy. Mr. Henry, of Fort Smith, Ark., I believe it was, got the officers of those three associations to come and form the Mid-South Cotton Growers Association.

The Mid-South Association has been a successful concern. I say "successful." The Mid-South was the one which charged the Negro farmers and the poor white farmers two-fifths of their cotton as commission, and probably that is the way it succeeded. It bought one of the principal corners in the city of Memphis. Let us see how much we are giving to that particular concern, the Mid-South. We are giving them a very modest sum. Poor Henry! I am just as sorry for him as I can be. He is getting only $110,000 by this bill as a gift. Charging enormous fees—two-fifths of the cotton as fees, commissions, and charges—he has bought one of the principal corners in the city of Memphis and built a stone office building, which is absolutely free from debt. Every cent of the purchase price came out of the farmers or the United States Government. That is what we are doing when we pass such bills giving away money.

The Mississippi Cotton Cooperative Association is supposed to be a going concern, but it would not disclose its assets. The Oklahoma Cotton Growers' Association had been twice wound up in bankruptcy, and then the Government reinstated it and sold it to another concern; and the Commodity Credit Corporation allowed that concern, which had twice been in bankruptcy, to borrow half a million dollars from it. Senators, it is wrong for us to give money to such persons.

The facts with respect to several of the associations were not disclosed. I told the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] I would give him the book and page with respect to the South Carolina association. It is volume 1, page 151. Let us see what the record shows. The witness was Dr. R. O. McCutcheon.

Q. How many directors do you have in South Carolina?
A. We have 10.
Q. Ten?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you have been on [the board] ever since you were elected?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. All of that time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Your organization failed one time, did it not?
A. Well, yes, sir; the Farm Board failed us.

It did. The Farm Board failed. When the Farm Board failed, every one of the cooperative associations went into bankruptcy. They could not pay the debts which Creekmore had them contract with the Government; and a portion of the money we are about to appropriate is going to pay those debts. The other portion will get to Creekmore before it is over.

I think I have answered the question of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES]?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will find the answer on page 6 of the report of the committee reporting the bill.

Mr. President, I was interrupted a while ago when I was talking about something which has very deeply touched my heart. Many years ago, when our farmers were so poor, I joined my distinguished friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]—he was the leader—in doing one of the most humane things ever done by the Congress. It has been fought by the Farm Credit Administration and by the Department of Agriculture from the very beginning; and every effort in the world has been made to abolish the seed-loan office. As the Senator knows, time after time, year after year, the Budget Bureau has failed to make any recommendation for the appropriation of any money to lend to indigent farmers who were honest and who wanted to work to pay their debts. To my knowledge, beginning more than 10 years ago, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] introduced a bill authorizing the appropriation of four or five million dollars.

Mr. SMITH. Fifty million dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. The first bill was for $50,000,000; but with the opposition of the Department constantly against us, the last one we got through was for about $5,000,000. That money has been loaned out to indigent farmers who could not otherwise make a crop. It was loaned to poor farmers who were either sharecroppers or renters and who wanted to make a crop, but had to borrow some money on which to make it. They had to live while they were making a crop. We had a very active office in Memphis, Tenn., and we still have that office. The Senator from South Carolina has had many honors conferred upon him, but he never did a nobler or better thing than when he stood on the floor of the Senate and undertook to help this class of our citizens down South. I think probably most of them were colored men who were not afraid to work but who did not have the means to live on while they made a crop.

I wish to say something else about the success of the seed-loan office. On the average, borrowers have paid back to the Government about 97 percent of everything they borrowed, together with interest. I stated the other day—and I repeat it today—that one would think that the cooperatives, getting the rich pickings from the Government that they have been constantly getting all these years, would have kept their slimy hands off poor, defenseless, poverty-stricken people of that kind. Did they do it? Oh, no. They came to Washington and got a direction from the Farm Credit Administration to the head of the seed-loan office that the cotton should be sold only to the cooperatives. Think of the Government entering such an order. Think of the poor devil who had worked in the heat and in all kinds of weather, toiling and sweating in our hot country to make a crop to feed his family and to clothe them, if possible, out of his earnings. Our Government in Washington probably knew nothing about the facts, or was misinformed when it entered the order directing that the crop-loan borrower should send his cotton to the cooperative, which took two-fifths of the cotton in commissions and charges.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator mean that the cooperative would take two-fifths of an entire crop for commission?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall read the figures. There cannot be any doubt about the figures, because the figures from the seed-loan office are there. They are there now. They were there when we took this testimony. I put on the stand Mr. Charles G. Henry, the head of the Mid-South Cooperative Association, and one of the directors of the A. C. C. A.; I showed him this set of figures, and asked him if they were correct. He testified that they were correct according to his books. Here are the charges. I read them once, but I shall read them again. It is unconscionable that this sort of bill should be passed.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is not familiar with the cotton business; but his honesty, integrity, and ability are what I admire in men. I have served with him on the Committee on Appropriations for many years, and every year he has added to his stature by his high character and ability.

I read:

February 27, 1934—

These were selections, but they were verified, and this was shown to be the course of business.

One bale of cotton—

Think of the Negro bringing in his cotton—probably in an ox cart—from across the river in Arkansas, or even from Shelby County in Tennessee, and delivering it to the Mid-South Cotton Cooperative Association. He delivered it probably in 1933, though the record is not there.

It is numbered. The number of the loan was 21733; the Mid-South contract number was 7603700; the date of payment—that is probably when the cotton was sold, although there is no telling when it was sold, because these people sold spots and bought futures in their place—the date of payment was February 27, 1934. One bale.

Gross receipts, $51.31.

Previous cash advance—which has never been explained, and although they charged no commission, I assume that that was in the nature of a commission which was charged—previous cash advance, $5.59.

Interest on cash advance, 60 cents.
Insurance, $1.30.
Storage, $4.55.
Charges other than regular seasonal charges, $1.40.

Mr. Henry could not explain that item. The other day I designated those charges as lagniappe, which is a term used in Louisiana. I presume this was some of the Memphis lagniappe of the cooperative.

Charges other than regular seasonal charges, $1.40.
Membership fee, $5.

Did a farmer voluntarily become a member of this association? Heavens, no. What was done was that when a farmer was given a check there was printed on it a statement that he thereby became a member, and he had to endorse that check before he could get his money. He had to have the money. Take the poor ignorant colored man; he had to have the money so as to feed his family. So he was given a check with a statement on it that he thereby became a member of the Mid-South Cotton Cooperative Association, and he was charged $5 for that out of the proceeds of $51.34 for a bale of cotton. He was only charged $5. Think of it. Here is the great cotton cooperative association, its president drawing $75,000 a year; that very year. Its officials, most of whom are on the board of directors, and Mr. Creekmore controlled it just as I control this report in my hand—its officials getting $6,000 a year apiece. Think of what an honor and credit it was to a poor, hard-working cotton farmer to become a member of this wonderful association, for which he only had to pay $5. The money was gotten under duress, of course, because the farmer had to endorse the check in order to get his money.

Then comes to my mind the greatest shame and calumny of it all. Listen to this:

Association newspaper subscription, 50 cents.

They published some sort of a farm cooperative paper in New Orleans as I remember. The poor colored man might not have been able to read, but consider what an honor was conferred upon him; he got a weekly newspaper. I presume not 200 people ever read it, but he was charged 50 cents for it just the same.

The total of those various charges was $19.34 and the poor Negro farmer, after paying all those charges, got what was left of the $51.31.

Mr. President, I know the facts in this case, because I examined the witnesses. Someone has said there were only a few of them. As I recall, however, something like 100 witnesses were examined, and their testimony is in the two volumes which I hold in my hand [exhibiting]. I am aware that it is unpleasant to hold the Senate to discuss these small matters, but, as God has given me the power to reason, as He has given me the power to understand, I would feel that I had been recreant to my duty, I would feel that I had been recreant to my God, I would feel that I had been recreant to my country if I did not bring these facts before the Senate and ask that this payment to the manipulators of this scheme be stopped. That is what I am appealing to the Senate to do.

Persons interested in wheat came here and tried to get a slice of the Government's money. Congress would not pay them, but sent the matter to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims has since rejected the claim. If this claim is sent to the Court of Claims, I suppose it will be rejected there, but surely the Congress should not do more for cotton farmers than it did for the wheat farmers. It is not doing anything for either one of them; it is making gifts to the managers and controllers of this organization.

Why do I say that? May I read from the record for just a moment? I said that this was not a cooperative but a Creekmore and company concern, and I can prove it from the record. My recollection is there were 15 directors of this so-called A. C. C. A. Creekmore is the managing mind, the center, the absolute controller of it all. Six of the managing directors of the State organization are also directors of the central organization. I will give their names. These directors are paid not by their own organizations but by the central organization. Creekmore was taking no chances. He was going to control the organization and control its board of directors. So he puts Mr. C. C. Selden, of the California Association, on his board, and pays him; he puts Mr. W. R. Squires, of the Southwestern Irrigated Association, on his board, and pays him out of the board's money; he puts on the board of directors P. E. Harrill, of the Oklahoma Association; A. D. Stewart, of the Mississippi Association; J. W. Beatty, of the Alabama Association; and J. S. Hathcock, of the South Carolina Association.

Added to them was Mr. N. C. Williamson, of the Louisiana Association. Mr. Williamson, I presume, is known to most Senators, for he is one of the most frequent visitors here in the interest of the A. C. C. A. Mr. Williamson is a large farmer, and does not receive a salary; he merely receives $25 per diem when he is on the A. C. C. A. business.

There is also Mr. Charles G. Henry, the head of the Mid-South Association.

The eight men named have absolute control of this organization, and the head of the organization, the real power in the organization, is Mr. Creekmore.

The men I have named constitute the board of directors to whom the Senate is about to vote, if they pass this bill, a gift of $4,322,000. Such a thing is almost inconceivable to me, and has been for years, for I have been fighting this claim for years—indeed, ever since I took the testimony at the hearing; and I would be recreant to my duty if I did not fight it, because I think it is dishonest; I think it is corrupt; and I shall never give it my vote; but if we are going to make a gift, in Heaven's name, adopt the amendment I have offered and make the gift to the real farmers who lost their money. My amendment would so provide.

I see the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], former chairman of the Committee on Claims, present. I believe he is no longer chairman?

Mr. BAILEY. No; the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] is now chairman.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] is chairman of the committee, and the Senator from North Carolina is a member of it. Yesterday or day before yesterday I thought that this claim ought to go to the Claims Committee, and I made a motion to that effect. I am going to withdraw that motion. I am going to let the Senate settle this question. I have offered an amendment providing that if any money is to be paid to anybody it shall be paid to the individual members pro rata. That will mean that the poor devils who were swindled by the amount taken out of their cotton will get back a part of it, because the amendment would pay each individual in the various associations about $15 apiece.

If we want to make a gift—and the Senator from Colorado is exactly right; it is a gift—let us make the gift to the honest-to-God farmers. The Government is able to do it; but, in heaven's name, let us not give it to the managers and controllers and directors of this mercantile company, which has been soaking the farmers all of these years, and mulcting the Government out of more than $200,000,000. In Heaven's name, Senators, let us not do that.

I ask the Senate first to adopt the amendment giving this money to the farmers. Second, I ask it to vote against the bill. The bill ought not to become law, and I hope it will not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to refer the pending bill to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to withdraw the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator cannot do that by his own right. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion, and therefore its withdrawal requires unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is withdrawn.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO].

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to the roll call, a quorum is present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, as the author of the pending bill, I feel that I should make a statement about it, and I hope to be as brief as is consistent with what has been said on the floor of the Senate since the beginning of the consideration of the bill.

I shall not undertake to deal with the numerous criticisms made by my beloved friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], in which he has manifested, as I conceive it, his very great dislike not only for individuals, but for cotton cooperatives. A very large portion of the speech of the Senator has been devoted to transactions alleged to have taken place on the part of individuals, whether in their personal capacity or in their capacity as representatives of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, practically all of which transactions occurred since the liability involved attached.

In short, this claim, or bill, is based upon relations between the Government, through its Federal Farm Board, on the one part, and the cotton cooperative associations on the other part, prior to April 1930. Practically all the charges and allegations made by the Senator from Tennessee have related to transactions long subsequent to that time, which throw no light, as I conceive it, upon whether or not this is a just claim, and one which should be approved by the Congress.

With that general statement, it may be understood as we move along—and I hope to be brief, as I have stated—why I am not dealing with many individual and particular instances recited by the Senator from Tennessee. If Senators have curiosity about any of them, and desire to ask what I know about them, it will give me pleasure to furnish such information as I have, but I hope to discuss the material questions involved, and the one outstanding question is whether or not there is either a legal or a moral obligation upon the Government of the United States growing out of the transactions of the Federal Farm Board while it was in existence.

My feeling toward the Federal Farm Board is much like that of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I have not criticized that Board. I always thought Congress delegated to the Board an impossible task, one especially impossible as circumstances developed from time to time which drove down, down, down the prices of agricultural commodities, as well as all other commodities in the United States and throughout the world.

The trends and developments could not be foreseen by Congress when it created the Federal Farm Board, but it turned over to that Board a certain amount of money with at least implied instructions to stabilize the prices of agricultural commodities, and at the same time Congress gave the Board no power except as to the use of the amount of money appropriated to it.

We all know that the depression came on in the fall of 1929. The price of cotton the previous year had been above 20 cents a pound. The price not only of cotton, but the prices of grains and all other agricultural commodities began to decline. The Federal Farm Board received suggestions, one from the president of the cotton growers association, that a loan plan be inaugurated. The first suggestion I know of was by Mr. Robert Harris. I have inquired of the Farm Credit Agency, and they furnished a letter written by Mr. Harris prior to the suggestion made by Mr. Moser. However, that may be, the Farm Board, as an agency of the Government, after considering the different suggestions, after taking into consideration the conditions which prevailed marketwise, reached the conclusion that 16 cents a pound was a fair price for cotton under all the circumstances, and announced a loan plan based on that price, to be administered through the Cotton Cooperative Association. The price of cotton at that time was around 17½ cents a pound.

The Farm Board was not authorized to make loans except to cooperatives. They were not authorized to make loans to individuals. So that in order to hold up the price of cotton under their program they called in the cooperatives, and arranged with them to make the loans to the cooperatives, and the cooperatives in turn were to make loans to the farmers, not confining their loans to members of cooperatives alone, but were to make them to any cotton producer who applied for such a loan.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the contention is that these cooperative organizations lost this money by way of lending it to the farmers. Is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. They advanced it to the farmers——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not necessarily to their own members, but to any farmer who wanted to borrow 16 cents a pound on cotton.

Mr. BAILEY. The bill appears to authorize the appropriation of specific sums, to the Alabama Cotton Cooperative, $419,591.17, and so on. How were those sums arrived at?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be very glad to tell the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Were they audited?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; by certified public accountants.

Mr. BAILEY. Were they tested and approved?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Tested and checked and approved by the Farm Credit Administration, through certified public accountants.

Mr. BAILEY. Tell me what items make up the amounts. Were they losses in futures?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me explain the transactions.

Mr. BAILEY. So that I will not have to ask several questions——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot answer the question yes or no.

Mr. BAILEY. They charged the farmer, when they sold the cotton, for the storage and carrying charges. They got that, did they not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No.

Mr. BAILEY. How did they lose that if they had the farmer's cotton? That is what I am interested in.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will come to that, if the Senator will be patient, and let me follow the transactions in a consecutive way; and if I do not cover any point the Senator may have in mind, I hope he will bring it to my attention. There is no question about the Farm Board assuming responsibility for the program that was reported to Congress. I have copies of the report here.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not have much question about that, but I should like to have the Senator discuss, for my enlightenment, the question of the precedent proposed now to be set, of permitting an agency down the street to contract an obligation which the Congress has to pay. I think that is a very serious matter. If we are to do that, then the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and all the other institutions may make representations or offer aid and fail, and Congress pays the bill. The appropriating power is here. We are not bound, except by the necessities—not by obligations made down the street.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We all recognize that, and this bill is here because concededly there is no legal liability. But it is insisted that, as a result of the arrangements entered into, and which the Farm Board really, at the time, thought they were authorized to enter into, these losses accrued. In fact, the Farm Board endeavored to adjust them, and a settlement was arrived at, but the Attorney General, on being approached, ruled that the law did not give the Board the legal power to pay out the money. So I will say to the Senator that this is purely a claim of equity and justice, rather than of legal liability, and that is why the bill is here.

Proceeding briefly, the Farm Board requested the cooperatives to cooperate with them in making loans to any farmer who desired to have a loan. The Farm Board reached the conclusion that 16 cents a pound was a low price for cotton, and that it probably would not go below that. The Board said that was at least a fair price, while the market price at the time was 17½ cents. The Board thought its announcement would tend to hold up the price of cotton, and it did for some months until about 89 percent of the producers' cotton had been sold at the sustained price, before the price broke through the level.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Was there any provision in the Federal statute fixing the range of loans that could be made?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There was none.

Mr. ADAMS. It was left to the discretion of the Board?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was left to the discretion of the Board. In the law there was no limitation on the Farm Board. I said a moment ago that, while the Board was entrusted with this great obligation, no limitation was placed upon it, and no directions were given it; it was simply to use its own discretion.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. As I understand, the different cotton cooperative associations in 1930 had a trust fund. Did the money that was paid out, which is the subject matter of this bill, come out of those trust funds?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the next statement I am going to refer to.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I ask, for my information, if it did come out of the trust funds, would the money appropriated go to the trust funds?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I would not call them trust funds. They are reserves or profits accumulated through membership fees, and the sale and purchase and handling of cotton, and things of that sort, during the long period of years these cooperatives have been in existence.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I am perfectly willing to accept the Senator's explanation; but, if the money should now be appropriated, it would go back to that source?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Exactly.

Mr. President, when it became evident that the price could not be sustained and the loan plan was called off, the Farm Board then arranged for the organization of what is called the Cotton Stabilization Corporation, which took over, under a settlement, all the cotton then under loan, and held by the State cooperatives under the loan plan. The Farm Board had requested them not to sell any of the cotton, because putting cotton on the market tended to drive the price down. It was believed that the loan program, by developing a pool of cotton and taking a large quantity of cotton off of the market at a time when there was no great surplus of cotton, would tend to hold the price up, and, as I have stated, it did do it for a long time, to the great benefit and advantage of all the cotton producers of the country, whether they belonged to the cotton cooperatives or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator spoke of the time after the price of cotton went down. The Senator recalls that when the 16-cent loan of 1929 was authorized, cotton was selling at 17½ cents, or thereabout. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. There were loans on 1,300,000 bales of cotton. The cooperatives then sold 800,000 of those 1,300,000 bales and bought futures with the money; is that not correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Eight-thirteenths of the losses resulted from the buying of futures, and we are proposing to reimburse those losses.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will proceed to that, although I do not like to be diverted. But the Senator from North Carolina had that subject in mind, and it may as well be dealt with at this time.

The cooperatives, of course, served cotton mills. They are obliged to have buying customers; and, year in and year out, in the due course of business, the cooperatives handle their business and serve their members by building up a trade, by establishing confidence with the buyers of cotton, so as to maintain their business.

When this cotton went into the loan, it went in there in a pool under circumstances quite different from those which prevail under normal conditions. As I have stated, it went in there for the purpose of holding up and maintaining the price of cotton, by making cotton relatively scarce in the market, rather than having this great quantity thrown on the market in addition to the remainder of the crop.

As cotton mills which were customers called upon the cotton cooperatives for the delivery of cotton for their consumption, it became necessary for the cooperators to deliver the cotton they had contracted to sell in the due course of trade and business, as they always do. So it was arranged with the Federal Farm Board that they could deliver the cotton so as to maintain their business relations and to carry out their sales obligations, but they must at the same time buy an equal amount of futures, which in effect took off of the market that much cotton.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator help me to understand somewhat better the mechanics of the transaction?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Did the cooperative associations become obligated to the Federal Government for the amount of money that was loaned?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Did the farmer who borrowed from the cooperative organization become obligated?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. The farmer got the money from his local cooperative under a loan.

Mr. ADAMS. It was not a loan to the farmer?

Mr. BANKHEAD. A loan was made to him on his cotton.

Mr. ADAMS. What I am getting at is, was the farmer obligated to repay it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. He was situated like the borrowers under the present program.

Mr. ADAMS. Under the present program, of course, he is specifically excepted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. What control did the Farm Board have over the cotton upon which the cooperative had made the loan and had in its possession?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It had the power of supervision by reason of holding the purse strings.

Mr. ADAMS. It held the cotton as a pledge?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; as security for repayment of the money which the Farm Board was advancing to the cooperatives and which the cooperatives lent to their members.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator was moving into the matter of the purchase of futures contracts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. I will come back to it.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to see if I have a correct understanding of the Senator's statement. The Senator stated that the cooperatives sold a certain number of bales of cotton, which was spot cotton, to the mills.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understood the Senator, he said that the Farm Board then required that the cooperatives buy a certain amount of futures.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Did the Farm Board require them to do it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; the Board would not release the cotton unless they did, because it held the cotton as security.

Mr. BAILEY. It held not cotton but futures contracts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but the Farm Board took over the futures contracts. If the Senator will let me come to that.

Mr. BAILEY. We seem to be getting somewhere now. Then the cooperatives bought the contracts and sold them to the Farm Board?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; in the settlement they turned them over to the Farm Board when they closed out the loan transactions early in the spring of 1930.

Mr. BAILEY. What did the Farm Board credit the cooperatives with when they bought this amount of futures?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know. But according to the record, the Farm Board then called for delivery on the exchanges of actual bales of spot cotton equal in amount to the futures they held.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the Farm Board was in the position of being a purchaser of the cotton from the cotton cooperatives?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It took the cotton in settlement.

Mr. SMITH. The futures sales to the mills, both foreign and domestic, did not guarantee immediate shipment of the cotton. The cooperatives contracted to deliver so many bales. There was a great deal of technicality about it; but, in order to insure the price on the day on which it was agreed to deliver this cotton, for neither the cooperatives nor anybody else could afford to go barefooted, this is what happened: Let us say I sell a thousand bales of cotton, to be delivered in October, at the market price. When I sell that cotton I immediately buy a contract for an equal number of bales on the future market. That is an insurance for the risk I take. Suppose I sold 100 bales of cotton, and the market price was 10 cents. I buy 100 bales at 10 cents. If the next day cotton were to go down to 9 cents, I lose $5 on my contract of purchase, but I can deliver the cotton at $5 a bale cheaper. Therefore one cancels the other.

Suppose cotton were to go up a cent a pound. I have made $5, but I must deliver the cotton at that advanced price, and I get $5 from the insurance company, so to speak.

Mr. BAILEY. That is known as a hedge, and when one has a hedge he has no loss. But here a loss is claimed. Where did the loss occur?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has a wrong conception of what constitutes the loss. When the Farm Board employed the cooperatives to buy the cotton, and gave them 16 cents, basis middling seven-eighths, the cooperatives went out and bought it. They had to sample it, grade it, store it, and pay insurance.

Mr. BAILEY. And if they hedged, they protected themselves.

Mr. SMITH. No. That was before the price broke. They were giving the farmer 16 cents.

Mr. BAILEY. Then they were not hedging?

Mr. SMITH. They did not have to hedge, because they were not selling to anybody. They were buying the cotton and lending 16 cents.

Mr. BAILEY. They could have hedged with a sale. One can hedge with a purchase or a sale.

Mr. SMITH. If I let the Senator have 16 cents a pound, and I put the cotton in a warehouse, there is no necessity for a sale.

Mr. BAILEY. If I want to fix the price, I can make a sale on the market.

Mr. SMITH. It is not a question of fixing the price. The Senator has the wrong conception. The cooperatives were going to lend 16 cents a pound. No contracts had been made. They assembled the cotton and put it in the warehouse, and from their reserve funds they paid for the insurance, storage, and sampling; and the aggregate of that amount is practically this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. When they sold the cotton, did they not take out the insurance and other charges? Were not such charges always deducted?

Mr. SMITH. Later, when the price of cotton went down after we had the pool, the Farm Board authorized them to sell a certain amount of the cotton.

Mr. BAILEY. And when they sold it, I assume they took out the charges.

Mr. SMITH. No; when they sold the cotton they did not take out the charges. They sold the cotton, but the overhead loss had never been adjudicated, because the Attorney General said it could not be done.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator—and with this I shall not interrupt further——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want the Senator to interrupt me at any time he wishes.

Mr. BAILEY. My difficulty is that I have read the report of the committee. I think the committee took much for granted about this matter. I am not criticizing.

Mr. SMITH. I wish the Senator had been on the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish I had been. I should have known much more about it than the report discloses.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator would.

Mr. BAILEY. I read the report and I am perfectly prepared to say that the report does not state wherein these sums were lost. It says they were lost but it does not give the details.

I am in this position: If the Government owes anybody anything, I am in favor of paying it; but before I vote to pay it I should like to be shown the details.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will examine the report of the Federal Farm Credit Administration, the report of the Farm Board, and the reports of all the Government officials who, with their paid auditors, went over the whole transaction as agents responsible to the American people, he will find that the Federal officials say it is a just debt.

Mr. BAILEY. Does not the Senator think we ought to make a document of such reports for the information of Senators?

Mr. SMITH. They have been available.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Department did not recommend the enactment of this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to get back the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to leave one more problem with the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator may ask me anything he wishes.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to have the Senator explain to us the theory of section 5, that if a cooperative association is in receivership the money shall not be paid to the receivers but shall be paid to some new association. The Senator is talking about equity and morals. I do not see any equity or morals in that procedure. I should like to have it explained, because I am utterly uninformed about this problem, although I have read the report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, taking up the first question—that is, the nature of the loss involving the futures—on which I have not had an opportunity to present my views, the Federal Farm Board evidently thought the price was going up; so it would not permit the cooperatives to sell spots without replacing them with futures. So the cooperatives bought futures. As they would sell 100 bales, they would take 100 futures.

I know that the Senator from North Carolina is familiar with the usual practices on the cotton exchanges in normal times. All such transactions must be handled on the exchanges. I call to the Senator's attention the fact that if he wants to have cotton delivered to him next July, and the transaction takes place in October or November, somebody has to pay the cost of carrying the cotton from the time of the transaction, when the Senator goes on the exchange to buy a hundred bales of cotton, until next July, when the cotton is delivered. Someone has to carry the cotton until the time of delivery.

As a result, charges for insurance, interest, storage, and similar items accumulate against the person who has the actual spot cotton for delivery. The Senator is familiar with the practice which has prevailed ever since I have known anything about the cotton trade. Except in abnormal times, such as the present, the price for distant months is higher than the price for the current month, and sufficiently higher to pay the charges for carrying the cotton from the time the trade is made until the time of delivery.

Mr. BAILEY. That was true until last year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. These are abnormal times. That is the basis of the loss on futures.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is making a statement about purchasing cotton for future delivery, and he says I know something about that. I have had some experience. However, the basis of his statement is that the cooperatives sold the cotton to the mills at the instance of the Farm Board.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; they wanted to sell it.

Mr. BAILEY. And they replaced the cotton sold with futures. If that was the case, that was not a hedge. That was a gambling transaction. The seller had parted with his cotton. He had received his money, and he took the proceeds and bought cotton, not against a future sale, but in the hope of a rise. That is a gambling transaction.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Assuming that it was, who was doing the gambling? It was the Farm Board, because it was done at the instance of the Farm Board.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to find out who did it; and I should like to know how the Farm Board ordered them to buy futures when they had no spots, and were not committed to sales.

Mr. BANKHEAD. At any rate, it is well known that that is what was done. There is no real controversy about that in the record.

This matter has been under investigation for 6 or 7 years. We did not go into every detail. We took testimony for many days, with almost the full committee present at the hearings on the bill. The question was thoroughly gone into, but we could not go into all the details in the report. I was the author of the bill. I had to leave, and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] made the report. If I had made it, probably I should not have made as good a report as he did. However, there was no controversy in the committee when we got through. Not only the cotton representatives, but members of the committee from all other sections of the country were impresed with the validity, justice, and equity of the claim.

I do not think there is a member of the entire Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who is opposed to the bill. Nearly every member of the committee attended the hearings with great regularity. The members of the committee were interested; and the conclusion reached when we finished the hearings on the bill was regardless of section and regardless of party.

I am happy to say that the previous chairman of the committee, who was chairman at the time the Federal Farm Board was in action, is supporting the bill. So we have had no disturbance or trouble about it. I regret that the chairman was not present when I made my statement about the Federal Farm Board. I have always agreed with him that the Farm Board did a great job under the circumstances—the best that could be expected under the conditions with which it had to deal.

The benefits of these transactions were not confined to the members of the cooperatives. The benefits of stabilizing the price of cotton went to every producer of cotton; and every producer who wanted to take a chance on the price of enhancing cotton had the opportunity, whether or not he belonged to a cooperative, to put his cotton in under the loan.

As I have stated, the futures were taken under an arrangement with the Farm Board; and when the settlement was made in the spring of 1930, and the loan transaction was closed, the Farm Board took over the futures which it had authorized to be purchased. It not only took them over, but, as I have stated, called for the delivery of every bale of cotton under those future-delivery contracts, taking the cotton out of the market and placing it outside the channels of trade, in line with its program with the State cooperatives.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me ask the Senator a question. When the Farm Board took over the futures contracts for purchases by the cooperatives, what did it pay for those futures?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It did not pay anything. It took them over under the settlement. The price of the cotton which the cooperatives held was lower, and the total quantity of cotton would not bring the amount which the Farm Board had loaned on the cotton held.

Mr. BAILEY. Did the Farm Board simply take the futures for nothing?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. It called for the cotton. It had already paid for it.

Mr. BAILEY. It took the futures and turned the futures into cotton?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. Who suffered the loss?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Farm Board.

Mr. BAILEY. Was the Farm Board charged with a loss on the futures?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I had nothing to do with the settlement of the Farm Board affairs.

Mr. BAILEY. Did the Farm Board compel the cooperatives to deliver futures which belonged to the cooperatives?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It took over everything the cooperatives had.

Mr. BAILEY. What power did the Farm Board have to do so?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not going into the question of power. At any rate, settlement was made. The Farm Board held the dominating position. It held the debts of the cooperatives, and the cooperatives were helpless.

Mr. BAILEY. There was no foreclosure?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No.

Mr. BAILEY. And there was no protest?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The cooperatives settled, and gave the Farm Board notes for the balance. They could not do anything else. They had no money to go forward. They had a lot of cotton for which they could not pay. The price was far below——

Mr. BAILEY. They had a lot of futures for which they had paid for a certain time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; they did not pay for the futures. They paid the margin, or commission, or whatever it may be called, on the futures.

Mr. BAILEY. They had to put up a margin?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to know what the state of the futures was when they were taken over. Perhaps the margin had been exhausted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have just told the Senator——

Mr. BAILEY. My whole point, Mr. President, is that I am not informed about this question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am trying to inform the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I have not reached any conclusion. I should like to obtain information showing the items which constitute the claim. My mind is made up in one respect: I am not going to vote for that part of the bill which authorizes the payment of money to an institution in receivership, not to the institution, and not to the receiver, but to somebody else. That is away beyond my conception, but if anyone can show me wherein this is a just claim against the Government, I will do as I always did on the Claims Committee—I will vote for its payment; but I think we need a great deal more information than we have gotten so far.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Speaking about futures, let me say that under the Farm Board, when that Board was in operation, they delivered this cotton to their clients and covered that amount in futures. When they had their settlement, the Farm Board then called for specific fulfillment of the contract and had those who held their future contracts deliver them back in cotton. They merely got back the cotton. One can demand specific fulfillment in any contract that he has bought or sold, and there has to be delivered cotton that is tenderable under the Cotton Futures Act. They merely demanded specific fulfillment and got back the cotton on which they had made the money.

I claim that, so far as my knowledge of this transaction goes, it is a loss incurred by reason of the expense and overhead assumed by the different cooperatives. Taking the State of the Senator from North Carolina and my State, they loaned the money, put the cotton into the warehouse when they were accumulating it; they sampled it; they insured it, and stored it. The correct amount is the amount that we are now asking to be reimbursed, the overhead charges; the losses incident to the cotton are a minor part of this amount, as a reading of the report of the committee will disclose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, let me make a further statement on that subject. Certified public accountants examined this claim, and all their audits were submitted to the Farm Credit Administration after this bill was presented to that agency for report. They found that, under the tariffs, that is the published differences in the current price when the cotton was bought and the market futures for the months in which futures were bought, the difference averaged $5 and a few cents a bale. The Farm Credit Administration, however, figured that the actual cost of carrying the spot cotton which they had was $3.76 a bale; so that the amount of carrying charges was reduced to the actual cost of $3.76 for carrying the spot cotton, although automatically the instant they bought the futures they were losing $5 a bale. They were given credit, however, in these accounts for only $3.76 a bale, the average cost of the spot actually carried.

Mr. President, the amount carried by the bill is shown in detail on the last page of the committee report. Those figures were made up finally by the Farm Credit Administration based upon all their records accumulated during the past years. The Farm Credit Administration succeeded, as we all know, the old Farm Board, and have the records of the Board. The Farm Credit Administration took the statements of certified public accountants who examined the records of each of the State cooperatives.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Were those certified public accountants Government accountants?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; they were commercial certified accountants.

Mr. BAILEY. Who employed them?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The cooperatives employed them, of course. How else could they get a record made?

Mr. BAILEY. I am on the verge of moving to recommit this bill with instructions to report back an accounting of all the items which are proposed in the bill to be paid. I am making the proposition: If it shall appear that the United States Government owes anybody any money, whether it is more or less than set forth in the bill, I shall vote for it; but, with the lights before me, all I know is that certain people have filed a claim and that their own accountants have certified so much to be due. I know nothing else about it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not their regular employees, but certified public accountants.

Mr. BAILEY. I said their accountants. I take it, when I employ a man to make up one of my accounts he is my accountant.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the Senator, perhaps, is not well informed as to the standards of certified public accountants.

Mr. BAILEY. I am informed about that, and I am not reflecting on the certified accountants; but I am saying when the United States Government is called upon to pay two and a half million dollars it has the right to have an audit on its own account, and I will stand on that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The certified statements and audits by certified public accountants were all submitted to the Farm Credit Administration and examined and used by them in connection with all their other records in making a report upon this bill to the committee. They have reported that, under the formulas which they think are fair and just, the figures presented on the last page of the bill are the correct figures if Congress believes that this claim should be paid.

I started to say the amounts here are not based upon theory. When they made settlement the Farm Board took over everything in the world that each of the cooperatives had. The Board took over the accumulated reserves the cooperatives had built up for a number of years; they took over everything they had. My friend says they were in bankruptcy. They were; they did not go into the bankrupt court, although they were broke, of course, but the Farm Board got all they had, and, after taking over everything they had accumulated for the operation of a service association for the benefit of cotton producers, it was found on that settlement that they still owed a balance of a million seven hundred thousand dollars. The Farm Board required notes from them in that amount, and the notes were given.

Since that time, in 1930, when the settlement was made, $1,100,000 of that money built up again as reserves and profits for services by the cooperatives have been paid to the Farm Credit Administration as a credit upon those notes amounting to $1,700,000. So, any way you look at it, Mr. President, the Farm Board got the entire reserves, which are shown to have been $2,600,000 plus, and also got the notes for $1,700,000; in fact, they got everything; and they were, of course, entitled to it under the circumstances. The Attorney General told them they could not do anything else. That is amply shown by the record and by Mr. Stone who succeeded Mr. Legge as Chairman of that Board and went down to Memphis to the McKellar investigation and testified about it. He said he thought this amount ought to be paid, but the Attorney General stopped its payment.

I have a letter here from another member of the Board who was not examined. It came to me through Mr. Benson, the secretary of the National Cooperative Council. It was written by Mr. Denman, a former member of the Board. He says:

> DEAR MR. BENSON: Confirming our understanding in conversations during the past few days concerning losses sustained by certain cooperative marketing associations, under what is commonly referred to as the Federal Farm Board 16-cent loan—as a former member of the Board, I am of the opinion that the cotton cooperatives should be reimbursed to the extent that they bore the expense of the difference between the 16-cent loan and the lower price at which all such cotton was subsequently taken over by the Cotton Stabilization Corporation.

That was the time when they made the settlement which I was pointing out to the Senator.

> In addition to this, the cooperatives should be reimbursed for proper handling and carrying charges incident to such transactions.
> The Federal Farm Board moved to protect farmers from drastic price declines which began in 1929 as rapidly as it could and to the extent of its ability under the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Act. Being limited to loaning only to cooperatives, naturally such moves to check the effect of these declines had to be made through such organizations, but it was not the intent of the Farm Board to penalize cooperative associations, nor to deplete the funds of their members which had been accumulated in prior years.
> It should be possible to establish definitely all such losses as were sustained in the above-outlined operations.

That was done as well as any reasonable man could expect it to be done. It was done to the satisfaction of the Farm Credit Agency, with all of the accounts and all of the records in their possession. They have gone through the whole matter, and they say these figures are right. The question is up to Congress as to whether they want to recognize the claim.

So there is Mr. Legge testifying, in effect, that the claim was just. Here is Mr. Denman testifying to it, another member of the Board.

Mr. SMITH. And so did Mr. Stone.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; so did Mr. Stone.

Let me look for a minute at the report to Congress of the Farm Board. I do not know that that is necessary, because the question of the amount seems to be the important thing. This is a report to Congress by the Farm Board:

> It would have bankrupted the associations, and destroyed, through no fault of the farmer members, all the progress toward a farmer-owned marketing system they had made over a period of years.

That is, if they had forced them to act in a certain way.

The maintenance of these stocks in the hands of the cooperatives has helped to support the market for all producers, whether members of associations or not. For that reason it is only just that the losses due to these holding operations should be absorbed by the revolving fund of the Board, rather than charged against the assets of the individual associations involved.

That, I want to impress upon my friend, is the positive finding of the Board itself, deliberately presented to Congress in a document submitted to them; that this claim is just and ought to be paid.

Mr. President, I am not going to take further time. My friend from Tennessee, whom I love like a brother, has his feelings very deeply aroused in this case. I went to Memphis and attended what is known as the McKellar investigation, the investigation secured by him. Never in my life was I treated with more hospitality at any place. I did not stay very long. I could not. I heard 2 days of testimony and then read most of the record after that. I went there with a totally open mind on this subject. I had had no contact with the cooperatives. I was not familiar with their work. I really did not know what was involved in the investigation until I got there. I was not there long before I found out that this was a fight between competitors; this was a fight between the cotton buyers of that territory, in an effort to break down and destroy this agency of the farmers, the cotton cooperatives. The record shows that they raised $60,000 to make this fight. Here is a statement in the report of the president of the Memphis Cotton Exchange in 1936:

Upon taking office last January our president began a movement for the investigation of the cotton cooperatives. For months he has worked tirelessly at this seemingly impossible task. He was finally rewarded, however, when Senator MCKELLAR introduced and the Senate passed Senate Resolution 185 authorizing the appointment of a Senate committee to "investigate the expenditures of the Federal Government for cotton cooperatives and the operations of the old Federal Farm Board."

He is talking about his exchange, the cotton shippers and buyers.

On September 19 a general meeting was held, at which time the president was empowered to "communicate with other exchanges and to meet with representatives of these exchanges if necessary; to take all the steps necessary to fight the matter to a conclusion—and should he decide it necessary, to take the fight into the courts and be advised by legal counsel." Never was work better or more thoroughly done. Your president literally devoted his full time, both day and night, with the result that for the first time the Senate will have a full and true picture showing the activities of the cooperatives.

That does not refer to this bill. It refers to the cotton cooperatives.

Mr. President, I am not going into any answer to the many assertions made by my beloved friend. I submit to the judgment and intelligence of high-class jurors that his confessed dislike for Mr. Creekmore and his criticism of the cooperatives under his management have nothing to do with whether or not the Farm Board made arrangements with the State cooperatives which resulted in the destruction and depletion of their entire assets, and put them in debt. Mr. Creekmore at that time—most of the time, at least—was not even connected with the cooperatives.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Alabama does not want to do me an injustice.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I certainly do not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope he will yield so that I may make a statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only time I really ever talked to Mr. Creekmore was when he was examined as a witness. I would not know Mr. Creekmore if I should see him. I do not know him. I have no interest in him one way or the other. All I know about him is what his sworn testimony showed in the hearing that was had down there; and upon that sworn testimony I formed my opinion of Mr. Creekmore.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the subject which my good friend has so elaborately discussed here has been handled at length by committees of the Senate. As I have already stated, we had what is known as the McKellar investigation, stimulated and spurred on by the active competitors of the cotton cooperatives, who, like my friend, wanted to put the cooperatives out of business. I knew nothing about it until we got down there. When I got through, I was obliged to differ with my friend. I did not know what was involved when I went there; but I reached the conclusion that there was but one thing involved, and that was the fight to destroy and put out of business the cotton cooperatives—a fight instituted by the cotton buyers of Memphis, the biggest cotton market in the South. It was a fight by them. That is shown by the document which I have just read, in part. The atmosphere was full of it. It was a fight by them to break down and end the cooperative cotton associations as competitors of theirs in the cotton trade. So I promptly reported. The Senator from Tennessee made one report, and I made another.

I always hate to differ with or disagree with my friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. He is a great fellow. I knew him when he was a schoolboy, and I have known him ever since. As he stated on the floor of the Senate, I sat in the same class with him for 4 short or long years, at the University of Alabama. I have kept in touch with him intimately, and in a most friendly way, ever since; and I would not hurt my friend, the Senator from Tennessee's feelings. I would not do him an injustice to pass this bill. I have no interest in the bill. I drifted into this matter. I went down there in good faith to see what the whole thing was about, and I found out, and I have known ever since. Witnesses were there, gathered from all over the country, with plenty of money to back up the investigation. It proceeded, and at the end of it each of us reported. I made my report, and my friend from Tennessee made his. Then, later, as all Senators know, based upon charges similar to my friend's, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], down in South Carolina another investigation was secured under the authorship of my other beloved friend, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

That investigation was amply financed by the Senate. It involved the integrity of the cooperative organization and its officials. It included practically all the transactions to which my friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has alluded here today. An investigator was employed by the committee. Full hearings were conducted.

Weeks and weeks and weeks were given to that investigation by one of our standing and major committees. Good attendance was had at the committee hearings, and after hearing all of the evidence, involving practically everything the Senator from Tennessee has injected into this discussion, what was the result of the deliberations by this impartial committee, made up of Democrats and Republicans, northerners, southerners, westerners, and easterners? What was the conclusion in answer to the numerous castigations by my good friend? The committee made a unanimous report. The Senator from South Carolina, who had brought about the investigation, being fair, as he always is, and having no motive in bringing on the investigation except to get the facts, and ascertain whether the charges were true, and whether these people were worthy to serve in the capacities in which they were serving, along with all the other members of the committee failed to find any of the charges of improper conduct, fraud, deception, or anything else, sustained after that full and thorough investigation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not wish to divert the course of the Senator's thought, but I am looking at the bill which the Senator introduced, and also at the substitute offered by the Senator from Tennessee, and I find that the authorization of appropriation in the bill of the Senator from Alabama is $1,500,000, while the authorization in the substitute of the Senator from Tennessee is four and a half million. I am wondering what the basis of the difference in the authorizations is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have an amendment which I gave notice the first of the week I should present at the proper time in lieu of section 6. Is that the section to which the Senator refers?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment offered reads as follows:

> The payments authorized to be made by the Farm Credit Administration under this act shall be made from the revolving fund established pursuant to section 6 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended—

The same old revolving fund, or the balance of it, which the Farm Board had when these transactions were occurring—> and so much of such fund as may be necessary for the purpose of making such payments is hereby made available for such purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. What I was trying to get at was the reason for the difference in the computation. The Senator from Tennessee seems to want to give away four and a half million, the Senator from Alabama seems to want to give away only a million and a half.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not agree with either statement of the Senator. The Senator from Alabama is trying to pay an honest debt. If that is giving money away, then I am pleased to have the credit of giving it away. But the difference is not what the Senator from Colorado seems to think it is. Under the amendment $2,749,000, in round figures, will be applied on obligations of the State cooperatives to the Federal Credit Agency. They owe money. After they were wiped out they had to get money from the Farm Board. They borrowed. They have not paid it all back. They paid back $1,100,000. They are still in debt for money borrowed upon which to operate their transactions from that time. There is only $1,500,000, and that is not to be applied on obligations. That is to come out of the revolving fund, and it is to be paid to the cooperatives, which do not owe that money to the credit agency. Some of them have practically paid their notes and gotten their matters wound up, settled in one way or another. Only $1,500,000 is required under this amendment, and that is not an appropriation. It comes out of the fund which the Farm Board had, and out of which it desired, according to its records, to pay these very claims, but it was prevented by reason of an opinion of the Attorney General. The money is still in the Treasury, and we are merely asking for its application.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, of course, is intended to defeat the bill, and would have that result. The Senator said he would not vote for the bill even if the amendment were adopted.

There was a bill here to which the Senator has frequently referred, the so-called Frazier bill. The Senator from Tennessee stated that the cotton representatives went to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] and got him to introduce a cotton bill. Some of my colleagues heard the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] on the floor about that. He interrupted the Senator from Tennessee and said that that was not a correct statement of the situation. He stated what all the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry know, that he, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], introduced a bill for the relief of grain growers, and, pending the consideration of that bill in the committee, the members of the committee from cotton States suggested that, along with grain, cotton should be included, and he agreed to it, and cotton was included. I do not think that justifies the statement that those interested in cotton went to the Senator from North Dakota to get him to introduce a bill for them. The Senator from Tennessee seems to have the impression that they were dodging around somewhere getting some man from another section than their own to slip a bill in.

What happened to the Frazier bill? The Senator has argued eloquently today for the payment of money to the farmer. God knows he does not work any harder than I do to get all the money from the Federal Treasury possible for the benefit of the farmer. Everyone recognizes that. What did the Senator do when the Frazier bill was introduced in an effort to have money paid to the farmers? The money involved in the pending matter was not lost to the farmers. According to the testimony in this matter, the cooperatives lost $25,000,000 by virtue of holding their cotton in the pool when they could have sold it at 17½ cents or 17 cents a pound. The bill which the Senator from Tennessee calls the Frazier bill, in addition to the provision for payments to cooperatives for what they lost, contained a provision refunding to the farmers the amount they had lost through this pooling and stabilization program. What did the Senator from Tennessee do about that? Was he as anxious then to pay the farmers as he appears to be today? An opportunity was there afforded to pay them their own money, to pay their just claim. Previously the matter had been here in bills. The Senator fought it then just as he is fighting the pending bill. He would not stand for payment to the farmers. He was willing that the wheat people, the grain people, should get their payments, but he protested when the Frazier bill was before us, the one about which he talks, a bill referring the whole matter, not to the Court of Claims but to the Farm Credit Administration, to investigate and ascertain whether or not these claims should be paid and to ascertain the amount. But he would not let that go to the Farm Credit Administration, under Governor Myers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will settle this whole matter with the Senator, so far as I am able to do it, by agreeing that there may be done just exactly what was done in the case of the wheat farmers. Under a provision of the law, that matter was referred to the Court of Claims, to ascertain what claims, if any, the wheat cooperatives had, and to report to the Congress of the United States. That was under a law passed many years ago. That was all that was done for the wheat farmers, and I am perfectly willing to follow that course now. Indeed, I expect to offer an amendment directing that this matter be referred to the Court of Claims, under the terms of the law as it now exists, and following the precedent set in the wheat cases. I think wheat and cotton should be put on an equality.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator knows he did not object to the wheat matter being referred to the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not object to the cotton matter being referred to the Court of Claims, either.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not say the Court of Claims. The bill as it stood when the Senator from North Dakota decided he had better take cotton out or he would not get anywhere, was a bill to refer the questions of grain and cotton to the Farm Credit Administration, and the Senator from Tennessee said:

> If you take cotton out I will agree for grain to go to the Farm Credit Administration.

He did not say anything then about the Court of Claims. I looked the matter up today. I have a copy of the RECORD on my desk.

Why adopt the Senator's amendment when the farmers do not claim that money? There is no justification in the world for donating or giving it to them, as the Senator says. He will not try to give aid to them. He said:

> If you adopt that and destroy the cooperative program I will vote against the other too. Help me ruin it. Help me get the cooperatives out, and I will help you beat the farmers.

That is the proposal.

The $4,000,000, as I have tried to explain, is the loss to the associations from the wiping out, the total depletion, of the reserves built up by them over a long period of years. In addition to that, the Farm Board demanded notes for $1,700,000 to cover the loss, $1,100,000 of which has been paid.

If we desire to pay the farmers, we must place in the bill in addition to the $4,000,000, the $25,000,000 which the record shows they lost under the pool and stabilization program, instead of going ahead, as all the farmers did who did not come into the pool, and selling their cotton at a price in excess of 16 cents a pound.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further on the question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement which the Senator makes as to the source of this liability, whether it be moral or legal, does not seem to me to apply to section 5. Section 5 provides for the distribution of money to cooperatives which were not in existence at the time of these transactions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will make a statement about that.

In the first place that provision has a very limited application. My friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] said that these concerns were all in bankruptcy. I think the Senator meant that they were broke. They did not go into court. Of course, they were broke when the Farm Board took all they had. But my information is that only one of the cooperatives, the Georgia cooperative, went into the bankruptcy court. It is now under receivership, and under the provisions of the bill it is intended that the money going to that cooperative association shall be paid to the receiver. If that is not the language of the measure, I will be glad to correct it. That is its purpose.

The Alabama organization was reorganized. The name was changed slightly, as will be noted, and 7 out of the 11 directors in the organization were elected in the new organization. They proceeded right on in the same office and with the same stationery, as an active organization, simply with a change of name.

In respect to the Tennessee and Arkansas organizations, I am advised that there was a legal transfer of the assets and liabilities. There was a legal consolidation of those two organizations into the Mid-West organization, with its headquarters in Memphis. So naturally the money would go to the consolidated company. The name of the Alabama association was slightly changed, but in substance and effect the two organizations were the same. That slight change furnishes no reason why their lost money should not be replaced. If the claims are paid elsewhere, there is no reason why in the case of the Georgia organization the claim should not be paid to the receiver.

So I submit that these matters have been considered, and there is no desire that the money should go anywhere except to associations which are trying to serve the welfare of the cotton farmers.

Mr. President, at Memphis we went into the whole subject of the value of the services rendered by the cooperatives. The real question is whether we are going to uphold the cooperatives or to destroy them. That has been the fight from start to finish. That was the fight at Memphis, Tenn. It was the fight before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in another investigation.

Mr. President, I shall make one other statement and then I will be through, unless Senators wish to ask me further questions. I have pointed out that the bill had received the careful consideration of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The committee had been through one long investigation, and every member of the committee became satisfied there was no justification for destroying the cooperatives simply because of the allegations made by their competitors.

The committee, as I have said, went into the details of this bill and conducted elaborate hearings. A great deal of interest was manifested by members of the committee, especially by those not familiar with the subject. Again, the second time, Democrats and Republicans, southerners, easterners, and westerners unanimously reached the conclusion that this was a just debt; that it was based upon real substantial equity; that, by reason of the cooperation of these cotton cooperatives with the Farm Board, a Government agency upon which they had a right to rely, they had been wiped off the board financially and put into debt, without fault on their part, and that in doing so they were not only serving the best interests of their own members but serving the best interests of every cotton producer in the country, all of whom were benefited by these transactions.

Because we recognized the difficulty of securing an appropriation for a large sum of money at this time, we left out the section which had been in previous bills, reimbursing the members of the cooperatives for the losses they had sustained by reason of holding the cotton. There was no connection between the loss by the members, the farmers, and the loss by their organization.

Mr. President, if the bill is passed, it will strengthen the cooperatives. It will announce to the world that Congress will not go along with the cotton buyers and cotton shippers in their determined fight to break down and destroy the cooperative movement.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say. After going through the McKellar hearing, after going through the Smith hearing, after going through the hearings on this bill, it is my deliberate judgment that this is a just, a fair, and an honorable claim, and that Congress should recognize it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a couple of questions?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The different cooperative associations listed in the Senator's bill have been existent for the past 10 years?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is my information, just confirmed a few moments ago.

Mr. ADAMS. And they have kept in a reasonably thrifty or prosperous condition since then?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have had a struggle, of course. They started from scratch. They have had a hard fight. Even now they do not have the money to pay what they owe the Farm Credit Administration. This is not a matter of profit; it is almost a matter of self-existence.

Mr. ADAMS. That was the purpose of my inquiry. The Senator had stated that it was a battle involving the life of the associations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is.

Mr. ADAMS. They have survived without the money. Is this money vital to their continuation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They borrowed most of that money, and if they do not get some relief to pay it back there is grave question whether they can survive or not. That is what the cotton buyers realize.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to ask another question which has doubtless been covered by the Senator. The cotton cooperatives received 16 cents; that is, the Farm Board paid the difference between what the cooperatives received for the cotton and 16 cents, and this claim is for the amount above that which was involved in insurance and various carrying charges?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it is the amount the cooperatives lost when the price of cotton went down. It took all the profits they had. When the price broke through that level they could not get enough money to pay what they owed the Farm Board. They borrowed 16 cents at the insistence of the Farm Board, and at the lower price they were not in position to pay what they owed.

Mr. ADAMS. I got the impression that the amount involved represented carrying charges and other items over the 16 cents.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was how they lost it in large part. They had to turn over everything they had in payment. They had to carry the cotton in the pool.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement in the bill is that the amount is the difference between the carrying charges and operating cost expended by each cotton cooperative association, and the amount paid in the original settlement with the Federal Farm Board.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct. That is what constituted the law.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator mean to include in the carrying charges and operating costs the amount which was paid to the farmer for his cotton?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. The cotton farmer received 16 cents. That ended the Farm Board money so far as advances were concerned. That money was turned over to the farmer. He put his cotton into the pool. Some of the members of the cooperatives sold their cotton and got out with a profit.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will have patience with those of us who do not understand the situation——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to answer.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand, the cotton cooperative is composed of farmers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. It is an unincorporated association made up of individual farmers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. And the individual farmers got their 16 cents?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; those who put their cotton in the pool.

Mr. ADAMS. Those who put in their cotton; and if money is paid to the cooperatives under this bill it would be for the benefit of the farmers who have already gotten their 16 cents?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it would be paid to place the cooperatives themselves in their previous status, so they would have money with which to operate and pay their debts.

Mr. ADAMS. Who would get the money?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Farm Credit Administration would get most of it. The cooperatives would not get it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In any event, the producers of cotton would not get it? Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The organization would get it.

Mr. McCARRAN. The producers of cotton would not get it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. There was a bill to pay them the loss of $25,000,000. That was abandoned. They would receive the benefit of the money provided in the pending bill, of course.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to ask one or two questions. I apologize because I have not been present during all the debate.

As I understand, the purpose of the bill is to reimburse someone, namely, the cooperatives, for a loss sustained in dealing in cotton. Am I correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In part. The Senator does not go far enough. The loss was sustained in handling cotton under a plan adopted by the Federal Farm Board.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I see the Senator's difficulty. It is this——

Mr. McCARRAN. Who pays the money?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It comes out of the revolving fund of the old Farm Board.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does it not come out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not in that way. There is no appropriation.

Mr. McCARRAN. There is an authorization, is there not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. As I have stated several times, I have changed that part of the bill by an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill is an authorization.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have changed that.

Mr. McCARRAN. Some one dealing in a commodity known as cotton lost some money in the deal. Somebody is going to pay it. As I understand, the payment is to come out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it does not come out of the Federal Treasury by an appropriation. It is to come out of an agency of the Federal Government.

Mr. McCARRAN. The agency must obtain its money from the Federal Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It already has it.

Mr. SMITH. Five hundred million dollars was appropriated to the Farm Board for the stabilization of certain crops.

Mr. McCARRAN. That money was appropriated from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but it was set aside, and it is still there. There is enough left in that fund to meet these obligations. The Senator asks who lost the money. The agents of the producers themselves lost it. Suppose I were a member of a cooperative association, and I received 16 cents for the cotton which I sold. In the ultimate transaction the organization to which I belonged, as the agent of the producers, lost a great amount of money. As a member I am morally obligated to assume my responsibility to my agent.

Mr. McCARRAN. To reimburse the agent.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly. The Government is under obligation to reimburse——

Mr. McCARRAN. Whom?

Mr. SMITH. The various cooperatives throughout the States, for the work which they did for the Farm Board. Yesterday I read a statement from the chairman of the Farm Board, saying, in effect, that "We assume all responsibility for the 16-cent loan. The subsequent action of the market wiped out the reserves of the cooperatives, and we feel that we are morally obligated to repay them."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall try to boil it down in my own way. Someone lost some money. It is not proposed that we reimburse the farmers. They were the producers of the cotton. It is proposed to reimburse some intervening agency which lost some money. It is proposed that we take money from the Federal Treasury to reimburse the intervening agency. Am I correct?

Mr. SMITH. Let me tell the Senator——

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator answer my question? Am I correct or incorrect in that statement?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is correct, because the intervening agency was financed by the farmers. It was their money which was put into the reserve fund of every association. That fund was used up in insurance, storage, and the loss per bale, after the farmers had sold 89 percent of their crop at 16 cents. Therefore every organization which receives this money must return to every member what he put in the reserve fund. So the money does go back to the grower in the ultimate result.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am grateful for the explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator resumes his seat——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield the floor?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield the floor.

Mr. BRIDGES obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield in order that I may ask a question?

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] asked the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] whether or not these were voluntary cooperative associations. Quite the contrary. They are all Delaware corporations, from the American Cotton Cooperative Association down to the last one of them. They are organized under the laws of the State of Delaware. The Senator will remember that many corporations throughout the United States are organized under the laws of Delaware. These corporations are all organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, and they are controlled as such corporations. I have copies of the charters, presented by Mr. Creekmore.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. I am compelled to leave the Chamber. I should like to obtain action on an amendment which I have to offer. I do not think there will be any objection to it. I wish to offer a substitute for section 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Mississippi for that purpose?

Mr. BRIDGES. I have been waiting for some time, but I shall be glad to yield if it is a question of only a minute or two.

Mr. BILBO. That is all.

Mr. President, section 6 of the original bill authorized an appropriation to take care of the money to be paid to the cooperatives. On the first of last August an amendment was adopted which took care of the Staple Cooperative of the Mississippi Delta. If my substitute for section 6 is not adopted, it will be necessary to increase the amount set out in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senator that I have taken out section 6. I read my amendment as a substitute for section 6.

Mr. BILBO. I think the Senator's amendment must be in the same words as mine.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think so.

Mr. BILBO. I shall read my amendment as a substitute for section 6:

SEC. 6. The payments authorized to be made by the Farm Credit Administration under this act shall be made from the revolving fund established pursuant to section 6 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended; and so much of such fund as may be necessary for the purpose of making such payments is hereby made available for such purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the same language as the language of my amendment.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I offer my amendment as a substitute for section 6, and ask that it be adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will let the amendment go over for the present, because it involves a matter of importance, which I think we ought to have a little time to look into.

Mr. BILBO. Very well. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point section 151, on page 1138, volume 36, part I, of the United States Statutes at Large, Sixty-first Congress, third session. That section provides that whenever complications arise with respect to claims, except pensions, the Senate or the House may refer the matter to the Court of Claims to report all the facts accurately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the Record as requested.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEC. 151. Whenever any bill, except for a pension, is pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may, for the investigation and determination of facts, refer the same to the Court of Claims, which shall proceed with the same in accordance with such rules as it may adopt, and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy, together with such conclusions as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, either as a claim, legal or equitable, or as a gratuity against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant: Provided, however, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court upon the facts established that under existing laws or the provisions of this chapter, the subject matter of the bill is such that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and it shall report its proceedings therein to the House of Congress by which the same was referred to said court.

Mr. McKELLAR. In accordance with the provision which I have asked to have printed in the RECORD at this point, I submit a resolution and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be received and printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 257) submitted by Mr. McKELLAR is as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have no desire to precipitate a controversy or to take any more of the time of the Senate than necessary, but I think the spotlight should be thrown on the Department of Justice because of the serious rumors and reports which have been circulating about it for several weeks. Some of these rumors and reports have even appeared in print, and many of my colleagues have heard them, I am sure, for I have talked with them about them.

Manifestly I have not the facilities to get to the bottom of these matters, but I think they are of sufficiently serious import to be given an airing.

Undoubtedly there are others who have shared my apprehensions concerning the administration of so influential an agency of the Government as that presided over by Mr. Jackson. We know that it is an agency that could be used to harass one's political enemies and protect one's political friends. I make no charge and intend no insinuation that that is being done today; but there are some things about which I want to find out.

Mr. Jackson is a former corporation lawyer, and only a few years back worked for "economic royalists" and drew from them large fees. He has a conservative background. He is a very astute man. He came to Washington and became the "fair-haired boy" of the administration—the "fair-haired boy" of the gentleman at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

He is a sort of head crony of the Corcoran-Cohen-Jackson political combine. He is alined with those two men who are so powerful behind the scenes in Washington, and with the so-called left-wing crowd of the New Deal. I think it fair to assume that Tommy Corcoran and Benny Cohen, two young political adventurers who by one way or another have attained an amazing influence in the Government, have more influence with Mr. Jackson than possibly anyone else in the country except the President, and, of course, he has no time to give to the details of administering a department.

So Mr. Jackson carries on, assisted by Mr. Corcoran and Mr. Cohen.

I should like to learn whether the Department is to be used to deal leniently with or to give protection to Communists and those of Communist leanings, while dealing very firmly with those of an opposite alien philosophy.

For example, why have the cases against 17 Communists in Detroit, involving the recruiting of young men for service in Spain, been dismissed, while the cases against 17 others, members of the so-called Christian Front, are being pressed with enthusiasm?

Congress should investigate the Detroit Communist cases. A great "red herring" is being drawn across the case by charges that the F. B. I., the United States marshal, and others were cruel to the Communist prisoners by arresting them at night and handcuffing them afterward. Five of the Communists have long records. All sight is lost of the fact that a grand jury found these men, who were supposedly acting on orders from Moscow, enlisting American boys and sending them abroad, some of them to die, in the Communist brigades of the Spanish Loyalist Army.

Why were these cases dropped? What influence was used on Jackson to have these cases dismissed? Are Communists to be treated as being above the law?

I have here a copy of Jackson's "alibi." It is, in effect, that "it seems inappropriate to begin prosecution for activities so long known to the Government." He condemns his own Department of inefficiency and of dereliction of duty and then dismisses indictments when the Department finally did its duty. No more silly argument could be advanced. He says "no public injury seems to have been suffered." No injury, when American boys gave up their lives! He refers to "individual Spanish sympathizers who had become so heated over that foreign conflict as to want to fight." Yes; they became heated when needled and harangued and argued into it by the 17 Communists whom Jackson freed.

I have in my hand the official release from Mr. Jackson's Department of Justice which he gives as his excuse for the dismissal of these charges, and I ask that it be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Attorney General Jackson today issued the following statement:

"On February 6, 1940, 16 persons were indicted at Detroit, Mich., for conspiring to induce enlistments in the Spanish war in violation of the statute of 1818.

"These offenses are charged to have been committed in 1937 and 1938, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation submitted its report on them in March 1939. No action was taken until December 1939, when the United States attorney at Detroit was ordered by Attorney General Murphy to conduct a grand-jury proceeding.

"These indictments present to the Department the dilemma of either discontinuing these cases or entering upon a vastly broader campaign of prosecution. Even-handed and impartial justice would not localize prosecutions of this character to Detroit nor confine them to only one side of the Spanish war, nor even to the Spanish war itself. Similar activities were alleged to have taken place in various parts of the country in 1936, 1937, and 1938 with respect to the Spanish war, the Italian-Ethiopian, and the Japanese-Chinese conflicts, and no indictments have been brought. Unless we are to proceed with all the cases arising during that period, it would be manifestly unjust to single out these Detroit defendants."

Furthermore, I can see no good to come from reviving in America at this late date the animosities of the Spanish conflict so long as the struggle has ended and some degree of amnesty at least is being extended in Spain. Since these acts were not prosecuted when they were new or current, it seems inappropriate to begin prosecution for activities so long known to the Government. (No public injury seems to have been suffered from the fact that individual Spanish sympathizers, who had become so heated over that foreign conflict as to want to fight, left this country to do so.)

However, the Department should in the future, and it will, be diligent to apply this statute to prevent organized enlistments in this country to engage in European wars. The Federal Bureau of Investigation will watch closely any activities of this character. No such activities will be permitted to become a menace to our foreign or domestic peace.

I have ordered the indictments in Detroit dismissed. The United States attorney is subject to no criticism in this connection, for he has acted strictly in accordance with his instructions from Washington.

Mr. BRIDGES. These Communists were guilty of subversive activities which constituted a violation of Federal statutes. They were indicted and freed by Jackson.

In New York City 17 others have been indicted and are now being tried for violating particular Federal rules in another subversive case. The New Yorkers are accused of wrongdoing. The New Yorkers, I am informed, are not Communists but are members of various religious faiths which are very strongly opposed to communism.

Mr. Jackson is going ahead with the prosecution of the 17 New Yorkers on a subversive charge after freeing the 17 Communists in Detroit on a like charge. Does this mean he is treating some groups one way and Communists in another? Both groups have supposedly violated the laws of the United States. But Jackson finds an excuse—a feeble one it is true, but one that satisfied his own conscience—and dismisses indictments against 17 Communists in Detroit but proceeds against others in New York. The Communists were veterans, agents of Moscow, experienced men, some with long records, all of them troublemakers. I have in my hand the complete prison and criminal records of these Communists in Detroit.

The others, the New Yorkers, I am informed, are mostly misguided youths, committing their first offense against the Government. Is it one rule for Communists, another rule for those opposed to communism?

Is the Department of Justice on a sit-down strike against putting Communists in jail?

We have instances on every hand of Communists violating our laws, and this with the knowledge of the Department of Justice, but none are sent to jail. We have the instance of Charles Recht, the New York attorney and agent of the Soviet Government.

Last year Congress passed a law making it illegal to represent foreign interests in this country without first registering at the State Department. Some minor Communist agents were indicted in early December 1939 by the District of Columbia District Court grand jury. The indicted agents raced into court and pleaded guilty, getting off with suspended sentences and fines.

Immediately after the indicted agents pleaded guilty, Mr. Charles Recht, long-time agent for Soviet interests, went to the State Department in December 1939 and registered as the American agent for seven or eight Soviet governmental corporations. There is reason to believe that he was representing the same Soviet corporations all the time from the date when the law took effect until December, when he finally registered. Why has he not been indicted for violating the law between July and December? Who is protecting him from his own admitted violation of the law, since if he had acted lawfully prior to December there was no need for him to register in December, and if his work required registration in December then certainly he was acting unlawfully before December? Who is protecting him?

Is Mr. Jackson on a sit-down strike against the administration of justice?

On March 13, 1930, the District of Columbia district court grand jury again handed down some indictments against Soviet agents doing business in this country without registering with the State Department. Those indicted were officers of the World Tourists, Inc., the Soviet Travel Agency.

On Saturday, March 16, 1940, the State Department announced that five Communist agents had just registered. These five are identified as the "kingpins in the dissemination of Communist propaganda in the United States." One of the five is Robert Minor, president of the Workers' Library Publishers, Inc., of New York City, which publishes the organ of the Communist Party, the Communist International. He is a member of the powerful international control commission of the Communist International. William Weiner, vice president of the company, who was also indicted, is treasurer of the Communist Party in the United States.

Now that these Communists have come in and confessed by registering that they have been serving Soviet masters in the United States, the question is, are they going to be prosecuted for violating the law since July 1? Or is there some powerful personage in or behind the Department of Justice who is going to protect them from just punishment for violating our laws?

Where does this immunity come from? Where do the Communists get their protection?

The District of Columbia district grand jury was convened last January with a great fanfare of publicity. Mr. Murphy, who was then the Attorney General, announced that the Department of Justice had all sorts of evidence of sabotage by foreign agents in airplane, munitions, and automobile factories. Rumors flew thick and fast that big indictments were coming. Then there were rumors that some high personage in the Government was trying to prevent these indictments. Well, the grand jury quietly folded up last week without returning an indictment. I should like to know, Mr. President, what it is all about.

Mr. President, is there a sitdown strike in the Department of Justice against the administration of justice? What has become of the prosecution of the Archibald McNeil case, and the grand jury investigation of the same Archibald McNeil, one-time Democratic national committeeman from Connecticut?

What has become of the investigation at Hot Springs, Ark., of charges against city officials and police that they had accepted bribes for harboring Federal fugitives from justice?

When is Mr. Jackson going to take action on the violation of civil liberties and vote frauds in New Jersey—charges raised in the 1938 congressional elections, so that Federal laws are involved?

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Annenberg was indicted in the Philadelphia inquiry, was he not?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not know. I have not seen in the newspapers whether that is the case or not. If so, the Attorney General is proceeding in a particular case, but there are some things up in the Senator's own State—in the city in the Senator's State dominated by a man by the name of Hague—which certainly need investigation. I was very much interested to observe that a candidate for United States Senator from New Jersey, the new, great, and wise Minister to Canada, Mr. James H. R. Cromwell, the other day was quoted by the press as saying:

> I do not know whether or not I shall be a candidate for United States Senator from New Jersey. I have not talked to Mayor Hague as yet.

I thought that was a very wise statement from a very wise man; after making a few more statements like that, the people of New Jersey certainly should have him sized up.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire further yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. SMATHERS. I take it that the Senator is allergic to United States Attorneys General, for I very distinctly remember the two or three bitter attacks that he made on Mr. Justice Murphy before he went to the Supreme Court. The Senator from New Hampshire does not care for United States Attorneys General at all. Is that the answer?

Mr. BRIDGES. I will answer the Senator from New Jersey. I like men of action. I like somebody who gets action. I did oppose Mr. Murphy for Attorney General of the United States when his name came up for confirmation, but at the same time Mr. Murphy did a better job as Attorney General than I expected him to do. He went ahead in many cases which rather surprised me; and, as compared to Mr. Jackson, I take off my hat to Mr. Murphy if we have to get down to a comparison, just as I would take off my hat to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] if I had to compare him with Mr. Jimmy Cromwell. [Laughter.]

When is Mr. Jackson going to take action on the numerous charges as to vote frauds in Chicago in the 1938 congressional elections, including the charge that some precincts had reported vote totals without even counting ballots—charges of official corruption?

Remember that the other day, out in Chicago, again the Kelly-Nash machine was functioning. Once again a big vote was rolled up, 7 to 1, for Mr. Roosevelt. I wonder if that machine has been left in power in order that it may deliver for the gentleman in the White House. Perhaps the Senator from New Jersey can answer that question. I do not know.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire further yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. SMATHERS. I thought the Senator from New Hampshire would be worried about the vote that was rolled up out in Illinois.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me tell the Senator something. I am not worrying about the total Roosevelt vote, but I am very much interested in the total Garner vote, because the Garner vote represents anti-third-term sentiment in the Democratic Party. It means, to my mind, that if Mr. Roosevelt or any other new dealer is nominated by the Democratic Party, it is going to be defeated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Democrats, of course, appreciate the Senator's interest in the Garner-Roosevelt vote; but is the Senator wholly disinterested as to the Dewey-Vandenberg vote in Wisconsin and Nebraska and other States?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I followed that with interest; and if the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] had been able to leave his work in the Senate and go out there, he and the Republican Party probably would have polled a larger vote in those States. I may say that I can appreciate that the Senator from Kentucky has an interest in these things, because, by comparison again, I certainly would take off my hat to him as the candidate of the Democratic Party compared to Mr. Jackson and some of the other would-be candidates.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. SMATHERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire further yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky. Then I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's compliment, but I hope he does not damn me with too much faint praise.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator comment on his opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] in his capacity as candidate for the Presidency of the United States.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that the Senator from New Hampshire is a rather biased witness so far as his own candidacy is concerned. Undoubtedly he thinks well of his own candidacy. [Laughter.]

I might say, in answer to the Senator from Kentucky, that I realize that when I compared him with Mr. Jackson, and said the Senator from Kentucky would be a better candidate, it was faint praise; but I would even be willing to add on a little for good measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield at that point, I thank him for announcing my candidacy, but I believe I shall be able to attend to that myself if it should ever develop.

I wish to say to the Senator, however, that I am not interested in or disturbed by his diatribes against Mr. Jackson or anybody else in the Democratic administration. I do not know just what his peculiar point of grievance against Mr. Jackson is; but I regard Mr. Jackson not only as one of the ablest men in the public service but as a sincere public servant. While I am not familiar with the details of the prosecution of all the indictments which have been brought by grand juries in the United States against persons charged with crime, I am quite satisfied that whatever Mr. Jackson's action has been in that regard it has been prompted by a sincere, disinterested motive to bring about justice in the courts of the United States.

The Senator from New Hampshire evidently does not agree with that statement, and he would not agree with any reasons which Mr. Jackson might assign for any action which has been taken in regard to any of these cases; but the mere fact that a few indictments, or even the 17 indictments referred to by the Senator in Detroit—the details of which I have not on my desk, and which I do not intend to discuss without the details—have been dismissed, and that indictments against other persons in New York or elsewhere are being tried, certainly offers not even superficial evidence that Mr. Jackson has been motivated by anything except a desire to see that his Department carries on the dispensation of justice as it ought to be done, however much the Senator may disagree with Mr. Jackson.

The Senator does not in any way impugn the motives of Mr. Jackson, as he stated at the beginning of his remarks. He does not in any way doubt Mr. Jackson's ability. I do not think he would doubt his sincerity. Whether some of these men may be Communists, I do not know; whether they sympathized with the Spanish Republic, I do not know. The newspapers carried the statement that they were active in some way in fomenting some assistance to the Spanish Republic during the Spanish revolution. Frequently men who are technically guilty of some violation of law cannot be convicted, and those in charge of prosecutions do not feel that the ends of justice would be served by entering upon trials in cases of that sort. I do not know about that. I have not asked Mr. Jackson anything about any of these cases. However, it seems to me that the mere fact that a group of men in Detroit were dismissed and a group in New York are being tried cannot be regarded in any way as a reflection either upon the motives or the sincerity or the ability or the public service of the Attorney General.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator from Kentucky is using his generally very generous gracious efforts in coming to the defense of Mr. Jackson. I know he has very blindly come to the defense of Mr. Roosevelt in the past, and I am not surprised that he blindly comes to the defense of Mr. Jackson.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not saying what I do say as a matter of generosity. I am saying it as a matter of justice.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator admits he has no facts.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have never defended anyone blindly.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator certainly is defending Mr. Jackson blindly, is he not?

Mr. BARKLEY. If I were to defend the Senator from New Hampshire, which I might some time be called upon to do, I would not do it blindly.

Mr. BRIDGES. I admit the Senator might have to do that blindly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not ever do it blindly. If I did it, I would do it with my eyes open.

Mr. BRIDGES. I would like to have the Senator tell me how he can say he is not defending Mr. Jackson blindly when he stands here and says he knows nothing about these cases. He says he has faith in Mr. Jackson because he is Mr. Jackson. I merely said that I thought it due to his usual gracious inclination of blindly defending new dealers.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not read the indictments against these men. I have not read the proof. I do not know what the witness would swear to. All I know is probably all the Senator knows, what he has read in the newspapers, that these cases have been dismissed.

Mr. BRIDGES. At times the newspapers are a very good source of information.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is true, but in stating that the indictments have been dismissed, the newspapers do not carry any information as to the evidence which could be adduced on the trials, or whether convictions could be had or not. I am perfectly frank in saying that I have not investigated the details of these cases; but the mere fact of their dismissal, the mere fact that there were 17 of them, carries no conviction as to anything at all, because not only in the Federal courts but all over the United States, in the district, city, county, and State courts, men are frequently indicted, and then the indictments are dismissed, because it turns out later that the indictments were either a mistake, or the men could not be convicted, or that the ends of justice do not require the continuation of the prosecutions.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would the Senator from Kentucky be surprised if I should produce a statement by United States District Attorney John C. Lehr and United States Marshal John L. Barc, who had charge of these cases, questioning the advisability of Mr. Jackson dropping the cases? Apparently there is a division in the Department of Justice.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be. The Senator asked me if I would be surprised at him producing that information. Whether I would be surprised or not is entirely beside the question. I am not surprised, I will frankly say. I am not familiar with the circumstances under which those statements were given out, whether they were given out before or after the dismissal. What difference does it make, anyway?

Mr. BRIDGES. It does make some difference when a man assumes the office of Attorney General of the United States, when there are pending against 17 outstanding Communists in this country indictments brought by his predecessor in office, Mr. Murphy, and in one of his first official acts as Attorney General he dismisses those indictments with a weak excuse such as I will insert in the RECORD, and then proceeds to prosecute other cases in the city of New York.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think that because these cases in Detroit were dismissed those in New York ought to be dismissed?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I think they all should be prosecuted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to pass on the guilt or innocence of those men; they are now being tried in the courts——

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. The courts will pass on that question.

Mr. BRIDGES. In the Detroit cases Jackson passed on the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Jackson passed on it, I presume, by advising that the cases be dismissed.

I have not seen the statement of the United States marshal——

Mr. BRIDGES. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what his statement was or the occasion for it, but it is a little unusual for a United States marshal, whose duty it is to carry out the orders of the court, to arrest people and keep them in custody and perform other ministerial duties in connection with his office, to decide whether the Attorney General of the United States has acted wisely in determining whether a case should be dismissed or not. The district attorney, who has some duty in connection with prosecutions, may have an opinion upon it, but it does not strike me as the duty of the United States marshal to pass on such a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield that I may ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from New Hampshire thinks the marshal should be Attorney General and probably the Attorney General should be the marshal? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the inference to be drawn from the statement that the United States marshal has criticized the action of the Attorney General in determining whether these cases should be prosecuted.

Mr. BRIDGES. For the benefit of the Senator from Texas, that might go in Texas but probably not in Michigan, where the cases have been pending.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. What makes the Senator from New Hampshire reach the conclusion that someone should defend Attorney General Jackson?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not know why anyone should defend him, but I think perhaps before he gets through he will either have to defend himself or someone else will have to defend him; and I am sure the Senator from New Jersey would be a very able defender for him. Of course, I do not wish to incite the Attorney General to go to New Jersey and investigate the Hague machine. Nevertheless, I would not feel bad if he did. I just brought out the New Jersey situation as a matter of course.

I wish to ask one or two more questions. When is Mr. Jackson going to take action on numerous charges against officials and the policy of corruption at Miami, Fla., involving Federal phases?

What does Mr. Jackson propose to do about graft, "hot oil", and income-tax fraud indictments already returned against leading Democratic New Deal politicians in Louisiana?

What does Mr. Jackson intend to do about the indictment of Willie Bioff in Los Angeles, Calif., on charges of owing the United States $84,336.40 on his 1936–37 income?

When will he take action upon vote-fraud charges in other sections, which involve Federal charges, congressional elections, and kindred matters?

Mr. President, in order to make the record complete and not to occupy the time of the Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Washington Times-Herald of March 31, 1940, under the headline "United States Spy Jury Passes; Only One Indicted."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SPY JURY PASSES; ONLY ONE INDICTED—HAS LITTLE TO BOAST IN 10-WEEK INQUIRY

(By Samuel Shaffer)

Born of spy fears which swept the Department of Justice after the outbreak of war in Europe, the special grand jury, impaneled in January to probe subversive activities of foreign agents in America, folded its tents last week and, like the proverbial Arab, silently slipped away.

Few investigating groups in recent years have gotten under way to the fanfare of publicity that surrounded this grand jury.

THE FANFARE FADES

But the fanfare expired with expiration of the jury's time limit. Despite a probe that lasted 10 weeks, the record discloses only one major accomplishment—the indictment of the director of a travel agency in New York City, for failure to register with the Department of State as a foreign agent.

Within 24 hours after he was indicted, Jacob Raisin, director of World Tourists, Inc., pleaded guilty before Justice Peyton Gordon in the United States district court, was fined $500 and given a suspended sentence of 4 months to a year.

Last December the then Attorney General Frank Murphy announced a special grand jury would be impaneled to devote itself exclusively to subversive activities.

LISTED "RED" OFFICIALS

The Department of Justice, Murphy said, had evidence of carefully planned sabotage by foreign agents in munitions, airplane, and automobile factories. He listed by name a number of Communist Party officials who were suspected of stealing American military secrets.

No indictments have been returned against saboteurs or spies.

Murphy's announcement came on the heels of complaints of Representative MARTIN DIES, chairman of the House committee investigating un-American activities, who had accused the Justice Department of failure to do anything about the menace of subversive agents.

Shortly after the jury was impaneled, Murphy was named to the United States Supreme Court as Associate Justice to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice Pierce Butler.

SOURCE OF EMBARRASSMENT

The failure of the special grand jury to accomplish much is a source of great embarrassment to the Department of Justice. The reason why so little was done is just beginning to leak out.

The investigation of subversive activities by the Department of Justice was far from complete when Murphy announced the grand-jury probe.

The announcement came as a painful surprise to those agents in the Department engaged in digging up evidence. They asked for more time before impaneling the jury, but they were told it had to be done at once. The order went out during the Christmas season that the grand jury was to begin hearing evidence on January 2.

It was impossible, however, to impanel the jury before January 16 because the statute requires that 550 persons be subpenaed before the final 23 are selected.

GET 2-WEEK RECESS

A month after the probe began the jury had to be given a 2-week recess because the investigators ran out of material. Thereafter, the jurors seldom heard evidence more than 3 days a week because there was so little evidence to place before them.

The probe did accomplish a few things in addition to the lone indictment. Officials of the International Publishers and Workers' Library, Inc., hastened to the State Department to register as agents of the Soviet Union.

An investigation was made of the financial sources and the control of the Communist Party publications, Daily Worker and New Masses. The information turned up, it is reported, will be turned over to New York City authorities for further action there.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I also ask to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the New York Times on Saturday, April 6, 1940, under the headline "Plot To Seize United States Traced by Witness."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

PLOT TO SEIZE UNITED STATES TRACED BY WITNESS—HEALY SAYS HE ABETTED PLANS AND KEPT F. B. I. INFORMED—"RED PLANT," DEFENSE HOLDS

The 17 defendants now on trial in the Brooklyn Federal court for activities in the Christian Front were pictured yesterday as having been in training to become squad leaders through a long period of disorder and street fighting that they expected would culminate in a Communist revolution abetted by Government officials and a counterrevolution in which the Christian Front would take over the United States Government.

Seated almost directly beneath the folds of an American flag that stood beside the witness chair, Dennis A. Healy, an expert machine gunner of the New York National Guard, testified for 2 hours that he had participated in numerous meetings of the alleged plotters, meanwhile keeping the Federal Bureau of Investigation informed from day to day of every development.

Documenting his story with a brown paper notebook to which he referred constantly for names, dates, and extensive conversations, Healy told at length of how the conspirators had urged him to steal dynamite with which to bomb the Daily Worker, Communist newspaper, and had promised to have policemen on duty nearby to expedite the getaway of the bomber.

Large numbers of policemen, firemen, and members of the military and naval services were members of the anti-Semitic, anti-Communist group, according to Healy, who said that he had been informed last fall that its membership was already 300,000 and was growing by "leaps and bounds." He said that he had been assured that high officers of the National Guard would cooperate with the Christian Front when the expected Communist revolution began.

MENTIONS OFFICERS IN GUARD

Healy said he had been assured by William Gerald Bishop, one of the 17 defendants on trial, that certain officers of the New York National Guard, including Brig. Gen. Alexander E. Anderson, Lt. Col. Martin H. Meaney, of the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Infantry, and Capt. John T. Prout, Jr., of the same regiment, had told him that when the revolution came they would "hold the armories for the Christian Front."

Brigadier General Anderson is commanding officer of the Ninety-third Infantry Brigade of the New York National Guard. Lieutenant Colonel Meaney of the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Regiment is also fifth deputy police commissioner. Efforts to communicate with them were not successful last night. Captain Prout is one of the defendants on trial.

In his account of the alleged plottings, Healy referred indiscriminately to the Christian Front and to the action committee to which the defendants are alleged to have belonged, but in his opening address to the jury Harold M. Anderson, United States attorney, had emphasized that the members of the committee, and not the Christian Front as a whole, were on trial.

Mr. Anderson, in his brief and matter-of-fact summary of what he expected to prove, said the defendants had been trained to gather about them people who could be convinced that a Communist revolution was imminent; that the Government was communistically inclined, and that they could and should take over the Government. To further this purpose, he said, they stole quantities of ammunition through the cooperation of members of the National Guard.

CHARGE COMMUNIST "PLANTS"

The entire indictment is based upon the activities of two provocateurs who were "planted" by the Communist Government of Russia, the Communist Party of New York State, and by "certain officials holding high Government positions in Washington" with the object of eventually discrediting the Christian Front, former Magistrate Leo J. Healy, who is defending 11 of the 17 men on trial, told the jury.

Contending that the defense would show that if there was any conspiracy at all, it was simply a conspiracy to block the efforts of "the Communist front" to overthrow the United States Government,

Mr. Healy said that his clients were loyal, law-abiding American citizens whose one desire was to protect the Constitution of the United States.

The defense lawyer said that one of these two provocateurs bore his own last name—Dennis Healy, who appeared on the stand for the Government. He charged that Healy had often invited some of the defendants to his home in Queens, where F. B. I. agents listened through dictaphones to their conversations, and that on the night the arrests were made Healy begged the defendants to make certain admissions on the promise that this would save them from indictment.

Although he never named the second provocateur, the defense counsel pictured him as a brilliant orator, the master of five languages, who persuaded some of the young men that he had served with Lawrence in Arabia, had been personal secretary of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, and later had held a commission in the British Army.

IDENTIFIES PROVOCATEUR

The identity of the second provocateur was not left in doubt very long, however. A few minutes after Mr. Healy had finished, Walter N. Thayer, counsel for Captain Prout, identified the provocateur as Bishop, the only one of the 17 defendants who has been unable to obtain his release in bail pending the trial. From the remarks of Mr. Thayer and other defense lawyers who followed, it was evident that most of the defendants would try to throw the blame for anything sinister entirely on Bishop's shoulders.

So great was the cumulative effect of the uncomplimentary references to Bishop by counsel for both sides that when his own lawyer, Emanuele Trotta, rose to make his opening address to the jury, he asked them to remember that Bishop, too, was one of the defendants and asked that judgment on him be reserved until he had had a chance to prove his innocence.

Before the opening of the session yesterday Judge Marcus B. Campbell, who is presiding, called into his chambers the lawyers for both sides; Harry Bates, a reporter for the Associated Press; Roger D. Green, a rewrite man for that organization; and Max Hill, city editor of the Associated Press in New York, to pursue his investigation of a story sent out by the news service Wednesday to the effect that the Government would seek an all-Protestant jury for the case.

The conference lasted for about 45 minutes, and afterward those who were present declined to reveal what had occurred, or even to disclose whether the investigation had been completed or some further action might be expected.

Headed by its woman foreman, Mrs. Helen R. Titus, the jury filed into its box, and Mr. Kennedy began his outline of the case. At the outset he declared that "neither race nor religion is on trial here" and asked the jurors to consider solely whether the defendants had, as charged, conspired to overthrow the Government by force and had conspired to steal Government property.

TRACES HISTORY OF GROUP

"We expect to prove that in the spring of 1939 a loose organization known as the Christian Front was functioning in Brooklyn," the youthful prosecutor said. "In the late spring the defendant Cassily (John F. Cassidy) and some others began to put into force a plan to make that organization, or a part of it, into a military organization. As part of their plan to do so they organized a shooting club."

About the same time, Mr. Kennedy said, these men were holding meetings at which communism was denounced and charges were made that "Communists held key positions in the United States Government." Also about this time Bishop, whom Mr. Kennedy described as an alien illegally in this country since 1926, began addressing Christian Front meetings. The prosecutor said he did not use his correct name, but was known as "plain Bill" and on one occasion as Robinson.

"About July secret meetings of an action committee began to be held," Mr. Kennedy went on. "The 17 members were to be trained to be squad leaders, who were to group around them people who were persuaded that the Communist revolution was imminent, and that they were to take over the Government.

"They began to accumulate powder and munitions, to stir up trouble, and cause disorder at such spots as the Cameo Theater and the American League for Peace and Democracy. They expected that it would take at least 5 years to create the situation they wanted, in which there would be imminent fear of a Communist revolution."

Mr. Kennedy said they obtained the assistance of certain members of the National Guard for the theft of materials from various Government armories.

DEFENSE IS OUTLINED

He was followed by former Magistrate Healy, a large, bald-headed man, who begged the jurors not to confuse the 17 defendants with the almost equally numerous defense counsel. Mr. Healy said that the 11 defendants he represented would present 11 distinct defenses, but that all were equally innocent.

"We will prove by a mass of testimony that there are three fronts in this case," he declared. "There is a Christian Front and a Jewish Front, both of which are excellent fronts, resting on true American principles, but we will also prove there is a third front—the front of communism—which is a bad front, absolutely opposed to the Christian Front and the Jewish Front."

Mr. Healy promised to prove by the testimony of defendants and others that "the touchstone of the action committee was the defense of the Constitution of the United States," and he said he agreed with Mr. Kennedy that the action committee, and not the Christian Front as a whole, was under indictment.

"We will prove that this whole indictment is founded on the testimony of provocateurs, whom we will prove are in the employ of the Communist Government of Russia and the Communist Party of the United States, to stir up religious bigotry and discontent and un-Americanism—that they were planted by the Communist Party and by certain officials holding high Government positions in Washington," Mr. Healy asserted.

After court had recessed he was asked about the Government officials and he replied that he had said "Communists who hold public office," which, he explained, was a broad term that might include Members of Congress or anyone else in an official position.

Mr. Healy told the jury that John A. Viebrock, one of the defendants, had listened to "the ravings and the rantings of the provocateur" to get evidence on which he could make a complaint to the Government.

He said that when 18-year-old William Bushnell, Jr., was arrested, the F. B. I. agents found in his home "a rusty blunderbuss, a relic of the American Revolution," and a sword that Bushnell's grandfather had carried in the Civil War and had made this the basis for charging him with the illegal possession of weapons.

SAYS AGENT PLAYED ON FEARS

Macklin Boettger, another defendant, was persuaded by provocateur No. 155 to study communism "from a theoretical standpoint," Mr. Healy went on, and he told how 19-year-old John F. Cook was to have been graduated from Textile High School less than a week before his arrest in January. Mr. Healy revealed how provocateur No. 1 had played on Cook's fears.

"He kept saying, 'You're going to have trouble with the Communists; you'd better be ready; you need better training,'" the lawyer said. "And when this defendant asked, "What's the matter with the police?' he was told, 'LaGuardia won't let the cops have billies when the Communists have meetings in Madison Square Garden, and the C. I. O. has 3,000,000 rifles in a cache in New York City.'"

Mr. Healy said that the provocateur told Cook that he had proof that if Browder were convicted at his trial, which was then approaching, "the Communists will rise" and that "I'm an army man and I'm going to train you to be ready to cooperate with the police and the National Guard."

John F. Cassidy, the so-called leader of the Christian Front, had had Bishop thrown out of its meetings, according to Mr. Healy, who said that Cassidy had passed his bar examinations and was to have appeared before the character committee for admission to the bar only 3 days before his arrest. The lawyer charged that the Government has in its possession a statement Cassidy had written complaining of Bishop's activities. F. B. I. agents seized it, he said, just before Cassidy intended to turn it over to the Government.

He went through the roster of his remaining clients, Leroy Keegan, Claus Ernecke, Edward J. Walsh, Francis W. J. Malone, minimizing the parts they had played and telling how Bishop and Dennis Healy had tried to lead them into trouble. He said that Walsh's only connection with the case was that he was visiting his sister, Boettger's wife, when the F. B. I. men came and decided to take him along, too.

REQUEST FOR AMMUNITION

Mr. Thayer said that Captain Prout, whom he represents, met Bishop at the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory and was impressed by his knowledge of military affairs. He said that Prout declined Bishop's invitation to join his shooting club, and that Bishop asked him for any ammunition that might be available.

Some time later, after his company had been drilling at Camp Dix, Captain Prout found that 1,500 rounds had been left over, Mr. Thayer said, and he ordered the supply sergeant to return it to the Ordnance Department. He found out later that the sergeant had failed to comply with orders and rather than go through with the red tape that would have been necessary to return it then, he gave the ammunition to Bishop for his club, according to Mr. Thayer.

Francis Adams, on behalf of Michael J. Beirne, said that his client had a good job with the New York Telephone Co., that he was married and had two children, a nice home and an automobile, and asked the jury what possible motive he could have had for plotting to overthrow the Government.

Edmund D. Wilson, attorney for Andrew Buckley and Alfred J. Quinlan, both sergeants in the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Infantry, said that Buckley met Bishop at the armory of that regiment and was invited by him to a study club in Brooklyn. The meetings were very innocent and rather tiresome to Buckley, Mr. Wilson said, but when the F. B. I. agents went to Buckley's home at the time of the round-up they found an empty howitzer shell he had brought back from Plattsburg several years before, intending to make a lamp of it, and so they arrested him. As for Quinlan, Mr. Wilson said, his only offense was in turning over the surplus ammunition to Bishop at Captain Prout's orders.

When Mr. Trotta rose to speak on behalf of the mysterious Mr. Bishop, he added to the mystery of his client's past. He said that Bishop himself did not know who his father was. Bishop and his mother were interned in Austria for the duration of the war, he said, and then for several years wandered about the world, with no place they could call home.

While Bishop, a slight, rather handsome man, with wavy, chestnut hair, sat listening impassively, Mr. Trotta said that he had enlisted in the Spanish Foreign Legion under Major Franco and had served so well that at the end of 2 years he was discharged with the highest military honors. After that he came to the United States, Mr. Trotta said.

Taking cognizance of statements by some of the other defense lawyers to the effect that Bishop had sometimes claimed to have been expelled from the Communist Party, Mr. Trotta said that, as a matter of fact, Bishop had never been a Communist, but had always been a very bitter enemy of communism.

The first witness to take the stand after the opening addresses was Sgt. Henry F. Fischer, of a machine-gun platoon of Troop A of the One Hundred and First Cavalry, New York National Guard. He testified that Ernecke was also a member of the troop and had tried to persuade him to join a secret organization, to which Ernecke belonged, that he said had one or two light machine guns.

He said I would be surprised at the type of people who belonged to it, such as policemen and firemen, and some very well-known people, Sergeant Fischer said. He said that the sellers of Social Justice were not a pack of dopes, and were ready to swing into action.

To the evident interest of the crowd that filled the courtroom, Mr. Kennedy next called Dennis Healy to the stand. He is a ruddy, neatly groomed man of medium height, dressed in a well-fitting brown suit. He seemed calm and precise as he told his story under the questioning of T. Vincent Quinn, one of Mr. Kennedy's assistants.

Born in Dublin 36 years ago, he came to this country in 1926, and is now a citizen, he said, with a job with the New York Central Railroad as a junior civil engineer. He said he had been a member of a machine-gun platoon of Troop A of the One Hundred and First Cavalry for 2½ years.

SAYS HE RESENTED REBUKE

He said that he had known Ernecke for several years, and that once, when Ernecke was reprimanded by an officer, he had later said he would take that from a German officer but not from any American officer. He said Ernecke had often spoken of returning to Germany to fight for the Reich.

After talking to Ernecke and to Sergeant Fischer last June or July, Healy went on, he communicated with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and from then on he remained in close touch with agents of the Bureau. He said that Ernecke tried to persuade him to join an organization he described as anti-Semitic and anti-Communistic. Healy said that under the guidance of F. B. I. agents he continued his contacts with the group.

He told of going to a Christian Front meeting in Erasmus High School last September 7, at which he said Boettger, Cassidy, Byrne, Malone, Michael Vill, John A. Graf, and others were present. He said Ernecke introduced him to them as a "future machine-gunner for the Christian Front," and that later he was introduced from the speaker's platform as a squad leader, but he did not recall by whom.

"Was Cassidy given any title?" Mr. Quinn asked.

"We knew him as 'Little Fuehrer,'" the witness replied as a snicker ran through the courtroom. Later he said that Cassidy was known as "President of the Christian Front," and Bishop as his military aide.

Ernecke told him at another meeting, Healy went on, that the organization was formed to "eradicate the Jews," and that its membership was 45-percent Irish, with the balance made up of Italians and Germans. He said that Ernecke held out to him the example of Hitler's success and the high positions that it had brought to his few early followers, and said that "if we got in on the ground floor, we would be high in time, too."

Healy declared that there was a difference of opinion on whether the action committee, which, he said, was also known as the Sports Club and the Country Gentlemen, should have military training, and that Cassidy backed up Bishop in his contention that it should.

SOUGHT TO MAKE JEWS RIOT

"The organization was to build up and train men to be officers, who in time could train other men," Healy testified. "The ultimate idea was to incite the Jews to riot and then have a revolution and a counterrevolution."

He said that at a meeting in Prospect Hall, and many times thereafter, Bishop said that General Anderson, Colonel Meaney, and Captain Prout had told him "that when the revolution had come, the National Guard, if ordered by higher-ups to dislodge the Christian Front from arsenals and armories, they would request the Christian Front to leave the armories, and the National Guard officers would hold the armories for the Christian Front."

Mr. Thayer complained that this statement "doesn't make sense to me," but Judge Campbell let it stand.

Healy told of "lightning badges," which he said were issued to members of the action committee, and said they resembled the badges worn by the Hitler youth movement in Germany. He rose from the witness chair and held his arm straight up when Mr. Quinn asked him to show the salute of the organization.

"I think that the palm should be bent up a little bit, sor," he said in his soft brogue, turning his hand to correspond with his words.

At another meeting Bishop said there was a good deal of talk of the United States entering the war, Healy went on.

"He said that if the United States should enter the war, the action committee would stay at home and commit acts of sabotage," the witness proceeded calmly. "He said that the Jews would stay home and defile the women of the United States, and so we would stay and take care of them."

Healy identified a rifle of the 1903 army model, but with a sporting stock, which he said he had bought for $29.53 through Bishop. As the court clerk marked it for identification, he unintentionally pointed it at Magistrate Healy, who protested sharply. The clerk swung it around so the muzzle was pointing toward Judge Campbell, who seemed unconcerned at this procedure.

Healy was still on the stand when adjournment was taken until Monday morning.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Journal American of Friday, March 15, 1940, relative to the statements of the United States marshal and United States district attorney in Detroit, which I have discussed with the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Journal American, March 15, 1940]

CLEAR HOOVER IN DETROIT QUIZ—F. B. I. CHIEF DIDN'T INSTIGATE PROBE OF RECRUITING FOR THE LOYALISTS

DETROIT, March 15.—Back of the Spanish Loyalist investigation in Detroit, which has been made a part of the Communist-inspired campaign to smear J. Edgar Hoover, Chief of the F. B. I., is a story of switched orders and misrepresentation, with Hoover's Department as the apparent goat.

That story came today from United States District Attorney John C. Lehr and United States Marshal John L. Barc. It disproves the loose gossip that Hoover:

(1) Instigated the investigation;

(2) Chained the prisoners taken as a result of the recruiting probe or,

(3) Made any special issue of the case.

Barc said sentiment was against dropping the cases as they later were on orders from Attorney General Robert H. Jackson.

ORDERED TO PROBE

"The better element of Detroit—the patriots and patriotic societies—protested the release of these people," he asserted.

Lehr told International News Service that the recruiting of men for the Loyalist forces came to his attention in 1938. He informed Assistant United States Attorney General Brien MacMahon in Washington on May 12 of that year.

MacMahon told him, Lehr said, to investigate.

A few weeks later Assistant United States Attorney General John Rogge asked Lehr who told him to start the investigation. He replied "MacMahon," and was told by Rogge to drop the probe. Later Rogge reversed the order.

In December 1939, Rogge ordered Lehr to put his information before a Federal grand jury. On February 3 indictments were handed down.

Lehr asked bonds of $20,000 in six cases and $10,000 in four cases. He believed that if freed on a lower bond the defendants would leave the jurisdiction of the court.

Bond in the case of the single girl arrested was set at $2,500 and the same bonds were set for two doctors.

According to Marshal Barc, after arraignment, the prisoners became his charges, and the F. B. I. had nothing further to do with them.

Following his usual custom, the prisoners were handcuffed to a chain and taken to a cell block where the handcuffs were removed. The girl was not handcuffed at any time, according to Barc.

There are only four deputy marshals in the Detroit court and it is common practice to handcuff prisoners to a chain when their number exceeds that of the marshal's staff.

Lehr and Barc were of the opinion that the cases should have been prosecuted and that if they had been prosecuted there would have been no subsequent uproar about the handling of the prisoners.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I realize that the charges I have made are of some concern, but I think it is very wise that a man who occupies the position of Attorney General of the United States, who, it is rumored, is the favorite "fair-haired boy" of the White House as the President's choice as his successor, if he ever decides not to run, should have a few questions asked him as to some of these cases which have been so mysteriously quashed since Mr. Jackson took office as the highest law-enforcement official in the land.

PROPOSED TERRITORIAL EXPANSION OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, some week or so ago I offered a resolution authorizing the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with the British Government with a view to acquiring certain islands in the Caribbean, the island of Bermuda as well as British Honduras, which lies between Mexico and Guatemala.

At that time I stated that if negotiations could be consummated the amounts agreed upon as the purchase price should be credited to the indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States, which is in excess of $5,500,000,000.

At the same time I made a statement to the effect that I would the next day, or shortly thereafter, offer a similar resolution, which would have its application to the possessions of the French in certain portions of the Western Hemisphere. I had in mind the two main British islands in the Carribean. Of course, there are in the Caribbean innumerable smaller islands, such as Martinique and Guadeloupe. They are just north of Trinidad, that is north of Port of Spain, the capital of Trinidad.

I also had in mind Miquelon Island and St. Pierre. They are small islands which lie in the waters of Newfoundland. One of them is quite small, having an area of only 6 or 7 square miles. However, the larger has an area of 87 square miles.

The larger of those islands is admirably adapted for the establishment of a naval base, if we should find it necessary, or certainly for an air base in case we should ever be afraid of an attack from the northeast.

By the way, in speaking of being somewhat afraid of an attack from the northeast, I was greatly interested the other day when several representatives of the press called me over the telephone and wanted to know what my idea of the situation was in reference to the Germans attacking this country, since it had been reported that they had or were shortly going to take possession of Iceland and Greenland. One reporter suggested that he thought the American people would really be frightened at the thought of the Germans getting possession of Iceland and Greenland, for the reason that they might next make a step to American shores.

I did not know then the exact distance, but I called up the map division of the Library of Congress and I ascertained some facts which I find interesting. Iceland is 3,100 statute miles from the island of St. Pierre, which I mentioned a moment ago as being one of the islands possessed by the French in Newfoundland waters. Greenland is actually 1,700 statute miles from St. Pierre. In view of the fact that we learn that Greenland is actually 2,900 miles from New York City, I do not think the American people need have any fear of any enemy force attacking us from Greenland, because truly that distance is about equal to the distance from the city of New York to London.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator was predicting that we need have no apprehension of an attack. Of course, I am glad to have the assurance that the Senator is a prophet.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am always delighted to be interrupted by the Senator from Colorado. It is pleasant to be interrupted by my beloved and delightful friend from Colorado, because in making his interruptions he greets me so pleasantly with a smile which has unquestionably contributed for him thousands upon thousands of votes in Colorado. I am always glad to be interrupted by him.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has in mind a prediction which I made the other day, and I am going to come back to that later. Well, no, I had just as well discuss it now. [Laughter.] The other day in my discussion on the floor of the Senate, at which time I took occasion to disagree with Mr. Frederic William Wile, a very able columnist who writes in the Washington Star, I compared the attitude of Mr. Wile, who lives here in the capital city of Washington, with the attitude of the people of Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. At that time I stated that during the last war the Scandinavian countries had been entirely successful in keeping in the clear, in maintaining their neutrality, and in keeping out of the last World War, in which we unfortunately participated.

I read extracts from a newspaper article which I had that morning clipped from the columns of the Washington Times-Herald. I quoted one of the high officials of Norway, who stated that they were going to stay out of the present struggle; that they wanted to have nothing to do with the quarrels of Europe; that it was none of their business who won the war, and, for that matter, they did not care; that all they were interested in was the neutrality of Norway, and I argued that all they were interested in was the welfare of the people of Norway. I said the Norwegian people are going to stay out of the war, and, insofar as they were concerned, my prediction stands correct, because I assure my beloved friend that the Norwegians did not of their own individual personal accord violate their neutrality. It was their desire, it was their supreme wish, that they might be permitted to remain neutral, as for 4 years they had remained neutral during the World War.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. In confirming the distinguished Senator's prophecy, I may suggest that he apparently agrees with Hitler, because Hitler said also that he was not at war with Norway.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, I certainly do not agree with Hitler; I do not agree with Hitler at all. I condemn the aggressions of any power upon the face of the earth directed upon or against a weaker nation. Since the Senator has mentioned Hitler—I dislike to be going around in a circle, but, nevertheless, I shall come back to the subject of Norway—since the Senator has mentioned Hitler, let me say that I hope the United States may succeed in having the German Government and the German people pay their indebtedness to the United States of America, which amounts to millions of dollars. After the end of the World War we advanced millions upon millions of dollars to the German people for the purpose of rehabilitation. They built roadways, electrical plants, great buildings, and they owe us millions of dollars which they never have attempted to pay back. The only payment we have gotten from them is sneers and a lack of appreciation from the German Government for the aid which the United States of America gave Germany after the World War.

By the way, we must not forget that when Germany aggressed upon Czechoslovakia and Poland those countries were indebted to our country in the sums of millions of dollars, and I say that the German Government should be held entirely responsible for the debts of those countries.

Recurring to the suggestion made by my friend with regard to my prediction with respect to the neutrality of Norway, I say now, as I have heretofore said, that we all know from the reports in the columns of the press that it is plain that the situation was precipitated by the laying of mines in the neutral waters of Norway at a time when Norway was strictly desirous of maintaining what she claims to be a tradition, her neutrality, and we learned from the columns of the newspapers of today that prior to the march across the frontier of Denmark by the Germans both the Germans and the British had for weeks, or perhaps months, been preparing to enter the Scandinavian countries, perhaps to use them as a battleground.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to add a word to my appreciation for having heard what I knew I would hear—the vindication of the Senator's prophetic ability. I knew the Senator could vindicate himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very grateful to the Senator. As a matter of fact, to be perfectly frank, I always endeavor to provide myself with an "alibi." That is human nature. Who does not? [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. REED. Of course I have some reluctance in breaking in upon this mutual admiration society.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Please do not hesitate, because we will gladly welcome the Senator into our mutual admiration society.

Mr. REED. The Senator from North Carolina has expressed his belief that Germany is now or should now be held responsible for the payment of the debts which Czechoslovakia and Poland owed us. Is that correct?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, yes; I think that she should be held responsible.

Mr. REED. I wanted to inquire of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina if he has any plan in mind by which we could collect that money.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am sure that I have not now, but I wish to say to the Senator that I have given some thought to the matter. I have spoken with some who are supposed to be familiar with matters of that sort, and I hope that this Government may eventually be able to collect from the German Government some of the millions of dollars, in fact sums totaling into the billions, which it owes us. I have not thought about it for a year or so and my recollection is rather vague or dim with regard to the figures, but my present recollection is that the total amount which the German Government owes us is something in excess of $5,000,000,000, taking into consideration the loans made by us to them after the end of the war.

Returning to the original subject pertaining to the introduction of the bill, I am desirous of our acquiring islands in the Caribbean in order that we may more securely protect the eastern entrance to the Panama Canal, specifically and especially now for the reason that we contemplate the expenditure of $290,000,000 or $300,000,000 for the construction of another set of locks in the Panama Canal Zone. Even if that idea should be abandoned, and we should, on the other hand, decide later to construct a canal to the north of that section, nevertheless we should want additional protection of the Panama Canal, or of any canal from the Atlantic. As I stated the other day, we now have Puerto Rico, where we are spending a great many millions of dollars. I think that circle could be strengthened by peacefully acquiring the British and French islands in the Caribbean, from Port au Spain northward to Bermuda; and with the acquisition of Bermuda we should then have the only outpost in the North Atlantic.

I have in mind not only the acquisition of St. Pierre and Miquelon, near Newfoundland, for defense purposes and naval bases or airplane bases—if later we deem it necessary as the result of fear of an attack from the northeast—but, in addition thereto, the use of such places as jumping-off spots for our trans-Atlantic planes which travel the northern route at certain seasons of the year.

In reference to the matter of acquisition, I desire at this juncture to ask that there be printed as a part of my remarks an article from the London Times of March 4, 1920, page 13, entitled "Britain's Debt to America—Suggested West Indian 'Deal'," which article embodies a statement made by a former Secretary of the Treasury and former colleague in this body, Hon. William G. McAdoo, of California, who is now ably serving as chairman of the board of directors of the American President Lines. In 1920 Mr. McAdoo suggested that a partial liquidation of the obligations be made by the transfer of these possessions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[From the London Times of March 4, 1920]

BRITAIN'S DEBT TO AMERICA—SUGGESTED WEST INDIAN "DEAL"

NEW YORK, March 2.—With the object, presumably, of eliciting expressions of British opinion, Mr. W. G. McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury, today sponsors a suggestion which hitherto has enjoyed greater popularity in what might be termed strongly Nationalist Republican circles than among his own party colleagues—that Great Britain should wipe out "part" of her war debt to this country by selling the West Indies.

The suggestion—which the New York Times recently attributed in a humorous article to the fears of American prohibitionists lest Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, and other islands under the British flag might supply liquid relief to the victims of compulsory dryness—is discussed by Mr. McAdoo solely in its bearing on the financial relations of the British Empire to the United States. He observes:

"It is highly desirable, both on our own account and that of our Allies, that a settlement of our loans be rendered as quick and easy as possible. Our chief debtor is, of course, Great Britain, and this arises naturally out of the fact that Great Britain has liberally pledged her credit to sustain that of her Allies. We have now become the leading economic power of the world, and have developed the Panama Canal and the Navy and merchant marine, which make these islands more than ever important to us. The British Empire at this moment comprises one-sixth of the land area of the whole world, and, according to British economic experts, the surplus capital of the mother country will for many years to come be expended in the development of the agricultural and mineral resources of the great self-governing dominions and India. I imagine that Great Britain would not object to such a disposition of these islands, especially as they would go to a friendly power; and I see nothing in such a proposal to offend the just pride of a great people, whereas such liquidation of a portion of the British debt might be a happy solution of part of Great Britain's immediate financial problem.

"The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says the prosecution of a plan for the purchase of 'some part of Great Britain's territorial possessions in this continent, including the islands of the West Indies, will be the first task to which the new Secretary of State, Mr. Colby, will address himself when he enters on the duties of his office.' The correspondent observes that there is growing apprehension in administration circles lest there may develop through the summer and during the Presidential campaign a strong anti-British sentiment. The condition in which the debt of Great Britain to this country stands is the chief element of danger, and the administration is represented as taking the view that 'the proposed plan would go far to make the American people more reconciled to that debt.'"

"A FINAL QUIETUS"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR: I see by a cable in the evening papers that Mr. McAdoo, who was recently American Chancellor of the Exchequer, has suggested that the United States of America should buy from Great Britain all the islands in West Indian waters—i. e., the Bermudas, Jamaica, etc.—and give us credit against our debt in that country. A few months ago a similar suggestion was made from this side of the Atlantic in respect to certain of these islands (though Jamaica was excluded), and aroused great indignation in the islands themselves, as well as amongst many people over here who are not prepared to barter away these ancient, loyal, and strategically valuable possessions. On that occasion the proposal was negatived in public statements by Lord Milner and Colonel Amery. Now that the specter has arisen again from a different and not less influential quarter, I sincerely hope that His Majesty's Government will give it a final quietus.

I am yours faithfully,

GIDEON MURRAY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, March 3.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in this connection I ask unanimous consent to introduce the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) for the acquisition of French islands in the Caribbean and the North Atlantic Ocean, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, at this time I desire to bring to the attention of the Members of the Senate a page which I tore from the New York Daily News of Monday, March 25, 1940, which provides a very excellent map of Central America and the northern portion of South America, showing the territories of Venezuela, Colombia, and part of Ecuador, south of the Equator; likewise the islands of the Caribbean, Cuba, and Florida showing the immediate proximity of Bimini and Nassau to the coast of Florida. On the Pacific coast it shows Goose Island, which I believe belongs to Costa Rica; Cocos Island, a possession of Costa Rica; and a group of islands just south of the Equator belonging to Ecuador. I wish to read this article to the Senate. It is entitled "America's Maginot Line of the Sea."

Look at the six American flags sparsely scattered throughout the broad Caribbean Sea on this map. They are the principal protectors of the Panama Canal, one of the world's most valuable military properties, the key which makes possible the United States' unique two-ocean fleet. Theoretically, of course, every unit of our armed forces is a protector of the Canal, but for obvious reasons only those which are near the Canal are of main importance.

Now comes a plan, sponsored by several Members of Congress, for the United States to take from England certain of her West Indies islands in part payment of her unpaid war debt to us. Those islands which we would get are underlined on the map. Most of the Leeward Islands are British, as are most of the Windward Islands. We would also get British Honduras, an unimportant—except from a military standpoint—steaming tropical jungle in Central America.

Furthermore, the administration has spoken of buying Cocos Island, south of the Canal, from Costa Rica, and perhaps also the strategic Goose Island.

If these purchases and seizures were made, a ring of steel would be forged around Panama, as is indicated on the map. The protective net would guard even the Nicaraguan territory where a new canal may be dug.

It is important to remember that while Puerto Rico, for instance, is not a particularly valuable economic property, it is important to every American that the United States—and not another country—owns it, and that no foreign ships and shells are there.

And it is important for Americans to know that England has a naval base at Jamaica; France one at Martinique; and the Netherlands one at Curacao.

Because naval bases these days mean far more than slow battleships. They mean bombers—big and fast and deadly.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I have an article by which I was greatly impressed this afternoon when I read it. It is taken from the afternoon edition of the Washington Daily News, and is entitled "One Man's Opinion," by Hugh S. Johnson. I ask that this article be published in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from North Carolina what, if anything, to his knowledge has been done in relation to trying to obtain the islands about which he has been speaking today, and which he has mentioned as well at other times. I think he has been doing a really constructive work in bringing the matter before the American people time and time again. I wonder if he knows what has been done by the Executive in trying to obtain from Great Britain the islands which we think are necessary, especially now, as we cast our eyes out upon the world and see the quickly moving events. Has he any knowledge as to what has been done?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very grateful to the Senator for his suggestion. The resolution which I mentioned was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and several days ago I inquired of the chairman as to what disposition had been made of it. He replied that he had sent the resolution to the Department of Justice for its consideration and any suggestions the Department might have to make in reference to the matter.

Mr. President, I would that more of the American people appreciated what I believe to be a very important matter in connection with the acquisition of islands in that particular portion of the Western Hemisphere for the purpose, as I stated a moment ago, of safely guarding the Panama Canal from the Atlantic approach.

The other morning, in the Committee on Appropriations—I think the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] was there at the time—I recall that the committee voted either $290,000,000 or $300,000,000 for the construction of dual locks. I have not a very clear recollection of the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, since the matter is mentioned, I may state that the committee reported yesterday a bill carrying an item which, if approved by the Senate and House and signed by the President, will make available $15,000,000 with which to start the construction of a third set of locks. It is the second canal, but a third set of locks. The bill carries a contract authorization of $99,000,000 which may be exercised now; and the third set of locks, when and if completed, will cost approximately $277,000,000, I think.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Then I was not far wrong when I said $290,000,000.

I note that some of our colleagues look with disfavor upon the construction of additional locks in the Canal Zone. On the contrary, they favor the construction of a canal across Nicaragua. Regardless of which project we center our funds upon, I, like the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], am thoroughly of the opinion that if we are to make additional expenditures and investments there to guarantee our safe and unmolested transit through the canal from the west coast to the east coast, we should provide more protection than is provided by our only outpost there, which is at San Juan, Puerto Rico, which the senior Senator from Oklahoma visited during the past year on his tour of American fortifications. I hope some consideration of a serious nature may be given to this all-important question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator mentioned the possibility of constructing a second canal through Nicaragua, going from the ocean on the east to a lake, and through the lake to the ocean on the west. The record shows that we have expended to date almost $1,000,000,000 in the development of the Panama Canal. The record also discloses that to defend the Panama Canal we now have stationed there, or soon will have stationed there, approximately 25,000 soldiers. If we should go up north of Panama and develop a second canal, it would eventually cost perhaps an equal sum, $1,000,000,000; and then, when the new canal was constructed at that cost, we should be obliged to station there an equal number of soldiers, which would be approximately 25,000.

I submit this suggestion as in the nature of an argument against starting at this time the construction of a canal across Nicaragua.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say that even if the expense of building a canal at Nicaragua were slightly greater than the expense of building it at Panama—and I very much doubt whether it would be much more expensive—it would be infinitely safer. I think it is very dangerous to have only one canal by which we can get from the Pacific Ocean to the Atlantic Ocean. It seems to me that in time the Nicaragua Canal must be built, and now is a good time to start it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, for the information of the American public through the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma whether the additional canal which he mentioned a moment ago is to parallel the present Canal, or whether it is to be cut through a different portion of the Isthmus.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a very large part of the original Canal's cost was the construction of a gigantic lake. Of course, the construction of the big ditch and the numerous canal locks was expensive. It is now proposed to construct a second canal. The present Canal has two sets of locks. It is now proposed to dig a second ditch across the Panama Isthmus; and the second ditch will be in some places only perhaps two or three hundred yards from the present Canal. In some places it will be a third of a mile away, and in some places perhaps two-thirds of a mile; but it is to be practically parallel to the present Canal, varying, of course, according to the terrain.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. Frank C. Waldrop, published in yesterday morning's Washington Times-Herald, in regard to Iceland and Greenland.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of April 10, 1940]

HITLER STILL FAR FROM GREENLAND—WHERE WOULD HE BUILD BOMBING BASES IF HE GOT THERE?

(By Frank C. Waldrop)

Of all yesterday's tremendous news, nothing seems to have agitated certain volatile minds in Washington more than the story from London that the Nazis, having taken over Denmark, are also claiming Iceland and Greenland.

Before you declare war on the Nazis, remember that is just the sort of story London would have every reason to put out. Also, think what is involved in a transoceanic war for anybody.

The last time the United States went to war in Europe it had a friendly Asia at its back and it had a safe Atlantic on which to travel. Even so, it took us 13 months to get 500,000 men across, with the aid of the greatest body of naval and merchant marine force in history.

Those men landed at friendly ports, had friendly lines of communication, friendly supply bases, and safe conduct right up to the line of battle.

The American expedition to France was the most gigantic military maneuver in world history. It could not be repeated except under similar easy conditions.

This time we do not have a friendly Japan at our back, and our own Navy is tied to Hawaii as surely as if it were one of those little motorboats that spin around in the Reflecting Pool here on a string and stake.

There is no safe passage across the Atlantic. There is no safety once a force should debark, for if the Germans can bomb Scapa Flow they can also bomb London and Le Havre. There is just no chance of an easy combine of fleet and shipping power to shoot the Yanks over for the shooting in a blaze of glory.

These are not partisan representations or pacifist squirms, or pro-Nazi or anti-British sentiments. Just cold, stubborn facts. We can't go to war in Europe until we are sure of Japan. Are we?

Now, as to the Nazis landing expeditionary forces in Iceland and Greenland, that, too, presents a slight problem for even the versatile Fuehrer.

Granting that Hitler is just nutty enough to claim Greenland and declare the Eskimos a suppressed German minority, what is his next move? He certainly hasn't any friendly ocean between him and his objective. The British Fleet is still in being, as this is written, and doing very well for itself. Hitler's navy isn't likely to get clear of it for many a day to come, whatever the Berlin high command may be claiming at the moment.

And suppose he did get clear?

Iceland is four-fifths uninhabitable. It lies on the Arctic Circle far north of the Atlantic sea lanes. It produces nothing but hay, geysers, and herring.

Its 108,000 citizens are highly literate, quarrelsome, individualistic Aryans, who know nothing about modern war, but would be mighty mean to an invader.

Granted Hitler could smash them, he couldn't use their country for much. It has no harbor to shelter a fighting fleet.

There is no point in putting airplanes on it as Iceland is a long way from anywhere. About the best value would be as a submarine base. And everything, including the submarines, would have to be brought from Germany, as Iceland does not have even so much as a railroad. Moving a submarine base out to Iceland would take some doing as long as there is a Britain.

What goes for Iceland naturally goes for Greenland several times over. Iceland has at least one seaport big enough to anchor a destroyer, and that is Reykjavik—about the size of Biloxi, Miss., but not so nice.

Greenland's seacoast hardly needs to be described in detail.

Let's agree that landing a military expedition in Greenland, complete with bombing planes and poison gas for Montreal and Boston, is not a probability of the immediate future.

This is not an invitation for Hitler to invade this hemisphere. It is simply a reminder that such an invasion would be a complex and major effort requiring years of preparation and every imaginable aid.

The Fuehrer seems to have his hands full much closer home.

REORGANIZATION PLANS NOS. III AND IV

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, earlier in the day an Executive message, submitting Reorganization Plan No. IV, came to the Senate. I am especially interested in the phase of the plan which deals with the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I therefore send to the desk a concurrent resolution bearing on Reorganization Plan No. IV and also one bearing on Reorganization Plan No. III.

Tomorrow, or as soon thereafter as I may be heard, I desire to address the Senate in furtherance of my concurrent resolutions, the purpose of which would be to make for naught the Executive orders bearing on the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. ADAMS and Mr. AUSTIN rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I was about to ask the Senator from Nevada, in his remarks tomorrow, to give some consideration to the last paragraph in the President's message which accompanies Reorganization Plan No. IV, in which he says he intends to recommend the reenactment of the Reorganization Act without exemptions.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have that matter in mind, and I shall deal with it. In my judgment, that request merely means the rounding out of Executive control over all the affairs of this Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the concurrent resolutions submitted by the Senator from Nevada will be received and referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I did not know there was a select committee on that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has been so informed. The message of the President today went to that committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. I had the idea that the concurrent resolutions would go to the Committee on Commerce, but I may be mistaken. If I am, I am subject to correction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the parliamentarian that the resolution creating the committee provides that all such matters be referred to it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, am I correct in my recollection that about 2 years ago the Chair made a decision to the effect that a Senator introducing a bill or resolution might direct it to any committee he chose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that may have been the practice heretofore, but in the present case there is an order of the Senate referring such matters to the select committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. If that be true, and the parliamentarian so advises the Chair——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentarian has so informed the Chair.

Mr. McCARRAN. I accede to that ruling.

The concurrent resolutions submitted by Mr. McCARRAN were referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 42

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress does not favor the Reorganization Plan Numbered III transmitted to Congress by the President on April 2, 1940.

And—

Senate Concurrent Resolution 43

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress does not favor the Reorganization Plan Numbered IV transmitted to Congress by the President on April 11, 1940.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Edward H. Davidson, of New Jersey, to be Assistant Chief Inspector of Locomotive Boilers in the Interstate Commerce Commission, vice John Brodie Brown, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 12, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate April 11 (legislative day of April 8), 1940

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Edward H. Davidson, of New Jersey, to be Assistant Chief Inspector of Locomotive Boilers in the Interstate Commerce Commission, in place of John Brodie Brown.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we praise Thee that we are the children of one God, with common hopes, common aspirations, and with common destinies. As our souls are born for immortality, we pray that we may allow no ventures to daunt us, no tasks to tire us, and no thoughts to overwhelm us. As the days come and go, enable us to go on in vigor, in the way of a living trust, and with a faith that inbreathes the Divine, even as the new spring flower takes in the air and sunlight. The Lord God, stimulate our citizens with the genius of appreciation. Increase our reverence for those who laid down their lives in the struggle for human freedom, righteousness, and justice. Read our hearts, blessed Lord God: No thoughts can exhaust our wonder, no words can express the gratitude that we feel for those who labored and died to make our Republic possible. O Spirit of the Most High, send out the mighty streamers of Thy light far into the future years of our fair land until all humanity shall become sacred and all men shall have bread enough and to spare. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today at the conclusion of the legislative business and the special orders that have already been entered I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in connection with the invasion of Denmark and Norway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith a speech which I had the temerity to deliver at Portland, Maine, at the Maine Republican State Convention on April 4.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE WAGE-HOUR LAW

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I have recently heard some talk about "government by blackjack." Here is an example of it. A businessman writes me for certain blanks, saying if he applies to the Labor Department it will bring a host of investigators. He says:

> Fear is rampant, and the activities of the men who represent the wage-and-hour commission in this territory are nothing short of espionage which you might expect in Russia.
>
> We have buried at least five good men, cigar manufacturers, in the era starting October 24, 1938, until date, the last on Friday, B. S. Taylor, who listened to the troubles of a half dozen of his customers just a week ago, then died during the night. Today another cigar manufacturer was taken to the hospital, his condition serious. It has come to a pretty state in America when fear, threats, intimidations are the policy of the men who represent our Government. When decisions and interpretations and constructions are put on laws passed by Congress to fit the need, when one man can sit as judge, jury, and prosecuting attorney in a case in dispute, when the Federal courts are used when a man refuses to go along with a program that in his heart he feels wrong. We know how to remedy this condition * * * but the normal method is too slow. Business will be in disorder, customers will be lost, and men will continue to die from worry. We are not asking for any favors for ourselves, but all that can be done should be done for the hand cigar factories if they are to survive.

PHILIPPINE TRAVEL PAY BILL

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to quote from a committee report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to introduce in the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress H. R. 289, the Philippine travel pay bill to discharge a just obligation long owing by our Government to the veterans of the great volunteer army of the Spanish-American War. On April 17, 1939, the bill passed the House without a dissenting vote. On yesterday the bill was passed unanimously by the Senate and now goes to the White House.

The legislation will discharge the claim of the officers and enlisted men of the volunteer service of the War with Spain who continued to serve in the Philippines beyond the period of their enlistment. It provides for the payment to these volunteers of travel-pay allowance which they were first promised by their superior officers and then later denied because of a technicality. The men who were mustered out were given their travel pay and then immediately reenlisted without leaving the islands. The officers and men whose claims are covered by this bill were not mustered out at the termination of the War with Spain but at the request of their superior officers remained in the service and on the scene in order to be ready and available during the expected insurrection in the Philippines which followed. They were later sent home, true enough, but they did not receive the extra travel pay which the men who were earlier mustered out and later reenlisted received. On account of the technicality of mustering them out 1 minute and swearing them in the next minute was overlooked or neglected, these men have been deprived during the past 40 years of their travel pay which so many of their fellow comrades promptly received. In the case of many of the men this was due to the fact that they were widely scattered throughout the Philippines, were actually on the firing line, and it was a physical impossibility to muster them out and administer the oath of reenlistment as required by law. The men who received their travel pay constituted the Regular Army while these men who did not receive this allowance were volunteers. It is estimated that there are about 8,000 who will benefit and receive an average amount of approximately $400, at a total cost of about $3,200,000.

This bill passed the Seventy-fourth and Seventy-fifth Congresses but each time was passed at such a late date that it met with a pocket veto due, we believe, to a failure to properly submit all the facts to the President. President Roosevelt has many times proven his sympathetic attitude toward meritorious legislation in behalf of the veterans of our wars, their widows and dependents, and this has been particularly true in the case of the Spanish War veterans. We feel confident that if he is correctly and fully apprised of the historical background and facts supporting this measure that it will receive his approval. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of the Veterans' Administration, himself one of the most distinguished veterans of the Spanish-American War, and I are going to seek an early audience with the President to lay all the facts before him for his consideration.

I quote from the favorable report of the House Committee on War Claims, dated March 29, 1939, which sets forth quite fully the facts justifying this legislation:

Their retention in service followed an exchange of cablegrams between Adjutant General Corbin and General Otis, in command in the Philippines. On March 6, 1899, Adjutant General Corbin cabled, quoting section 15, act of March 2, 1899 (30 Stat. 981), in part, as follows:

"Section 15 of the Army bill reads in part as follows:

" 'That the President is authorized to enlist temporarily in service for absolutely necessary purposes in the Philippine Islands volunteers, officers and men, individually or by organization, now in those islands and about to be discharged, provided their retention shall not extend beyond the time necessary to replace them by troops authorized to be maintained under the provisions of this act and not beyond a period of 6 months.'

"The President inquires as follows:

" 'If we are not able to get you sufficient forces to replace volunteers under your command before exchange of ratification of treaty, will you be able to enlist your present volunteer force under this section?' "

On March 16, 1899, General Otis replied as follows:

"Believed after inquiry majority volunteer organizations willing to reenlist for 6 months from ratification of treaty, provided that upon original discharge are paid traveling allowances to places of muster in, and that after expiration of second enlistment they are transported to those places by United States."

This reply from General Otis was based on responses he had received from the several organizations of volunteers under his command to whom the inquiry from the President had been submitted. In some units the inquiry had been read to the men by their officers and voted upon, while in others where the men were scattered the officers had spoken for the men and agreed to reenlist and stay for the period required, not to exceed 6 months. The condition contained in the cablegram was in substance a statement of the law then in effect governing travel-pay allowances to officers and men discharged (honorably) and who were again appointed or who reenlisted.

On March 25, 1899, a general advance was ordered against the insurrectionists, and from that date until in June these volunteer troops were in active combat—some of them longer—in the campaign against the insurrectionists. They were required to meet unusual hardships in this campaign, fighting as they were under a tropical sun, badly equipped, without adequate food and water, and continually harassed by surprise attacks. When the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace arrived, April 11, 1899, these volunteers were in the field and continued so for months. It would have been a physical impossibility to have effected the signing of a muster-out roll and a muster-in roll, so that the service of these men would actually show a discharge and a reenlistment or reappointment, but these officers and soldiers believed when they accepted the duty of remaining on so long as their services were required in the Philippine Islands, not to exceed 6 months, that they had in effect reenlisted. Their services in the field were accepted and utilized by the Government following almost immediately the agreement to remain in service until troops to replace them could be supplied. This service in active combat continued until after the date of the conclusion of peace with Spain, for some units not longer than 3 months, for others and most of the troops in the volunteer service of the United States for the greater part of 6 months.

Had these officers and soldiers insisted upon their discharge as of the date of the conclusion of peace with Spain, it would have meant the abandonment of the islands to the insurrectionists except for the very limited number of Regular Army troops then in the islands.

The result would have been the retaking by the Aguinaldo forces of the territory then held by these volunteers, the strengthening of the insurrectionist organization, and the expenditure of many millions, not only for the transportation of another army to take up the fight again but also for a long and fierce combat by nonacclimated troops against well-equipped and well-organized native soldiers accustomed to the climate and acquainted with the country. The organized insurrection was broken by the continuous drive of the volunteers and the replacement troops which took their places had but to clear the country of unorganized detached bands. It is pertinent to remark here that the insurrectionists, numbering between 30,000 and 40,000, had been equipped and trained by the United States and had been cooperating with American troops in the War with Spain, and that knowing the volunteers were entitled to be discharged when the War with Spain terminated, they counted upon the withdrawal of the volunteers to make it possible for them to gain control of the islands and eventually their independence.

It is obvious that there is no legal liability on the part of the Government because the formality of mustering the troops out and mustering them in as again-appointed officers and reenlisted soldiers did not take place, but the men did perform valiant service, for which they were commended by President McKinley, and which Congress recognized by the awarding of a special medal; they did remain in service for from 3 to 6 months beyond the termination of the War with Spain on April 11, 1899, on which date they were entitled to their discharge; and they did this all believing that they were to be regarded as having reenlisted in the temporary forces authorized by section 15 of the act of March 2, 1899, and were thereby entitled to the travel pay and allowances authorized by then existing law as though their first enlistment had terminated on April 11, 1899, and they had entered upon a second enlistment beginning April 12, 1899. They fulfilled all the requirements of such temporary enlistment without having formally gone through the process of veteranizing.

Hon. Russell A. Alger, Secretary of War under President McKinley, had the following to say in his report:

"Any discussion of public affairs in the Philippines would be manifestly incomplete which did not include the highest eulogiums upon the western volunteers who remained in the Philippines fighting for their country's honor after they were legally entitled to discharge and return to the United States. The ratification of the treaty of peace, February 6, 1899 (April. 11, 1899), practically entitled all volunteer regiments and the individual members of the Regular Army, numbering many thousands, who enlisted for the war, to immediate discharge from the Army, and yet some of these volunteers did not leave the Philippines until 4 months subsequent to that date, while several of the regiments remained defending their country's flag for 7 months afterward. This is an exhibition of sturdy patriotism which, it seems to me, has never been fully appreciated. No complaint ever came from these soldiers on account of the hardships ever forming part of war, or for the delay in being returned to their homes after they were entitled to discharge. They yielded to the situation as cheerfully as they endured the great and fatiguing privations of hauling guns and carts over the mountain passes and through the trails of muck and mire under the enervating blaze of a tropical sun when even the native draft animals had been overcome with heat and exhaustion.

"The Nation, indeed, owes these noble soldiers a debt which I trust Congress will not fail to recognize in some substantial way."

From the manner in which the President's inquiry contained in Adjutant General Corbin's cablegram of March 6, 1899, was presented to them and the fact that their services were used as though they had reenlisted, these officers and men in the volunteer service of the United States honestly believed at that time that they were to receive travel pay and allowances on that account and that it would be paid to them upon final muster out, and it was not until they appeared to draw their final pay that they learned that the money which they understood and believed had been promised them was not available. They were told that the War Department had no funds and had made no arrangements for the payment, but that Congress would undoubtedly pass an act to pay them.

For over 30 years these men, the officers and soldiers of the volunteer service in the Philippines, have been seeking to get recognition from the Government for what they honestly feel is a just claim. It has been presented in one form or another in practically every Congress since their discharge from the service, but because of a lack of organized support from the men themselves, has failed of favorable action.

As bearing upon the right of these officers and soldiers of the volunteer service to be discharged on April 11, 1899, Comptroller of the Treasury Tracewell, in construing General Orders 54, dated March 22, 1899, and General Orders 67, dated April 11, 1899, said:

"But in construing said orders notice must be taken of the fact that under the provisions of section 4, act of April 22, 1898, supra, and section 15, act of March 2, 1899, supra, the members of the Volunteer Army who entered the service under the act of April 22, 1898, and amendments thereof, became entitled to their discharge on April 11, 1899.

"The fact that the exigencies of the service made it necessary to hold some of them in service to a later date, as soldiers have frequently been held in cases of emergency beyond the full term of their enlistment, did not abrogate their legal right to a discharge on the date of the close of the War with Spain.

"Section 1, act of January 12, 1899, supra, requiring the discharge of all officers and enlisted men from the volunteer service, as far as practicable, to be made at camps within the limits of the United States must also be considered.

"Whether it was practicable to discharge any particular soldier within the limits of the United States, or more for the interests of the Government to discharge him at the place where he was serving, was left by the act to be determined by the Secretary of War and 'public events of great public interest and widespread notoriety,' of which notice must be taken (16 Ct. Cls. 121; 3 How. 24), which made it most desirable to induce as many trained and acclimated soldiers as possible to remain in the islands, where they had been serving, support the conclusion that in issuing General Orders No. 54, supra, the Secretary of War considered primarily the interests of the Government and not the convenience of the soldier."

In a communication dated July 31, 1930, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, Comptroller General John R. McCarl, in discussing the provisions of an identical bill introduced in the Senate (S. 4403), said:

"Had these volunteers in fact been discharged on April 11, 1899, as thus held and administratively conceded they had a right to be, they would have been entitled to transportation and subsistence to the place in the United States to which returnable, or cash travel allowances in lieu; and had they in fact been so discharged, and had the President, under the authority conferred on him by the proviso to section 15 of the act of March 2, 1899, supra, authorized the volunteers then in the islands and about to be discharged to temporarily enlist for the time necessary to replace them by Regulars, not in excess of 6 months, and had they so enlisted, instead of, as in fact occurred, their continuance on in their existing enlistments for not exceeding 6 months pending their replacement, it would appear they would have been entitled to cash travel allowances on their discharge for close of the war, and again to travel allowances in kind or in cash on their discharge from their temporary enlisted service of not exceeding 6 months, or, in other words, to cash travel allowances from the Philippines back, additional to the travel allowances in kind and/or in cash they later in fact received on their return from the Philippines and discharge. What the bill, therefore, in effect appears to do is to pay these volunteers entitled to discharge on April 11, 1899, and who continued on for not exceeding 6 months, the cash travel allowances they presumably would have received had they in fact been discharged on said date, or, in other words, cash travel allowances on such a hypothetical discharge—additional to such allowances as in fact received on their later actual discharge."

Your committee feels that the Government, having received the benefits of the services rendered by these volunteers, who after April 11, 1899, on which date they were entitled to receive their discharge, continued in combative service until the organized insurrection had been broken and for various periods approaching 6 months after such date, should not now—nor at any time—avail itself of a technicality to deny to these brave and patriotic officers and the soldiers serving under them the travel pay and allowances which they understood and believed was to be paid them, and which, if not a legal obligation, is certainly a moral obligation on the part of the Government to pay. Thirty-nine years and more is entirely too long a time for the Government to withhold a payment of this obligation. Therefore, after careful consideration of all the facts, your committee unanimously recommends that the bill do pass as amended.

DIVORCING PRODUCTION, REFINING, AND TRANSPORTING OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS FROM THAT OF MARKETING PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 2318) to divorce the businesses of production, refining, and transporting of petroleum products from that of marketing petroleum products be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

THE JONES-BANKHEAD BILL

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, for several hours during a number of days recently the Committee on Agriculture of the House has held hearings on the Jones bill, H. R. 8748, which is a bill amending the Farm Credit Act. These hearings have clearly demonstrated that it is a fight over interest and for retention of control by "money markets" which is causing this legislation to be impeded. The question is, Shall the farmer be entitled by law to the lower interest on Government money that he now ought to have by reason of the market prices of bonds, or shall he be compelled to pay a high percent for the money he must borrow and to take stock in a local association for which he probably will never get anything in exchange?

It has been especially interesting, at these hearings on agricultural credit, to note the large number of bankers and money lenders who have appeared before the committee, all of them "in behalf of the farmers," shedding tears because farmers are going to lose their so-called cooperative farm-credit law. I really wish my farmer friends could have seen the array of big-business representatives who appeared before our committee, pleading for this law to remain as it is, with its 4-percent interest and 5-percent exaction. It was most amusing, and no real farmer would have been taken in by it. They all insisted upon a separate Farm Credit Administration, resenting the change made by Congress.

THE FIGHT AGAINST LOW FARM INTEREST

The hearings to which members of the Committee on Agriculture have listened, the newspaper publicity so freely given opponents of the bill, and the propaganda spread from one end of our country to the other, have made it clear, absolutely clear, that the big interests are determined to continue to control farm lending. They have also allowed it to become apparent that the friends and supporters of the bill are making the fight to give farmers the advantage and the benefits of the low interest rates now prevailing.

United States bonds with 10 or 12 years' maturity are selling in the market at par with less than 2-percent interest. Bonds of 20-year maturity are selling at par with a little over 2 percent. Shall the farmers also have the benefit of low interest, or shall they be compelled to become the victims of the savings banks and insurance companies, which want to keep interest rates high and to dominate the best of the farm-lending market? There is plenty of money now available in the money centers. Insurance companies have their agents in the best farming sections of America, offering money to farmers at 4 percent on terms of 5, 10, or 15 years, often without annual payments on principal. These companies are lending up to 60 and even 70 percent of appraised value.

When the farmer goes to his local loan association of the Farm Credit Administration, under the present law, he is confronted with a 4-percent note and must surrender 5 percent of the face of the loan. He is told that this is to buy stock in an association, but he knows that he will probably never again have that 5 percent, deducted from the amount paid him, for which he has signed a note; but he must agree to pay interest on this bonus. The insurance company will let him pay out, wholly or partially, whenever he wishes to do so. Which loan will the farmer take? He naturally takes the loan from the insurance company.

Which loan will the farmer take? He naturally takes the loan from the insurance company. Therefore, the insurance companies are securing all the best loans now offered in the United States, and the Farm Credit Administration is getting only the more speculative, the more hazardous loans.

The pending bill (H. R. 8748) would reduce interest to 3 percent, and it would free the farmers from the obligation of surrendering 5 percent of the face of their loans. The House has passed a bill extending the 3½-percent interest on farm loans beyond July 1, 1940, but the bill has not passed the Senate, and a reactionary Congress might quickly repeal such emergency legislation.

The Government has furnished millions for the railroads at 2¾-percent interest, much of which will never be repaid, and is now lending to steamship companies for less. These transportation agencies have always enjoyed large subsidies. This whole matter is a contest over interest and a struggle to compel farmers to furnish profits for private money lenders while others are granted Government loans at cost.

PRESENT SYSTEM NOT COOPERATIVE NOR SOLVENT

These solicitous friends of the farmers talked much about the cooperative features of the present Farm Credit Act. There were few appearing before the committee who told the facts as we who have been borrowers know them. Every money lender was certain that the cooperative features of the association would be forever ruined if the farmer was relieved from deducting the 5 percent off the face of his loan for the purchase of useless stock on which he must pay interest. The Farm Credit Administration does not now provide for cooperation, not by any stretch of the imagination could it be so construed, nor was it ever so intended.

I know how the farm borrowers feel about their cooperatives. The Farm Credit Administration has never been farmer-owned nor farmer-controlled. In fact, farmer control is prohibited. Outside of the local association they do not select the majority of their directors, and their local secretary must be approved by the land bank. It is not farmer-owned for, while the farmers have about $131,000,000 invested in it, the Government has over $877,000,000. It has been admitted that the losses in the Farm Credit Administration up to the present time may have been as much as $300,000,000. Under any rule of business, the system is insolvent.

BILL PROVIDES A SOUND SYSTEM

The bill now pending, H. R. 8748, will not result in unsound credit. It does free the borrower from a deficiency judgment, except in bad-faith cases. The present law is not meeting existing needs and cannot do so unless it is amended. There is now no legal provision for a farmer to refinance when his farm has been overloaned. This bill gives him opportunity to refinance Government loans just as he would with private loans. The bill will not bring inflated farm values.

True, the farmer needs higher prices for his commodities; yes, parity prices, but that alone is not sufficient. He also needs a good farm-credit system, adapted to his needs. Those heard before the committee, and flooding us with propaganda, tried to divert us from our efforts to furnish a sound and helpful credit system by calling attention to the fact that farm prices are too low. We all know that, but they offered no suggestions for raising prices. Their concern for farmers selling on low markets was really pathetic. Farmers should take the opportunity to read these hearings in order to learn who are their real friends.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein part of a report I received from the Bureau of the Census.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

WOMEN DEMOCRATS AND THEIR POLITICAL SHORT COURSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I note that the women Democrats are going to take a political short course, according to last night's Star. Postmaster General James A. Farley will instruct in political technique at the opening session. Subjects of that session will include "How To Win Votes With Facts," among others. Then they are going to have a motion picture to portray the 7 years of New Deal accomplishments. [Applause.]

I wonder if they will show the killing of the pigs, the plowing down of the cotton, and the burning of the wheat, and so forth. I wonder if they will show the facts about the 9,000,000 men who have been unemployed for 8 years. I wonder if they will show many of the things that are contrary to good, common business sense, so far as putting the Government into all kinds of business is concerned. I wonder if they will show the platform promises made by the Democratic administration in 1932 and on which the New Deal has gone "hay wire." Will they show the squandering of billions of dollars of the thrifty taxpayers' dollars? Is this the Democratic Party which is holding this conference or is it the New Deal? Here is the faculty as is listed and what they will talk about:

Postmaster General James A. Farley will instruct in political technique at the opening session of the institute. Subjects of that session will include "How To Win Votes With Facts," "Financing Organization," "Principles of Effective Speaking," "Contacting First Voters," and "How To Organize the Precinct."

MEMBERS OF FACULTY

Secretary of War Woodring will discuss national defense; Secretary of the Interior Ickes, conservation of national resources; Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Budget and the national debt; Attorney General Jackson, business and Government working together; Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, the farm program of the Roosevelt administration; and Secretary of Labor Perkins, labor policies.

Other speakers will include Miss Josephine Roche on the projected national health program; Arthur J. Altmeyer, Chairman, and Ellen S. Woodward, member, of the Social Security Board; Mrs. Florence S. Kerr, Assistant Commissioner of the Works Projects Administration; Nathan Straus, Administrator of the United States Housing Authority; Representative Mary Norton, who will lead a round table on wage and hour legislation; Charles Fahy, General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board; Miss Mary Anderson, Director of the Women's Bureau; and Miss Katherine Lenroot, Chief of the Children's Bureau.

Will they discuss the third term of the No. 1 new dealer, F. D. Roosevelt? We have had enough New Deal. We want an honest deal. We want a square deal. We want to restore those sound fundamentals of our forefathers—honesty, opportunity, freedom, thrift, dependability. Let us save America by getting rid of the New Deal, as has been administered the past 7 years, before it is too late; before we go in bankruptcy, and before the dictator takes over our country.

THE TWENTY-EIGHT MILLIONTH FORD

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to call to the attention of the House of Representatives the unbelievable progress of the greatest industrial concern in the world. The Ford Motor Car Co. today, on the plaza of the United States Capitol, displayed its twenty-eight millionth automobile.

Mr. Henry Ford, master of the world industrialists, is to be congratulated upon his unsurpassed feat of human endeavor. Thirty-seven years ago, imbued with a spirit of fortitude and visionary ambition, Mr. Ford blazed the trail of the motor industry. In that short span of time he has built the greatest industrial empire of employment the world has ever known.

The progress of the Ford company, which this twenty-eight millionth car commemorates, truly reflects the progress of the whole Nation. Despite domestic and international troubles, we have continued to follow our own course of constructive enterprise.

As this twenty-eight millionth Ford travels from city to city, touching virtually every State in the Union, Mr. Ford, the officials of the Ford Motor Co., its engineers, designers, mechanics, and workers, may well feel proud that this, the finished product of their labor, is truly symbolic of this Nation's spirit of progressiveness. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS]?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by Senator JAMES G. TOWNSEND, on the foreign silver program entitled "Favors to Foreigners," or a program that "Costs Nothing."

VIEWS OF JOSEPH O. CARSON ON SMITH AMENDMENTS TO WAGNER ACT

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, for 10 years it was my privilege to serve as trial attorney under the Honorable Joseph O. Carson, who is general counsel of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, one of the largest labor organizations, if not the oldest labor organization, in the country. During this 10-year period I learned to know and to respect the ability of Joseph O. Carson, a man who has devoted a lifetime to the interests of organized labor. I learned to know that he was a man who has the interests of labor and his country for which he fought at heart. I learned to know him as a man who has a comprehensive and thorough knowledge of labor law.

Some time ago I wrote Mr. Carson, asking him to analyze carefully the amendments that have been filed by my colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to the National Labor Relations Act and to give me his candid opinion with respect to these amendments. In a letter which I hold in my hand he has heartily endorsed every one of the Smith amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include this letter, dated March 25, received by me from the Honorable Joseph O. Carson, of Indianapolis, Ind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN]?

There was no objection.

UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA,
Indianapolis, Ind., March 25, 1940.

Hon. HARRY N. ROUTZOHN,
Congressman, Third Ohio District, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have noted by the papers many, many "tempests in a teapot" over the amendments your committee recently submitted to the House with reference to amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

I have read and reread the supplemental bill, which has been introduced by the Honorable HOWARD SMITH, chairman of your committee, having to do with amendments to that act.

Let me say I can honestly concur in the amendments as submitted, and I cannot see anything in those amendments which denies the rights of any parties to a contract, which in all fairness they should have.

As I have said in the past, Mr. Congressman, that I hoped the time would never come when this Government would take up the cudgel for any isolated segregated group, and I could not now use language strong enough to convey that thought for the reason that when the Government takes up the cudgel in such a manner in these United States, it is arraying class against class, citizen against citizen, and group against group. Particularly is this harmful when the agency having to do with any such situation is made up of zealots who are appointed for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of a unilateral law, and these zealots become imbued with the mistaken theory that it is only their right and their right only to ameliorate the conditions of that group for which they are attempting to administer the law.

This is entirely un-American, unpatriotic, and is against all the concepts of what American institutions, having to do with the administration of laws of these United States, should have. There are just a few questions with which we need concern ourselves in regard to the National Labor Relations Act and its administration since its inception.

Why, if the National Labor Relations Act was fairly, impartially, and judiciously administered, is there so much discussion, dissension, and practically private warfare over at least more than 50 percent of the decisions that Board has rendered?

Why has practically every decision rendered by this Board started internecine warfare amongst the very men to whom the act was supposed to be the Magna Carta of liberty?

Why have over 50 percent of the organized men of these United States, who have been organized for an excess of a half century, been so generally opposed to the rulings made by that Board?

Certainly the odor of some of those decisions has not been conducive to pleasant olfactory inhalations.

As I said before, I have read the amendments your committee has introduced, and while in some places the verbiage might be amended, I cannot see the necessity of scrapping them entirely and just putting two more men on that Board.

The Secretary of Labor, the House committee who made an investigation of this act, and the Senate committee, all said the act should stand as it was written, and yet immediately your amendments were submitted they admitted their error and said, "Well, we will put two more men on the Board."

In the past the National Labor Relations Act, its investigators and trial examiners, have been nothing but obstinate zealots, and at no place practically along the whole line except when the strength of the one group was strong enough, has any of the bodies done anything except to find by dark and devious methods for the new groups which have been organized within the past 3 years.

This suggestion of theirs with regard to placing two more men on the Board is nothing but court packing and the appointments would lend nothing to its dignity, nothing to its fairness, and would not be conducive to stopping the great labor unrest with which these older organizations have had to contend during the assumption of power which this Board has exercised.

If we intend to keep America as we have known it, then private industry must succeed and private industry is not just the contractor or the manufacturer making the material or erecting the structure or marketing the certain product, but private industry consists in these United States of four elements; that is, capital, management, labor, and the public. The fourth class is composed of the first three, and you must be fair to each one of those classes if we want America to remain a representative government of the four interests mentioned above.

The purpose of your amendments "in taking one class out of the grease" instead of making that class the slave of this zealot group is worthy of consideration of Congress.

Further, your amendments to the act giving representatives of the groups the right to select their own bargaining agency, rather than have some alien group entirely foreign to their trade or calling, is worthy of the consideration of Congress.

Mainly your amendments dealing with the revision of this Board and the splitting it up in the manner you did is worthy of the consideration of Congress, and as far as I am personally concerned I hope those amendments are approved by Congress practically as you have submitted them, and I feel if this is done capital, management, labor, and the public will not only, as time rolls by, concur in your wise judgment but will applaud and cooperate in every manner possible to bring order out of chaos in the labor ranks which has existed since the adoption of the Wagner Act.

Trusting this will be helpful, and with best wishes, I am,

Cordially yours,

J. O. CARSON.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the majority leader, who is serving as Speaker at the present moment, if he can tell us what the program will be for next week?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Monday, of course, is Unanimous Consent Day. The first rule that will be taken up next week is the rule making in order the consideration of the so-called Walter-Logan bill. If we complete the call of the Consent Calendar early enough on Monday, we will take up that bill for general debate only and try to complete its consideration on Tuesday. Whether any committee wants the call on Wednesday, I am not now informed. However, one committee at least will be called. I do not know when the report of the committee of conference will be ready on the agricultural appropriation bill. If the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill is not adopted tomorrow, it will be taken up next week. Also, another rule will be taken up, that making in order the consideration of the bill to amend the Crop Insurance Act. This is all the program for next week that has been arranged so far.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. IV (H. DOC. NO. 692)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

One year ago the Congress directed the President to investigate the organization of the executive establishment and to submit plans for such transfers, consolidations, and abolitions of agencies as were found necessary and desirable.

Shortly thereafter I submitted Reorganization Plan No. I which improved the over-all management of the executive branch. This was followed by Reorganization Plan No. II which effected a better allocation of certain agencies and activities among departments. Although these two plans have been in effect less than a year, their benefits have already been gratifying. I have found the task of coordinating the work of the executive branch less difficult. Many improvements in service have occurred, and substantial economies have resulted.

Reorganization Plan No. III, recently submitted, is a third step which will improve intradepartmental management through internal adjustments in certain agencies.

I am now proposing a fourth reorganization plan which provides for a number of interdepartmental reorganizations. These changes are designed to increase efficiency in the administration of Government services by a more logical grouping of certain functions and by a further reduction in the number of independent agencies reporting directly to the Chief Executive.

Accordingly, I am transmitting herewith Reorganization Plan No. IV, which, after investigation, I have prepared in pursuance of section 4 of the Reorganization Act of 1939 (Public, No. 19, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), approved April 3, 1939; and I declare with respect to each reorganization made in this plan, that I have found such reorganization necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a) of the act:

1. To reduce expenditures.
2. To increase efficiency.
3. To consolidate agencies according to major purposes.
4. To reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions and by abolishing such as may not be necessary.
5. To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

The plan I now transmit I shall describe briefly as follows:

Department of State: The Dominican Customs Receivership is transferred to the Department of State from the Division of Territories and Island Possessions in the Department of the Interior. The State Department is the most appropriate agency to supervise this activity which involves relations with a foreign government.

Treasury Department: The plan transfers to the Secretary of the Treasury the function of the Attorney General of approving out-of-court settlements—technically termed compromises—of cases arising under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act which have not, prior to compromise, been referred to the Department of Justice for prosecution. The present requirement that the Attorney General approve all compromises results in a cumbersome, time-consuming procedure which the small amounts involved do not warrant. The proposed handling will be simpler, less likely to cause delay, and consistent with the procedure now followed in compromises arising under other acts which the Treasury Department administers.

Department of Justice: Executive Order No. 6166, issued June 10, 1933, provided for the centralization of the disbursement function in a Division of Disbursement in the Treasury Department. The resulting increase in efficiency has amply demonstrated the wisdom of centralizing disbursement work. In effectuating the plan, however, I have found it necessary to postpone its application to United States marshals because of the unusual character of their disbursing work in serving the courts. Experience indicates that this arrangement should be continued. I am proposing, therefore, the permanent transfer of the disbursement function of United States marshals from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice.

Post Office Department: It has also been found desirable to continue permanently in the Post Office Department the disbursement of Post Office funds. The special character of the work of this Department, involving disbursements in thousands of post offices throughout the Nation, requires here, as well as in the case of the United States marshals, a departure from the sound theory of central disbursing. With its far-flung facilities the Post Office Department is better equipped to carry on this work than the Division of Disbursement.

Another proposal affecting the Post Office Department relates to the transportation of mail and other material between departments. In the early colonial days the interchange of correspondence and messages was by the simple hand-to-hand method. Gradually a more systematic device became necessary to transport messages, with the resultant evolution of the Postal Service. Business and private citizens in general have made use of that Service, and today we have in our Post Office Department the most efficient organization of its kind in the world. However, here in the Capital City, the Federal Government, instead of utilizing fully the resources of the Post Office Department to maintain its mail and messenger service, has permitted a multiplicity of interdepartmental messenger services, each serving its own department, bureau, or agency. This duplication of services is uneconomical and results in a constant criss-crossing and overlapping of personnel and equipment, all engaged in a common activity. I am sure that the average citizen in Washington, as well as officials of the Government itself, have wondered at this paradox whereby the Federal Government is failing to make the fullest use of one of its own agencies which is specially equipped to render a simple, centralized service for all the other agencies. This reorganization plan proposes to do exactly that; to provide for the transportation of mail, documents, packages, and similar material between all buildings occupied by Government offices on a regularly scheduled basis of sufficient frequency to meet the reasonable and normal requirements of these offices and to reduce to a minimum the constant dispatching of messengers on so-called urgent and emergency errands. This service will be available on a reimbursement basis to the agencies exempted by the Reorganization Act.

Department of the Interior: I propose to transfer to the Department of the Interior the activities of the Soil Conservation Service relating to soil and moisture conservation on lands under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department. With respect to private lands, the soil-conservation work of the Federal Government is primarily of a consultative character and can best be carried on by the Department of Agriculture through cooperation of the farmers throughout the country. In the case of Federal lands, this work includes the actual application by the Government of soil-conservation practices and is an appropriate function of the agency administering the land.

Department of Commerce: One of the purposes of the Reorganization Act is to reduce the number of administrative agencies and thereby simplify the task of executive management. We have made substantial progress toward this objective under previous reorganization plans. I am now proposing another step in this direction by placing the Civil Aeronautics Authority within the framework of the Department of Commerce. Reorganization Plan No. III, which deals with interdepartmental changes, draws a more practical separation between the functions of the Administrator and the Civil Aeronautics Board. In plan IV, which is concerned with interdepartmental reorganization, I am bringing the Authority into the departmental structure. The Administrator will report to the Secretary of Commerce. The five-member board, however, will perform its rule-making, adjudicative, and investigative functions independent of the Department. In the interest of efficiency it will be supplied by the Department with budgeting, accounting, procurement, and other office services. As a result of the adjustments provided in plans III and IV, I believe the Civil Aeronautics Board will be able effectively to carry forward the important work of accident investigation heretofore performed by the Air Safety Board. In addition to the effective and coordinated discharge of accident investigation work which this transfer will facilitate, economies in administration will be possible.

The importance of the Weather Bureau's functions to the Nation's commerce has also led to the decision to transfer this Bureau to the Department of Commerce. The development of the aviation industry has imposed upon the Weather Bureau a major responsibility in the field of air transportation. The transfer to the Department of Commerce, as provided in this plan, wil permit better coordination of Government activities relating to aviation and to commerce generally—without in any way lessening the Bureau's contribution to agriculture.

Department of Labor: The plan transfers to the Secretary of Labor the functions of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior relating to the enforcement of the minimum-wage provisions in contracts for Federal construction. The Secretary of Labor is responsible by law for the determination of the prevailing wage rates included in Government contracts and should properly have complete responsibility for their enforcement.

United States Maritime Commission: I propose to transfer to the United States Maritime Commission the functions of the Secretary of the Navy relating to State marine and nautical schools. These schools are devoted to training young men for junior-officer positions in the merchant marine. The general responsibility for developing facilities for the training of merchant-marine personnel is vested in the Maritime Commission. The proposed transfer will thus permit closer coordination of the nautical schools with the training work of the Maritime Commission.

Federal Security Agency: The Federal Security Agency has as its major purposes the promotion of social and economic security, educational opportunity, and the health of the citizens. The functions of St. Elizabeths Hospital, Freedmen's Hospital, Howard University, and Columbia Institution for the Deaf plainly come squarely within these purposes. Consequently, I find it necessary and desirable in pursuance of the objectives of the Reorganization Act to transfer to the Federal Security Agency the responsibilities of the Interior Department relating to these institutions. The work of St. Elizabeths Hospital and Freedmen's Hospital is much more akin to the activities of the Public Health Service in the Federal Security Agency than to those of any other Federal establishment. Similarly, Howard University and Columbia Institution for the Deaf can derive more benefit from association with the Office of Education in the Federal Security Agency than with any other Federal organization.

I further propose to transfer to the Federal Security Agency the Food and Drug Administration, with the exception of two activities intimately related to the work of the Department of Agriculture. The work of the Food and Drug Administration is unrelated to the basic functions of the Department of Agriculture. There was, however, no other agency to which these functions more appropriately belonged until the Federal Security Agency was created last year. I now believe that the opportunity for the Food and Drug Administration to develop along increasingly constructive lines lies in this new Agency. There is also need for coordination of certain of its functions with those of the Public Health Service. To accomplish these objectives the plan establishes the Administration as a separate unit within the Federal Security Agency.

Economies: Functions may be transferred or consolidated under this Reorganization Act, but the abolition of functions is prohibited. Congress alone can curtail or abolish functions now provided by law. Savings must come from administrative expenses which comprise only a small fraction of Federal expenditures. This precludes the making of large reductions in expenditure through reorganization plans. The major achievements in reorganizations under this formula must inevitably be found in improved management and more effective service. However, some savings in administrative expenses will be possible under this plan. I estimate the immediate annual savings at approximately $300,000.

Future reorganization needs: The reorganization plans thus far submitted do not exhaust the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions that may be necessary and desirable. Some changes that now appear to have merit require further study. It is the responsibility of the President as Chief Executive to see that needed adjustments and improvements in administrative organization are made. But this he cannot adequately accomplish without proper statutory authority. The present Reorganization Act entirely exempts some 21 administrative agencies from consideration. Furthermore, this act expires on January 20, 1941.

I strongly recommend the reenactment of the Reorganization Act without exemptions. The structure and management of our Government, like the activities and services it performs, must be kept abreast of social and economic change.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 11, 1940.

FIFTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 456 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 456

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2505, an act to amend an act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress, approved June 18, 1929, so as to change the date of subsequent apportionments. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Census, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on the Census now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and at this time I take 3 minutes for myself.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to go at length into the provisions of the resolution under which it is proposed to make in order consideration of a bill to correct a situation which was brought about by the adoption of the so-called lame-duck amendment.

In brief, though, it may be said that this rule seeks to make in order consideration of a bill reported by the Census Committee to reapportion the membership of the House according to the 1940 and subsequent censuses.

The bill referred to proposes changes in existing law made necessary by adoption of the lame-duck—twentieth—amendment to the Constitution. Under the present law, the President is required to submit to Congress a statement of the number of Representatives to which each State is entitled within a week after the opening of the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Since this could not be complied with under the twentieth amendment, which changed the date for Congress to meet in its regular second session, and moved the inauguration of the President up to January 20, the bill recommends that the date for sending such statement to Congress be changed to 1 week after January 3, 1941.

I do, however, wish to make an observation and a confession. As one who voted for the twentieth amendment, I recall very well the warning given us by that fine democratic aristocrat, Hon. Nicholas Longworth, when he said to us, "If you do not fix some time limit on the second session, Congress will be in session practically all the time." I thought at that time that Mr. Longworth was wrong. I have become thoroughly convinced that he was right, and I feel that when we do our full duty we will submit an amendment fixing a limit on the second session of the Congress. [Applause.]

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to discuss the bill. The rule speaks for itself, and at this time I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, article XIV, section 2, of the Constitution reads as follows:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

While this bill merely corrects an error, I think we should always approach the question of a reapportionment on the highest constitutional grounds. I wish to repeat and record again what I have said in the past, that I would vote to carry out the plain mandate of the Constitution regardless of the effect that it might have on any State; and were I to know in advance that North Carolina would lose a Member, I would still vote for reapportionment.

There has been a reapportionment every 10 years in the history of the Nation except for the period based on the 1920 census. During that time and up to and including the 1930 census the Republican Party was in full control. They felt, with the greatest concern, that there had been no reapportionment in 1920; and in 1929, prior to the 1930 census, they brought forward a bill which received strong bipartisan support, and after months of effort and debate it became a law. There are only three Republicans in the House today who voted against that measure, and a large majority of the Democrats here today who were Members in 1929 supported that measure. That bill provided for an automatic reapportionment of the House, based on the present membership of 435, in the event that the Congress did not act within a specified time. It was a definite, fixed, and sure guaranty that the Constitution would be observed, and it was hailed widely throughout the Nation as a constructive measure and an admirable solution of a difficult problem.

That act provided that during the first week of the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress the President should transmit to the Congress a statement showing the new reapportionment by two methods, one known as the equal proportions and the other as major fractions. And if the Congress did not act otherwise during the session—that is, the short session of only 3 months—then a reapportionment by major fractions, under which we are now apportioned, would become automatic.

The present law was passed prior to the Norris or "lame duck" amendment. We do not meet in December 1940, and the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress has already passed. The 1929 act, therefore, is vitiated. This bill was introduced in the Senate in a slightly different form by Senator VANDENBERG and passed that body unanimously. I have offered it here in the House, and Senator VANDENBERG has stated to me that the measure introduced by me is preferable to his. It merely corrects the error caused by the "lame duck" amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The measure that passed the Senate and the one that the gentleman from North Carolina offered did not include this last statement with reference to aliens.

Mr. WARREN. I am coming to that. That was not in my measure. I shall come to that in a moment. This bill simply provides that the President shall report during the first week of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and if the Congress does not act on the matter during that session, which is of 7 or 8 months' duration then the apportionment shall become automatic. It would therefore not apply until the 1942 elections. The House committee saw fit to provide an amendment providing for the exclusion of aliens from the population totals in making the apportionment. This provision, in my opinion, is clearly unconstitutional. The Constitution provides for the counting of persons. I am told that since reporting out this bill, the Committee on the Census has again met and has authorized a committee amendment to strike this provision from the bill. This, of course, should be done. Those who may be interested in such a proposal have, in my opinion, only one recourse, and that is a constitutional amendment.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. I am authorized to present an amendment to strike out that clause.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] to say that the committee would offer an amendment to strike that phrase out?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman feel that Indians should be counted who are subject to taxation?

Mr. WARREN. The Constitution says that we shall exclude Indians not taxed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is true, but all Indians are taxed in some form or another. Therefore I think that all Indians should be counted.

Mr. WARREN. That is all right with me, just so long as we do not run contrary to the Constitution. We can debate that under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I call attention to the fact that our Indians are now taxed wherever a sales tax prevails, as it does in many States. Conditions with regard to Indians have greatly changed in 150 years, and I feel that a different interpretation concerning Indians is now logical and needed in fairness.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD], who was quite active in the passage of the 1929 act, and who has given much study to this subject, will propose an amendment providing that if Congress does not act within 60 days of the President's message, then the reapportionment shall become effective. The only difference is this: Prior to the Norris amendment we had about two and a half months in which to act. The McLeod proposed amendment would give us 60 days in which to act, while the bill we are now considering would give us approximately 7 months in which to act. The several State legislatures will have full notice in January. Probably only a dozen States will be affected, and it would be a very easy and simple thing for them to pass anticipatory legislation. I have no personal objection whatever to the McLeod amendment if the House thinks best to adopt it. This error, Mr. Speaker, caused by the Norris amendment, should be corrected now. It should be done on the high ground of the Constitution. We do not know what the census will bring forth as to any State. We are all on the same par. If it is not corrected now, I predict there will be no reapportionment based on the 1940 census. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back 3 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this question of reapportionment is always a difficult one. It is one of the most difficult problems for the House to solve on a fair and nonpartisan basis. Every Member should approach it from a constitutional standpoint. I join with the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], in saying that no matter what would happen to the State of New York, whether we lost or gained, but particularly if we lost, I should gladly vote to carry out the mandate of the Constitution, for a reapportionment of Representatives every 10 years.

It seems to me this bill for automatic apportionment is just plain, ordinary, common sense, in order to prevent what has happened in the past, and which assuredly will happen again. That is, that the Members of the House from those States which might lose one or two Representatives will come in here and make a bitter fight to prevent any kind of reapportionment going through. They will throw monkey-wrenches into the machinery. They will use all kinds of dilatory tactics in order to protect what they say is the right of their State, because some State, no matter whether it is in the North, East, South, or West, may lose some Representative under the reapportionment act.

We have before us what I think is a fair, automatic reapportionment bill and in accordance with the Constitution and assuredly carrying out its mandate, or rather enabling us to carry out the mandate of the Constitution in a fair and equitable way as soon as the census has been completed.

There is no opposition that I know of to the rule on this side.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. In that connection, let me call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that in his own State one district has only about 90,000 population, while other districts have more than 800,000 population, and the State has made no effort, as far as I know, to correct those inequalities. Then why jump on Congress?

Mr. FISH. I am in entire accord with the gentleman's views. I was a member of the State constitutional convention in New York in 1938 and did everything I could at that time to put through a reapportionment bill for the State of New York, based on approximately equal congressional districts. I believe that that will be done in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California, Mr. LELAND M. FORD, a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 4 minutes.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, this was originally the Vandenberg bill, for which was substituted what was originally the Warren bill, No. 8653. The only difference between those bills, and I understand Senator VANDENBERG has concurred in this, would be to have Congress act before 2 years. After that time the reapportionment would then become automatic. Under the Vandenberg bill it might possibly be postponed until 1942. Under the Warren substitute, known as 2505, this can happen, and should happen, within 6 or 8 months. The bill only restores that position that reapportionment had before the Norris amendment, known as the "lame-duck" amendment, went into effect. It simply changes the date.

On page 2 of the committee report I read the following:

Under the present law that statement is required to be submitted within 1 week of the beginning of the second regular session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

That is the statement of the President.

The adoption of the twentieth amendment since the Reapportionment Act of 1929 has made it impossible that that requirement be complied with. Under the present law that statement would have to be submitted within 1 week after January 3, 1940, which is before the census of 1940 could be taken.

As a matter of fact, that time has passed.

The bill as referred to the committee and the committee amendment postpone that date to within 1 week of the beginning of the first regular session of the Seventy-seventh Congress—

Instead of the second session, as mentioned.

the statement must be transmitted within 1 week after January 3, 1941.

Now I am speaking on this matter under the assumption that the alien provision that was made to Mr. WARREN's bill will be taken out. I believe the committee will offer an amendment to remove that. This bill simply corrects an error. I do not think there is any point on which to orate. It does not add anything to, and it does not take anything away from, the old law. It does not change the type of apportionment as we have had it heretofore. The facts are simple. We can get up here and talk for 2 hours or 2 weeks or 2 months, and I think after you are all through the only thing involved will be that we have changed a couple of dates to conform with the law known as the "lame-duck" amendment.

At the time the bill was originally passed there was a bitter fight on it. It may be possible that there are those who would continue that fight because some people do not want this bill enacted at all. They did not want it enacted then and they do not want it enacted now. It is their privilege to take that stand if they care to. In my opinion and in the opinion of others, if this bill is not passed now we may again lose our apportionment under the 1940 census as we did under the 1920 census. I think it is the constitutional thing to do. I do not set myself up as a constitutional lawyer, but, after all, I have had some very good advice on this, and we do have certain general fundamental principles involving our Constitution and our actions in Congress. The question resolves itself into this: Are we going to be guided by the requirements of the fundamentals of our Constitution or are we going to let some selfish interest, perhaps, interfere with our official duty? I think the question comes squarely to us in that form. It is not a partisan question. That law was passed under a Republican majority in this House in 1929. We did have this law, we did work under it, we worked satisfactorily; and I say we can continue to work under it. We did not change the method any.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I cannot yield. I am not going to have enough time as it is. As a matter of fact, I was not able to get any time from those in charge of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I am not in charge of the bill, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I regret, Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield.

The objection has been raised that we were changing the rules in the middle of the game. We are not. I think the rules of the game should be fixed before the game starts, and that is exactly what we are doing. Under this bill we are going to let the chips lie where they fall. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill freezes the House at 435 Members now and in perpetuity. This also takes away from the House the right to apportion its own membership and delegates to the Chief Executive one of those prerogatives that, in my opinion, should be reserved to the Congress.

Referring to the attempts to reapportion under the census of 1920, permit me to say that I was one of the men who went through that fight. In the first place, the census of 1920 was taken under unusual conditions. For the first time in history it was taken in the wintertime when farmers invariably were away from home, and the agricultural sections suffered, because in many cases the farmers were not counted. We were just emerging from the World War, and thousands of men had not returned to their homes, and many other thousands had been temporarily concentrated in the great industrial centers as a result of war activities. When that census was brought out we realized that it was not just to the agricultural States. We offered an amendment and reported a bill to raise the House to 460 Members. It would have saved most of the agricultural States. We fought over it for a whole day, and it was recommitted by the Members from the very States that are now demanding the passage of this measure. There was, therefore, no reapportionment under the census of 1920.

The Constitution of the United States does not require that we reapportion Congress every time the census is taken, but it does require that when Congress is reapportioned the reapportionment must be based upon persons, and that means American persons; it does not mean alien persons who owe no allegiance to the United States.

In 1929 the distinguished Senator from Michigan offered this provision as a rider on the census bill. It passed the Senate, and we had to accept it in order to keep them from killing the bill providing for the census of 1930. The administration went ahead and reapportioned the House automatically on a basis of 435.

If this measure is not passed, it simply means that Congress will have a whole session in which to reapportion its membership. Even then I doubt if you can go beyond that, because the law is still in effect, regardless of the lame-duck amendment. So if you pass this measure, I want you to understand—because I do not intend to wear myself out fighting on this proposition—you shut the door in your own faces, in the face of this House, so far as reapportionment is concerned, because even if you give yourself 60 days I can pick out a dozen Senators—yes, I can pick out half a dozen—who can talk 60 days, and play golf in between times. [Laughter.] Do not forget that if this measure is passed by this House, the probabilities are that Congress will never again reapportion the House of Representatives.

You will probably hear a good deal today about the question that has been raised of rotten boroughs. A man from New York came before the Committee on the Census and brought his photographers with him. Whenever you see a lobbyist bring his photographers you may know that he has his case already prepared. He talked about rotten boroughs. I took the Congressional Directory and went over the districts in the State of New York. I found that one district which has a very large proportion of aliens has only 90,000 population, while another district that has a preponderance of Americans, or natives, has 776,000 population. Another has 779,000 population. One gentleman from Illinois came in and talked about rotten boroughs. I turned to Illinois and showed that some of the districts in that State had 150,000 or 200,000 population while others had almost 1,000,000. Congress is not responsible for that rotten borough situation, if you want to call it that. It is a matter for the State legislatures.

They raise a great hue and cry about excluding aliens. I submit it is an outrage to exclude these Indians whom we found here and ran off their lands, yet still count every alien that is in the country in violation of law—and many of them attempting to wreck the American Government.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. GEYER of California. I wonder what the gentleman thinks about those eight States that exclude persons on account of nonpayment of poll tax—63 percent of the white vote excluded. What does the gentleman have to say about that?

Mr. RANKIN. I suggest that the gentleman go into those States he is talking about and learn something about the situation. Then he might have something to say.

Another thing, the State of New York excludes aliens from the count when it comes to apportioning the State legislature. They are not proper persons to be represented in the legislature. If not, why are they entitled to be represented in the Congress?

The best thing you can do is to recommit this bill to the Committee on the Census and let this matter rest until it comes before the Congress after we have taken a census. Then we can proceed in the proper manner. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the gentleman from Mississippi should be the last man in the House to oppose the counting of aliens, when down in his State of Mississippi, they count all the colored people, but they do not permit them to vote. If we were consistent we would change this law in accordance with the fourteenth amendment, and reapportion on that basis, and prohibit representation where American citizens have been denied the right to vote.

The gentleman seems to think it is very dangerous to freeze the size of the House. I think that is the very best feature of the bill. The House is far too large and too cumbersome at present to be an effective deliberative body, and if someone should offer an amendment to reduce the size of the House to 300 I would be glad to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to explain an amendment I will offer during the reading of the bill, the purpose of which is to carry out the full purpose and intent of the Congress as early as it is practicable to obtain a reapportionment of the representation among the several States in the House of Representatives based upon the returns of the 1940 and subsequent decennial censuses. In carrying out the spirit of the reapportionment legislation, it is incumbent upon the individual States to rearrange their distribution of population in congressional districts to insure an equitable allotment of this population in proportion to the number of Representatives according to the States.

It is the function of the State legislatures to enact the necessary legislation for distribution of the population in the congressional districts within the States. Unless and until the several legislatures enact redistricting legislation, the boundaries and confines of existing congressional districts must remain unchanged despite the shifts in population that the new census may disclose.

Unless the Congress, within a reasonably early period of the 1941 session—the first session of the Seventy-seventh Congress to be elected next November—determines the method to be used in apportioning congressional representation, it will be next to impossible to bring about State redistricting in a greater number of the States in time to apply to the elections of 1942, unless, however, special sessions of the legislatures are called for the specific purpose of enacting State redistricting laws.

The legislatures of 42 of the 48 States to be elected next November will convene in January 1941. One other will assemble in April 1941. Of the remaining 5, 4 will meet in 1942, and 1, which assembles only quadrennially, in 1943. Of the 43 legislatures meeting in 1941, 39 hold biennial sessions. Only 4 convene annually.

If these 39 legislatures do not enact redistricting laws next year, they will have no chance to act, except in special session by call of the Governor, until 1943, which would prevent redistricting legislation from becoming effective until the elections of 1944, 4 years after the completion of the census.

The bill before the House as reported by the Census Committee would permit the Congress to delay until the closing days of the 1941 session the consideration of any reapportionment legislation. As the Congress in recent years has remained in session until well in the summer, not adjourning until June, July, or August, this would mean that reapportionment legislation might and probably would be delayed until after all of the 39 legislatures had adjourned and gone home.

Three States limit their legislature to 40 legislative days, 1 to 50 days, 16 to 60 days, 1 to 70 days, 1 to 75 days, 2 to 90 days, 1 to 100 days, 1 to 132 days, and 1 to 150 days. Twelve States have no statutory limitations but usually wind up with their sessions within about 3 months at the most.

Unless the States can be informed by Congress relatively early in 1941 as to just what representation they are to have for the next decade, the legislatures will be deprived of the opportunity to act on redistricting measures within the statutory limitations of their sessions, and except for an extra session recourse, must let the matter of redistricting go over to the next legislature to be chosen in 1942.

My amendment would make it obligatory on the Congress to dispose of the matter of reapportionment within the first 2 months of next year's session. Failure of the Congress within that period to enact a new reapportionment statute would automatically invoke mandatory reapportionment as provided for in the Reapportionment Act of 1929, which the bill now pending before the House seeks to revise and correct in accordance with conditions created by the ratification of the Norris "lame duck" constitutional amendment changing the time for the convening of Congress and the inauguration of the President and Vice President.

Prior to the adoption of the Norris amendment, the Congress convened on the first Monday in December each year. The second regular session of each Congress expired by limitation on March 4 of the odd-numbered years. For example, the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, the only Congress to which the 1929 Reapportionment Act has applied thus far, convened on the first Monday in December 1930, and expired by limitation on March 4, 1931. That was the last day that Congress had to dispose of any reapportionment legislation.

The Congress was limited then to a maximum of approximately 90 calendar days in which to deal with reapportionment. Out of that 90 days came the usual Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year holidays. These, in effect, reduced the time for consideration of reapportionment legislation to about 75 days. The Congress in 1929 considered that ample time in which to deal with this question.

This amendment restricts Congress to 60 calendar days for consideration of the reapportionment question and places the dead line at approximately the same time of the year for Congress to act, namely, March 4. The President's report on the census under the present law must be submitted on the day Congress convenes, January 3, or within one week thereafter. Sixty days from January 3 is March 4. Thus the extreme limit should the President's statement not reach Congress earlier than January 10, or one week after the convening date, would be March 11.

This date would still find virtually all of the legislatures assembled in January 1941 in session. In many of the States the legislatures take recesses of 2 weeks or more in midterm to permit legislative committees to visit and inspect State institutions or to attend to other committee work contingent on proper consideration of measures pending before it. Thus the 60-day sessions are projected on to as late as April 1, or even later, giving reasonable time for considering redistricting legislation before their final adjournment after Congress has advised them as to what congressional representation their State is entitled.

If the reapportionment question is left open until Congress adjourns in June, July, or August, by that time the legislatures will have finished up their work and gone home, and the only way they could approach redistricting would be through an extra session. This would entail an added and unnecessary expense on the taxpayers for legislative per diem mileage and other contingent expenses. It is reasonable to assume that some of the States would forego action as an economy measure to save this extra cost.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] said a moment ago that if this bill is passed the House will never again reapportion its membership. I want to differ with him, for the reason, the gentleman will recall, that the provisions of the 1929 act, which was the outcome and the result of the failure of Congress to act on reapportionment for the longest period in history, 20 years, included the so-called automatic feature, designed for the specific purpose of enforcing redistribution of congressional seats in the event Congress refused to act. If this bill is passed, the automatic feature will remain intact. However, that automatic feature just goes into effect if the Congress does not act after 60 days.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Within that 60 days all these legislatures the gentleman has been talking about will have adjourned. Many of them adjourn in the first 40 days.

Mr. McLEOD. The figures I have indicate that most legislatures convene in January. Some of them remain in session only 90 days, while some remain in session as long as 5 months, which, I believe, is about the maximum. If we adopt my amendment, the State Legislature of my State, Michigan, will be in session, and it would have the opportunity to reapportion the State in time for the following congressional election.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. What would happen in the gentleman's State, for instance, if Congress had not acted and the legislature reapportioned without waiting for action of the Congress the required 60 days?

Mr. McLEOD. I do not believe they could legally do that. It would have to be anticipatory legislation on the part of the State legislature. They would not have a basis on which to act because there would not be a Federal reapportionment act effective.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the number of Representatives allotted to Michigan were changed by virtue of this census, would that require all the Members of Michigan to run State-wide?

Mr. McLEOD. If Michigan lost in accordance with the 1940 census, that is right. If the legislatures failed to act, and they will fail to act if that provision is not corrected here, it would oblige the total membership from those States that lose Representatives to run at large.

From a study of available statistics and estimates of prospective State populations that the census to begin April 1 will disclose, it would appear that the new census will necessitate a readjustment of congressional representation affecting from one-fourth to one-third of the 48 States. About half of those affected States it would appear will gain representation at the expense of the other half. Without redistricting, those States gaining additional representatives would elect them at large. This would necessitate aspirants for the extra seats to engage in State-wide primary and general election campaigns, instead of in a restricted area embracing some 300,000 persons.

In those States that would lose population, without redistricting all of their representatives would be required to run from a State at large. This was the case in 1932 in the States of Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, and Virginia. Kentucky and Virginia were prevented from redistricting in 1931 because their legislatures do not meet in the odd numbered years. In Missouri and Minnesota, the legislatures failed to act on redistricting at the 1931 session. In the other States that lost representation by the 1931 census, however, the legislatures were very prompt to act after the March 4 dead-line that settled the question as to what their representation would be. Likewise, most of the States that gained representation by the 1930 census acted promptly at their 1931 sessions by passing redistricting measures.

In the main, the States were more than anxious to rearrange their congressional districts and provide a more equitable distribution of their congressional representation after the long 20-year period of no reapportionment between the 1910 and 1930 censuses.

The importance of redistricting and the inequality of representation that results when redistricting does not occur is strikingly illustrated by conditions existing today in some of the States that have failed to redistrict since the last census. The State of Illinois has gone for practically 40 years without a readjustment of its congressional districts. The State was last redistricted following the 1900 census. In Cook County, Ill.—the city of Chicago and its immediate suburbs—under the redistricting following the 1900 census, the largest district among the 10 from that county had a population of 286,643. The smallest had a population of 181,936, a spread between the two of 104,707. By the 1930 census, the largest Cook County district had 889,349 population and the smallest 138,481, a spread of 751,868. In other words, 10 years ago, one Chicago district had more than three-quarters of a million greater population to be represented by a single Representative than another district within that same city. By this time, after another 10 years have elapsed, the difference between these two districts undoubtedly is well over 800,000.

Redistricting has gone by default in New York State for the 30 years since the 1910 census. Within the municipal limits of New York City and suburban Long Island and Westchester County, there are 25 congressional districts that have remained unchanged for approximately 30 years. When New York was last redistricted, following the 1910 census, the largest of these districts had a population of 221,206 persons and the smallest 197,344, a difference of less than 25,000. By the 1930 census, the largest district in metropolitan New York had 799,407 population and the smallest 90,671, a difference of more than 700,000. By this time, that difference undoubtedly exceeds three-quarters of a million persons.

In 1930 the smallest New York City district had less population than even sparsely settled Nevada, the smallest State in population in the United States. Today Nevada's population is probably one-third greater than that of this one district of New York. That New York City district is the smallest in the entire United States.

While these may be regarded as extremely rare cases, they do emphasize the importance of a periodical readjustment through redistricting within the States to insure that equality of representation in the Congress as guaranteed by the Constitution.

I do not believe this House should place any obstacles in the way which would prevent the States from redistricting at the earliest possible moment following the taking of the census. For that reason I consider it extremely important that my amendment designed to speed up redistricting before the next year's legislatures adjourn should be adopted by this Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I shall not have spoken a very few of these minutes before you will realize that I cannot add very much to this discussion. Some observations have been made in the debate thus far that have attracted my attention, which may be worthy of mentioning.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has stated his conviction that the House of Representatives is already large enough numerically and perhaps too large. I can remember as a youngster sitting in these galleries and watching the House in session in the late nineties and the early 1900's. In those days each Member had his own desk here. I think the total number of Members at that time was something around 350, although I may be mistaken. The membership is now 435. I should greatly regret its ever being made larger. My idea of an effective legislative body is one in which each Member has an opportunity to become well acquainted with all other Members. If this cannot be accomplished by the individual Member, he may not be as effective as would be the case if he knew all the Members well.

I have always contended the most interesting and perhaps as effective a legislative body as I ever came in contact with was the New York Assembly, which consists of 150 members. The business assigned to the assembly is important enough to attract and hold the attention of every one of the 150, yet the number is so small as to permit each one to know 149 men intimately. It would be a pity, I think, if this House were increased; and from a personal standpoint, as I have tried to say, it always strikes me that we would have exceeded and gone beyond the point of the maintenance of interest, we would be at the point of diminishing interest amongst the Members at large, if this body were increased. The thing I dread is that in the future, as a result of certain factional combinations and political machinations, with no rule to guide us, the House will be enlarged. I am glad the act of 1929 was passed.

It does not frighten me a bit that the House has apparently frozen itself, although that is not an absolutely true statement, at 435. Of course, some future House, despite the passage of this bill and despite the passage of the act of 1929, if it wants to, will have, under the terms of this bill, 6 or 7 months in which to change that number 435 either up or down, but I think it is a very, very rare occasion when any legislative body reduces itself downward. Very seldom does that happen. The danger is that the number keeps going upward, upward, upward, in order to make it a little easier for everybody to stay here.

I do not believe this bill confides to the President any dictatorial powers any more than I think it takes from the House any of its constitutional powers. As I read this measure and the measure of 1929, the function performed by the President is purely ministerial. Under this bill he will simply send to the Congress the census returns next January. Based on those returns, and using the number 435 as the quotient, each State will be found to be entitled to so many Members. There will be a few changes, not very drastic, but I would rather have that rule adhered to than to throw the whole thing wide open, year after year, to confusion, and delay, and the play of politics, with the ultimate result that this great institution—the House of Representatives—would be less great. [Applause.]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time at my disposal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to note that the Committee on the Census is going to introduce an amendment striking out the provision with reference to aliens in section 2 of the bill, and that if the amendment carries—and I am sure it will—aliens will be included in the numerical count for congressional reapportionment. The constitutional provision which bears on that amendment is contained in the first sentence of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment, which reads as follows:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

It will be observed that the term used in the foregoing provision of the Constitution is "persons" and not "citizens." Indians not taxed are expressly excluded. Nothing is said about aliens. The word "person" is likewise used in the first section of the fourteenth amendment, which contains clauses relating to due process of law and equal protection of the laws. If the word "person" were not used in that section, then an alien might be precluded from the constitutional protection with reference to due process and with reference to equal protection of the laws. But aliens are not so precluded. They are protected alike with citizens as to due process and equal protection of the law.

We know that the Supreme Court has given us a number of famous decisions which unequivocally hold that the word "persons," when used in the fourteenth amendment, either in the first or second sections or anywhere else, includes aliens. These cases, which I shall place in the RECORD, are Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356, 369); United States v.

Wong Kim (169 U. S. 649, 695); and Truax v. Raich (239 U. S. 33, 39).

That it has been recognized that the Constitution bars the exclusion of aliens from computations of population for purposes of apportionment appears from the fact that in 1930, at the time of the Fifteenth Decennial Census, at least two proposed constitutional amendments were introduced in order to change the rule on this point (71st Cong., 2d sess., H. J. Res. 263; H. J. Res. 356; and S. J. Res. 187). Both attempts, incidentally, failed. If the Members of the House in their wisdom in 1930 felt that you could not strike aliens from the count except by constitutional amendment, it seems rather anomalous now that you do it by a mere act of this Legislature. It cannot be done that way. If you want aliens out, you must amend the Constitution.

It is well, and I ask the gentleman from Mississippi, who is in the Chamber, to do so, to go back over the history of the founding fathers and see how they came to the idea of including aliens in the count. That was the result of the so-called great compromise. In opposition to the aforesaid attempted amendments as to aliens, in a report which I helped write in 1931, which was signed by the then chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], and also signed by Mr. Dyer, Mr. Stobbs, and the now distinguished mayor of New York City, Fiorello LaGuardia, as well as myself, we drew attention to that compromise in this language. We first said, however, that there was great conflict in the Constitutional Convention with reference to representation in the House of Representatives and with reference to taxation. The smaller States wanted not only equal representation in the Senate but equal representation in this Chamber, and be it said that Washington, Hamilton, Franklin, and even Madison wished equal representation in this Chamber for the small States as well as the large States. There was great tumult. The larger States refused to abide by the idea of equal representation and there was great argument pro and con.

Finally, when they were just on the eve of breaking up altogether, Franklin suggested an adjournment for 48 hours to enable them to see whether any compromise could be effected, and you remember that Franklin made the wise suggestion that the Members should talk with the Members with whom they differed, and not with the Members with whom they agreed. As a result of the 48-hour adjournment, when they reconvened there was a more amicable spirit, and finally the great compromise was made of equal representation in the Senate and proportional representation in the House, but based upon some equitable method of ascertaining what might be called the equities of contribution to the common Treasury. How then did the expression "free, white persons" come into it, "excluding Indians not taxed"? The original idea was to base each State's contribution to the Treasury upon the landed wealth of the various States. That was found to be impracticable, partly because so many had lands of only conjectural value, partly because they had not the facilities to determine the relative wealth of the country. Then they adopted the idea which is the historical basis for the present Constitution, that, as there was no method of measuring the relative wealth of the States, according to which political power in the House of Representatives should be apportioned, the only way was to assume that the population which created the wealth would create it in approximately equal amounts; that if New York had 10,000,000 people, and another State had 1,000,000, New York would create 10 times as much wealth.

That is how the great compromise arose, which found its way into article I, section 2, of the Constitution, and finally into the fourteenth amendment.

For 150 years we have included aliens in the count. We cannot, by mere resolution of this body or the adjoining body, change that constitutional requirement. If you strike out aliens you have parted with a principle of government upon which the fathers agreed some 150 years ago, which they thought a reasonable adjustment of the whole problem. When we use the word "persons" we include all peoples. We include even those who do not choose to vote, and, I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi, we even include convicts, who have lost their citizenship, who have lost the right to vote. We include children under age, insane people, persons under disability. All are counted including—now—Negroes—originally three-fifths of the Negroes. We include women and minors; we include all persons, and it would be rather anomalous now for the first time to say that we shall not include aliens as now being persons.

As a result of that compromise——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. In just a moment, I will yield.

As a result of that compromise, population becomes a yardstick to determine two things, taxation and representation in the House. Now, shall we, by a mere fiat of this body and the Senate, destroy that great compromise that has been deemed sacred for all these years, for a century and a half? I am sure we cannot do it and we will not do it upon mature reflection.

I may say also that not so many years ago, as far as aliens are concerned, aliens were allowed to vote upon mere declaration of intention to become a citizen. They were allowed to vote up until 1917 in seven different States, and prior to 1917 aliens were permitted to vote in over a dozen States, like Alabama, Arkansas, Arizona, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, and Oregon. Those States at that time needed the alien. They needed him to build the roads and dig the ditches and tunnel the mountains, lay the railroad tracks and build the bridges and all the other structures that were required, and there were not enough hands to do all the work and therefore those voting rights were accorded the alien to induce him to come to those States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman confesses, then, that they will not let them vote, but they want to count them and give them representation in a Congress that they cannot vote for, and I want to ask the gentleman this question. Does he contend that aliens who are in this country in violation of law have the right to be counted and be represented in the Congress of the United States?

Mr. CELLER. The Constitution says that all persons shall be counted. I cannot quarrel with the founding fathers. They said that all should be counted. We count the convicts who are just as dangerous and just as bad as the Communists or as the Nazis, as those aliens here illegally, and I would not come here and have the temerity to say that the convicts shall be excluded, if the founding fathers say they shall be included. The only way we can exclude them would be to pass a constitutional amendment.

If we do what the gentleman wants to do, namely, exclude aliens, we create greater disproportion, aside from destroying that aforementioned sacred compromise. We know, for example, that there is overrepresentation of smaller States, not only in the Senate, but also in the electoral college. What about that overrepresentation? Way back, 150 years ago, the constitutional fathers said that we will allow that overrepresentation of the smaller States in the electoral college and in the Senate, a condition there of a price, therefore the larger and more populous States have had larger, that is, proportionate, representation in this Chamber. Therefore we must give the larger States their due. We must determine taxation and representation in the House by the population, by the total population.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Speaking of overpopulation, does the gentleman know that I have more voters in my district than the entire State of Mississippi, which has more than seven times as much representation as my district? [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. How does the gentleman feel about the counting of Indians?

Mr. CELLER. The Indians were taken care of by the fathers in the way indicated in the second section of article I. I cannot quarrel with that, because that is in the Constitution. We cannot change it. We can only change it by a constitutional amendment. If you want to exclude aliens, I do not quarrel with you; but do it by a House joint resolution, by way of a constitutional amendment.

If we exclude the alien in the count, and follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi, Representative RANKIN, as I said before, we give an undue representation to the smaller States. These smaller States would say, in effect, "Despite the original solemn agreement and compromise of the Constitutional Convention, we, the smaller States, want to take some more from the larger States. But we are nevertheless going to preserve the advantage which we have in the Senate as well as in the electoral college, which advantage was given to us in that original agreement and compromise." I have not gone into the figures, but I am of the opinion that over half our population resides in about 9 States. Less than half our population resides in the other 39 States. Thus, these larger States, with their larger wealth and larger population, have only 18 Senators, and only 18 senatorial votes in the electoral college, whereas these smaller States have 78 Senators and 78 senatorial votes in the electoral college. This is a startling inequality. It is a constitutional inequality. But, shall we increase that inequality? We would increase it if we would exclude the alien in the count.

I made a very exhaustive study of the methods that were adopted by other countries. It will be found on page 63 of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, Seventy-first Congress, third session, on House Joint Resolutions 20, 101, 356, and 484, serial 16, January 14, 21, 28, 29, 1931. It is interesting to note that the South American countries—for example, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, and many others—when they determine the number of representatives in the more popular branch of their legislature have always considered the entire population, aliens as well as natives. It is curious that England does the same thing. Canada does the same. Australia does the same. New Zealand does the same. The Union of South Africa does the same. France does the same. The only nation that I have discovered that departed from the practice was Germany, and there, for purposes of reapportionment, only nationals were considered. I presume only Nazis would be considered of the amount for representation in their more popular legislative branch. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] yield?

Mr. DUNN. Certainly.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state whether he speaks for the committee or simply for himself when he says that he is going to offer an amendment to strike out the clause in respect to aliens?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from New York, a majority of the members of the committee, a quorum being present, voted to strike that out. The vote was 6 to 4. Two or three members did not vote. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. FISH. Yes. Mr. Speaker, we have no further speakers on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2505) to amend an act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress, approved June 18, 1929, so as to change the date of subsequent apportionments.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2505, with Mr. JONES of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a few minutes because many Members desire to speak. I hope that we will be successful in adopting this bill, because it is a very democratic measure.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Under the provision which is carried in the act which this seeks to amend it repeats the words, "citizens, excluding Indians not taxed." Does not the gentleman feel that "not taxed" is the equivalent to meaning not subject to taxation?

Mr. DUNN. That would be my interpretation, but I would be willing to vote for an amendment to the Constitution, if that is necessary, to give Indians the right to vote.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, the Indians do vote now and are citizens under the act of 1924.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that that provision of the Constitution has been construed and is construed in the manner in which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has just said, that it means Indians not subject to taxation?

Mr. DUNN. Yes. That is according to my understanding, but I was under the impression that Indians not taxed are not permitted to vote.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But all Indians subject to taxation are included in this bill, and in fact I think all Indians pay taxes in some form either directly or indirectly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Would not an amendment of that character, regardless of its merit, result in the bill being declared unconstitutional?

Mr. DUNN. There is no such amendment. However, I am one of those persons who is democratic enough to feel that democracy includes everybody and that everybody should have a right to vote, because everybody pays taxes.

Mr. COCHRAN. But regardless of the merits of the question, the Constitution provides that Indians not taxed shall not be counted in connection with apportionment.

Mr. DUNN. That is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the House Committee on the Census, having followed this bill through the hearings, I am thoroughly in favor of it and hope for its passage. I do not believe for one minute that, if we pass this bill, we will be precluded from a further change in the membership of this House, or that the House will be estopped from further apportionment after some subsequent census. We cannot tie the hands of the House in future years by our action today.

I think we will be acting according to the mandate of the Constitution by passing some such measure based on this census now going on; and I believe thoroughly that, in approximate fairness and justice, we ought to do the thing according to the provisions of the law of 1929, which means that we ought to amend the law of 1929, which this bill proposes to do, because of the "lame duck" amendment, and merely put into effect again the law of 1929.

Of course, if I had my way about it, I would prefer a different formula than that of major fractions, but that is a mathematical question which it seems is not worth risking the bill over at this time. The newer method of equal proportions seems to me fairer than the historic method of major fractions.

If I may say one other thing, something has been said here regarding the constitutional provision concerning excluding Indians not taxed. I agree with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] and my colleague the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] that that really means Indians not subject to taxation. No Indians in any State should be excluded as a basis of representation of that State in this body unless such Indians are absolutely free from any form of taxation—National, State, or local—and where are there any such Indians?

Now, I am not going to offer any amendment, and I do not understand that my colleagues propose to offer any amendments. But the proposition is this: It is an administrative detail which may properly be left to the Bureau of the Census carrying out a common-sense meaning of the Constitution.

Let me say that back 150 years ago, when that provision was written into the Constitution, most of the Indians of America were wild men in the forest. Scarcely any of them had any property nor were they within reach of any governmental taxing power. They were regarded outside our political realm. Prior to 1924 we had dealt with them as such, making treaties with the different tribes, as you know, just as if they were foreign nations.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In view of the very common-sense interpretation already placed upon that provision of the Constitution, an amendment to this bill is unnecessary, as it has really been interpreted to include all Indians subject to taxation. As a matter of fact, in view of all of the methods and various taxes, it would be impossible for any person, Indian or white, to escape taxation today. Moreover, it would be impossible to determine who would fall in the exception named in the Constitution, as all persons who have even a sixty-fourth degree of Indian blood are spoken of as Indians.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman is exactly right, it seems to me.

Great changes have occurred in 150 years. Many of those Indians are now prosperous, wide-awake, progressive American citizens. They are subject to taxation in every State of the Union in many ways, whether they have allotments of land or whether they simply eat food which they purchase or buy gasoline. They must pay a sales tax, and in that respect they are taxed and are subject to taxation. I am sure the founding fathers who made it possible for us to count all living beings as persons within the meaning of the constitutional provision—aliens, even criminals, those behind prison bars—certainly did not intend to exclude forever civilized men of red skin, the original occupants of this land.

I call this changed situation to your attention. In my opinion, those words in the Constitution, "excluding Indians not taxed," may be interpreted "excluding Indians not subject to any form of taxation," and that will take care of the desired difference, as I see it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us, in passing this bill, provide for carrying out our constitutional duty after this census is taken. Let us automatically reapportion the seats. We ought to do that according to a rule—this rule—established before the census has been completed. To arrange the rules fairly before the game starts is both expedient and just. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the reapportionment bill now before this House principally because of the automatic provision contained in it. Section 2 provides that in case future Congresses take no action reapportionment automatically takes place.

Also I cannot endorse the position that some Members take that an apportionment measure must be passed at this session of Congress before the census returns are known; that unless this is done now no apportionment act will be passed, because once the census figures are known the States that will lose will oppose it.

The minority report, which I signed, partly sets forth my reasons for opposing the automatic feature. The purport of this can be nothing other than to attempt to bind future Congresses to the specific will of this Congress. To say that future Congresses are not affected by this measure should it pass, that they would be as free to act as though we had not passed it, is wholly untrue. It would be much easier for future Congresses to do nothing should this automatic feature become law than to enact reapportionment legislation. With respect to a measure like reapportionment, they would in all likelihood be inclined to follow the line of least resistance, which might or might not be in the best interests of the country.

Furthermore, as pointed out in the minority report, this would virtually hand over to the Senate a large part of the authority which the Constitution makers specifically intended should be vested in the lower House alone. Merely by default the Senate would receive extraordinary powers.

What does this measure say to future Congresses? In substance it says this: "We, the Seventy-sixth Congress, will see to it that you obey the Constitution and reapportion as it provides." That, in effect, is precisely what this bill says.

What right have we to do anything like that?

When I took my oath as Congressman I swore only to bind myself to obey the Constitution.

So far as I know, there is nothing anywhere in any of the laws of the land that imposes upon me any duty to attempt to bind future Congressmen to uphold the Constitution.

We go even beyond that presumption when we make it possible, as we actually do, to give over to the Senate the authority to reapportion. This law, if enacted, has the definite effect of altering the Constitution not by direction but indirection.

Certainly, this House has not yet lost its sense of duty and responsibility to a point where this can come to pass.

I have heard it argued there can be no possible condition in the future that could affect the rights and duties of Congress under the apportionment clause. The reason given for this is that Congress must apportion in any event. The assumption apparently is that Congress would have to pass the same kind of law as the one proposed. The premise upon which this reasoning is based is wholly false, because it is possible for conditions to present themselves in the future that would vitiate entirely this assumption.

The Constitution writers fully realized this and were very careful not to bind any Congress too strictly in reapportioning the National Legislature.

The argument that unless we pass this act before the returns of the census are in there is danger of no reapportionment being made, rests altogether on lack of faith in the integrity and responsibility of future Congresses. If Congress has reached that stage, the sooner the country knows about it the better it will be for all of us.

I want a reapportionment act passed just as much as any man in this House, but not on any ground that it must be done before the census returns are in, lest States that will lose Representatives might defeat the measure.

However, the consideration of the question of apportionment should at this particular moment call up in our minds the basic purpose of the apportionment provision in the Constitution. We have present in our country today certain peculiar conditions which should remind us most vividly of the basic purpose the Constitution makers had in mind when they wrote the apportionment provision into our basic law.

I refer, of course, to the preservation of private-property rights. There can be no question that the underlying purpose of the apportionment provision in section 2 of the Constitution was to make secure for all time to come the right of every individual citizen in our country to the fruit of his labor.

But read the debates on this question in the Constitutional Convention, as recorded in Madison's Journal.

Gouverneur Morris and James Wilson, of Pennsylvania; Rufus King, of Massachusetts; Pierce Butler and Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina; Hu Williamson, of North Carolina; Dr. Johnson, of Connecticut; and others of the founding fathers all expressed in no uncertain terms that the primary purpose of providing for apportionment of Representatives in the first branch of the National Legislature was the security of private property.

Madison apparently wished to repose in the second branch of the legislature the duty and responsibility of preserving inviolate the right of private ownership of property, and that "the first branch of the States should be represented according to the number of free inhabitants."

Practically all the men who took part in this discussion were agreed that the basic purpose for providing for apportionment of Representatives was the preservation of private property.

That provision for the future guardianship of private property was uppermost in the minds of the Constitution builders throughout their deliberations, there can be no question. With them, private-property right was synonymous with human liberty. They were thoroughly familiar with the history of the development together of liberty and private property down through the ages, especially since Magna Carta. They were determined nothing should be left undone to make secure the fruit of the hard-won struggle of liberty and private property right.

Indeed, the very soul of the Constitution is the guardianship of the right of every individual to have free title to all the produce which he earns with his own hands and brain.

It should not be overlooked that at the time the Constitution was written, private property right was in a precarious position. It had been insecure during a great part of colonial development.

Indeed, the Revolutionary War itself was generated in no small measure because of the precarious state of private property—see William Sumner in his History of Currency in the United States.

No wonder, then, that the Constitution makers were so deeply concerned with this particular problem. No wonder they bent every effort to lay down a basic law to protect private property. To accomplish this they put their faith in representative government, a legislature elected at frequent intervals by the people—this they thought the surest guaranty of the basic principle they sought to establish and maintain.

In providing for apportionment they thought numbers could be sufficiently relied upon to equitably represent property, but not altogether, which is the reason they tied taxation into the apportionment provision.

"Representatives and direct taxation shall be apportioned among the several States," and so forth, is the way the Constitution reads. Why taxation, and not numbers alone? Because, if based on taxation as well as numbers, there would be provided the necessary interest and incentive for a check-up on public spending and extravagance, a check-up on taxation.

To prevent excessive taxation, therefore, was the real and ultimate underlying purpose of providing for equitable apportionment of representatives to Congress.

We should not overlook the fact that the Constitution was far more concerned with protecting the people against political exploitation than it was with protecting the individual citizens from aggressing upon each other.

Now it is because our country again finds itself with private property rights in great jeopardy, perhaps more so than in the time of the Revolution, that we are forced to give consideration to this supreme economic and social plague.

The basic means now operating to abolish private property ownership is, of course, the political confiscation of our gold money, and forcing our Nation on irredeemable paper currency. However, we are not discussing this phase now. We are considering another process that is rapidly disintegrating our entire economy and abolishing private property; that is, the right of every working person to enjoy the fruit of his labor.

I wish to say at this time I intend to ask unanimous consent later to have inserted in the RECORD some tables which reduce to arithmetic this disintegrating process which I have referred to that is destroying our economy and is destroying property rights in this country. While we cannot avail ourselves of this material in this discussion, I ask all serious-minded men in Congress to read and study those tables, and then judge for themselves whether or not the right of private ownership of property in this country is in a precarious condition today. [Applause.]

The following tables are largely self-explanatory.

The important thing to be noted in all of them is the shift of wealth that is taking place from certain States to others. It will be noted that this is mainly from the Northern to the Southern States. It must not be thought, however, that this shift takes place only with respect to States. The process involves a shift among groups and individuals of all States.

It is very important that we understand clearly what is meant by the term "wealth," that it is simply the produce of labor. Hence, by shifting of wealth we mean the taking away, by taxation, of the produce of labor from some States, groups, and individuals, and giving it to other States, groups, and individuals. In between, of course, is the political machine which in this process is now taking a toll of about a billion dollars a year.

A study of table 1 will show that in the 6 fiscal years, 1934–39, the first 30 States on this list have paid and obligated themselves for about $5,270,000,000 but have received in the same period of time $11,113,000,000, or, in other words, have had all taxes and debt returned to them and a bonus of $5,843,000,000 in addition.

The 18 remaining States have paid and obligated themselves for $35,227,000,000 and have received $15,000,000,000 in grants and subsidies, which means they have paid and obligated themselves for $20,000,000,000 more than they received. Which all adds up to this; the 30 States have had all costs refunded, hence the Federal Government has cost them nothing during this 6-year period and they have made a clear profit of nearly $6,000,000,000, while the other 18 States have had to pay all Government costs, assume the whole burden of the added debt, pay their own subsidies and give the 30 States the $6,000,000,000 bonus.

Thirty-seven percent of the population lives in the first 30 States listed in table 1. They paid during this period about 13 percent of the Federal taxes and received 42.5 percent of grants and subsidies.

The remaining 18 States with 63 percent of the population paid 87 percent of the taxes and received only 57.5 percent of the grants and subsidies.

The 30 States received 42.5 percent of grants and subsidies, or $11,113,126,069. Had they received grants and subsidies in proportion to the taxes they paid they would have received 13 percent of the total grants and subsidies, or $3,401,383,687. The excess these 30 States received in proportion to the taxes paid was $7,711,742,382, which represents the shift in wealth from the 18 States to the 30.

In connection with table 3, on a population basis, the farmers' share of the increase of the Federal debt in the 6 fiscal years 1934–39 is more than $4,000,000,000. So that the farmers have obligated themselves in Federal debt for much more than they received in benefit payments.

Note in table 4 the extraordinarily wide extremes in the amounts of farm-benefit payments paid to States. Mississippi farmers in the 6 fiscal years 1934–39 received in payments 23.8 percent of their farm-land value, while Rhode Island farmers in the same time received only three-tenths of 1 percent of their farm-land value.

No nation can possibly long endure a process of disintegration and destruction such as this study reveals. What permanent damage may already have been done to our economy there is no way of knowing.

Considering the fact that a multitude of all-powerful bureaus and nearly 500,000 fixed and permanent political jobs are now set up to operate this dissipating process, at an added cost of about $1,000,000,000 a year; considering, also, that there are other processes of the same nature now operating upon our economy—some more vicious than the one here considered—who can possibly doubt that our country is confronted with a most serious problem?

[2] We have assumed that each State will be charged for its share of the Federal debt, added during this period, in the same proportion as the taxes it has paid bear to the total Federal taxes paid during these years.

[3] This $40,496,756,336 does not represent the entire cost of the 6-year period. In the operation of the Treasury there are sources of income that cannot be credited directly to the various States. Also a study of the "Report submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate of the United States pursuant to S. Res. 150" indicates that a true accounting and audit of the operations of the numerous agencies with which this report deals, would show heavy losses. Eventually all costs must be borne by the States in proportion to the taxes they pay.

[1] Report No. 9, Office Government Reports.
[2] Department of Commerce, Summary of Finance of State Governments, No. 2)

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems that every time we have a reapportionment question under consideration we hear about the aliens in this country. There are aliens in this country today that you are attempting to exclude who are becoming citizens daily. If I had my way, you would have no alien population, if some of the bills recommended by the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman were adopted.

Insofar as the aliens who have no right to be here are concerned, they are being deported at the rate of from 7,000 to 9,000 a year. Now, you are trying to exclude aliens, people who have been here for 30 or 40 years, who possibly could not read the whole Constitution of the United States and know all about the history of the Government, and therefore were unable to qualify for citizenship. They have reared five or six or more children in this country. Some of them have served in the World War, and still you are trying to exclude those men and women, pioneers, who have built this country and made this great democracy and this great country of ours. No, my friends; we should not have to have an attack on aliens here every time we have a reapportionment bill. I do not think it is the proper thing to do. I do not think the Congress should do it. I believe that the statement made by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has been very specific on that question.

Now, we have a bill before this Congress that would take care of old people who have been here 40 or 50 years, to give them the right to become citizens, but under the present rules and regulations those old people cannot possibly pass the test. If you will pass this bill, you can allow over a million old people to register and become citizens, because they are citizens in their hearts. They have adopted this country as their real country. They have adopted every principle of democracy. In fact, they are better citizens than some I know who are parading around this country wrapping themselves in the American flag.

Mr. Chairman, there ought to be some way by which we could once and for all try to assimilate these aliens who are here permanently and who want to become citizens. They should have some opportunity to do it. At the present moment there are pending before my committee several hundred bills, about 80 percent of them nothing but alien-baiting bills. Some bills have for their purpose the deportation of three and one-half million people. I do not know that I could get enough ships to deport them, and there is no justification for such action in the first place. Some want to deport aliens because they have been on relief. Some of our courts have even denied citizenship to aliens if they have been on relief for a day or a month, and they cannot become citizens because of that fact.

I say to you we ought to be more friendly and more kindly to those people who are permanently in this country who have committed no crime. We should give them the right to be assimilated into our country and find some better method of proceeding in the matter of granting citizenship. Figures submitted by the Department of Labor show that aliens are being naturalized and becoming citizens at the rate of 200,000 a year. The very people you want to exclude under the reapportionment are those who will be citizens within the next year or two. I venture to say that within the next 10 years the bulk of these people whom you desire to exclude under this reapportionment plan will become citizens; and I say to you it would be a discrimination against them, it would be unfair, it would be in violation of the Constitution of the United States to adopt this proposal. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I suggested that I might like 5 minutes this afternoon after considering one item in the bill. I was amazed to read the last clause excluding aliens. I could not believe it. I immediately referred to the Constitution. I am not a constitutional expert but this exclusion is too plainly unconstitutional. However, I would like to remind the House in line with what the first speaker on the bill said this afternoon, that the twentieth amendment to the Constitution was known here as the Gifford amendment. I was chairman of that committee, having charge, and claim full right of authorship of the second half of the twentieth amendment, but not the "lame duck" portion of it. At that time I made myself somewhat familiar with this portion of the Constitution. It was pleasing to me to have him say he wished now that we could have insisted and won out in conference on the proposition that the second session of the Congress should have a determined date of adjournment. We fought strenuously for that in the House but the conferees could not agree. The whole matter failed in one Congress, but at the next election the Democrats won and we now suffer from their action in agreeing to indefinite session.

I am told that the committee itself will offer an amendment to take out this last clause "excluding aliens." The gist of the remarks I expected to make, therefore, perhaps are not now germane. As I read the Constitution—and I think you will read it that way, too—we must count all persons, and we have always counted all persons except Indians not taxed or subject to tax. To me it is amazing that the committee could have thought of excluding aliens in this matter. Aliens cause a Congressman more work than others, for they have more complications with their relatives and families, especially in general immigration matters. I have some aliens in my section, old people now, of a higher type even perhaps than their children whom we have educated. Many of them pay large taxes but never have learned to read and write and at this late date will not learn to read and write. Yet they are good citizens. Some State laws regarding citizenship are severe, however. When they go to the naturalization court the judge asks them rather difficult questions and, of course, they are required to read and write.

So I am deprived, if you please, of saying what I might have said if I thought there was the slightest chance of this alien clause remaining in the bill.

You say anybody ought to be able to read and write. Maybe—I once read of a case—

"Can you read and write?"

"No; I can write."

"Write me something."

He wrote it.

"Read it."

"I told you," he said, "that I could not read." [Laughter.]

They may be able to read and write in another language. Again, if I thought this clause would remain in this bill, I might draw some comparisons here that would not be, perhaps, too agreeable. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, if this bill passes in its present form, unless some saving clause is added, in my opinion you might just as well throw it in the wastebasket now.

The language providing for the exclusion of aliens from the population total is in direct violation of the Constitution. There is no doubt about that being a fact. Simply read section 2 of amendment 14 of the Constitution and you will agree with my contention.

I cannot conceive that this House would pass a bill knowing it is a direct violation of the Constitution, regardless of one's personal views on the subject.

Mr. Chairman, we have just heard some remarks in reference to aliens and the naturalization of aliens. I do not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] on this subject. Aliens should not be naturalized unless they prove that they are qualified to become citizens of this country. The fact that aliens have not become naturalized is due to their inability to meet the requirements; until they can meet the requirements, I say they have no business becoming citizens of this country, which would enable them to exercise the same right of suffrage as those born in this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The only way in which they cannot meet the requirements is to answer the question whether they have read the Constitution, can read and write English, and know about the history of this country. Otherwise they are of good character and sound health, in spirit they are Americans, they raise American children, they are fine people, they have adopted this country, but they cannot pass the test laid down by certain judges in regard to reading and writing the language. At the same time many of them are better citizens than some of the people who were born in this country.

Mr. COCHRAN. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not making a speech. I am asking the gentleman a question, that is all.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is more interested or as much interested in another class of aliens that is not included in those to which he has just referred. He wants laws passed, and he openly tells the House he does, legalizing the entry of millions of aliens who came here illegally. That is the class which is excluded that he would permit to be naturalized. I would not be willing to permit them to become citizens.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts said, it is true that there are lots of aliens in this country who have been here for many, many years and who are not capable of reading and writing the English language. Why should people be made American citizens who cannot read nor write our language after being here for years? True they have American-born children, but they should be made to meet the requirements of our laws or remain in the alien class.

I do not think that we should let down the bars and permit them to become citizens and participate in our elections which means they help select public officials. One who cannot learn our language should never be permitted to become a citizen no matter what other qualifications he possesses. I hope the House will appreciate that the last sentence of this bill is unconstitutional and strike it from the bill. You cannot amend the Constitution by an act of Congress.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not understand why the people are so concerned about aliens not becoming naturalized. I do not understand why they want to force them into the councils of the Nation. If they do not want to be citizens or if they are not able to discharge the serious duties of American citizenship, it is a good thing for the country that they are not citizens, as it appears to me these foreign peoples are among us by our invitation. They have no voice in our Government now. That is as it should be until they are fit to be and ready to be a part of this people.

Mr. COCHRAN. I agree with the gentleman from Texas, and I also say they should be qualified to become citizens under existing law, and until they are we should see to it they are not permitted to become citizens of our country. That is my viewpoint. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, ever since I have been a Member of this House I have been more or less confused by the action of other Members as to whether or not this is a legislative body creating the laws or a judicial body interpreting the laws.

It seems that every time certain Members are opposed to particular pieces of legislation they fall back on one of three things: First, it is alien legislation; secondly, they will rise and wave the flag; or, thirdly, they will decide that they are the Supreme Court and therefore interpret the constitutionality of the measure. I believe that the Constitution implicitly states that we are here merely to make laws and that we shall allow the judicial branch of the Government to interpret them.

The alien has great uses in this body. Despite the fact that he is here legally and we have invited him to our shores to a greater or lesser degree it always seems to be open season for aliens on the part of some of the Members. Since we have allowed them to come here, why not give them the opportunity to become good, decent, law-abiding citizens? Do not create the impression in their minds that we are putting every process that we can invent in the way of their becoming citizens of this country and do not discourage them from taking on the responsibility of citizenship.

The ancestors of most every Member of this House, whether they came over on some Dutch vessel in the seventeenth century or whether they came over in the nineteenth century, were aliens and for the major part they came here with their mattresses on their backs, even though some of the Members would like to forget it today.

Our forefathers became good citizens and did their part in the upbuilding of the American civilization. Why not give a like opportunity to those aliens who have been legally admitted in the last few years.

As to the reapportionment of congressional districts, every time the question comes up technical questions and technical objections are raised. Never will there be a bill before this House that will be satisfactory to every Member. The millennium has not as yet arrived. But, I believe that we can be fair about this question. We know that some States are overrepresented and some States are under-represented. Looking through the Congressional Directory I find that in the State of Alabama there are 9 congressional districts although the vote for the State of Alabama is about one-half of the vote in my congressional district. The Directory shows that for the State of Arkansas there are 7 Members of Congress and there, too, the vote is not comparable to that of my district. Florida has 5 Congressmen, and, likewise, its total vote is less than that of the Eighth Congressional District of New York and several other districts. There are 10 Representatives from the State of Georgia despite the fact that there are not as many voters as in my own district. And so on down the line.

Since my time is limited, I cannot say much more on this gross irregularity of representation. Let us remember as Members of the House of Representatives that we have a certain dignity to uphold and that we are bound not only by an oath but also by a code of honor to see that the people of these United States shall receive proper representation. Politically speaking, I would be far better off with a large district. If I were merely considering the political angle it is much easier for an incumbent to hold his seat in a large district as the problem of an independent to get organized is a huge one. But I am not speaking of the political aspect. If I were, I would be opposed to reapportionment. I am thinking that the people of my district who number over 1,000,000 are entitled to more than one Representative in this National Legislature. I am thinking of other gigantic districts that have but one Representative in this Congress whereas they should have at least two or three.

In conclusion, let us abide by the Constitution of the United States, by the moral obligation we owe our people, and above all by the spirit of fair play that has at all times dominated American life.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

INDIANS AND CONGRESSIONAL APPORTIONMENT

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself to the question of the counting of Indians in congressional apportionments. The phrase used in the Constitution and in the amendment to the Constitution excludes Indians "not taxed." The language of section 2, of the fourteenth amendment, is:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

I have given some study to the effect of that language and have consulted authorities on Indian legislation, officials of the Indian Office, and officials of Census Bureau. It is my conclusion and, I believe, the conclusion of those I have consulted that the Indians not taxed today are nonexistent. I know of none such. Certainly they are of a negligible number within the meaning of the Constitution, and therefore the provision in question has ceased to be operative for all practical purposes.

Today, what Indian is not subject to taxes—taxes used to defray governmental expenses? Even though an Indian may have some property held in the name of the United States in trust for him and which is not taxed, the Indian himself is subject to a great many taxes—gasoline taxes everywhere, cigarette and tobacco taxes everywhere, sales taxes in many States, income taxes on income from lands held in trust, such as oil-land royalties, even taxes on property bought with restricted funds in many cases, taxes on any property not held for him in trust by the Government under special legislation.

No one who is familiar with the facts in the matter will disagree with the common-sense attitude of the distinguished chairman of the Census Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN], when I asked him his thought in the matter a few minutes ago. He agreed with my observation that to be subject to taxation is to be taxed within the meaning of the Constitution.

It will interest Members of this body, perhaps, to know that this opinion is fortified by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The question was passed on in the case of United States v. Kagama (118 U. S. 378), in which the Court said:

> In declaring the basis on which representation in the lower branch of the Congress and direct taxation should be apportioned, it was fixed that it should be according to numbers, excluding Indians not taxed, which, of course, excluded nearly all of that race, but which meant that if there were such within a State as were taxed to support the Government, they should be counted for representation, and in the computation for direct taxes levied by the United States.

Such there be today. Indeed, what Indian is not subject to Federal gasoline taxes that go into the Federal Treasury and are there expended for the support of the Government?

For a time there was another question which it seemed necessary to decide the question of citizenship. In a case before the Supreme Court, Elk v. Wilkins (112 U. S. 102), the Court had said:

> Indians not taxed are still excluded from the count, for the reason that they are not citizens.

But that matter was taken care of by an act of Congress, the Indian Citizenship Act signed by President Coolidge June 2, 1924, 43 Statutes 253, the first paragraph of which reads as follows:

> All Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States are declared citizens of the United States. The granting of citizenship to Indians shall not in any manner affect the right of any Indian to tribal or other property.

Today Indians are citizens, and citizenship and total exemption from taxation are mutually inconsistent.

So the two constitutional questions involved have been settled by decisions of the Supreme Court and the act of citizenship.

The only question remaining to be settled, then, is the question of fact. In a given case, as a matter of fact, is this Indian taxed or is he not taxed? The State of Washington has a constitutional provision which uses the same phrase with respect to the right of suffrage. It denied the ballot to Indians not taxed. The interpretation given there is in point here. The attorney general of that State in an official opinion, No. 4086, dated April 1, 1936, stated:

> The payment of sales taxes and gasoline tax is a sufficient qualification on the part of an Indian offering to vote to comply with the provisions of article VI, as amended.

Since Indians are subject to the Federal gas tax throughout the United States, it follows then that they cannot be excluded from counting in apportionment as being "Indians not taxed."

Within the last few years the Supreme Court of the United States has also held that the income of an Indian, in the form of royalties from oil lands, even though the land itself be exempt, is taxable under the income-tax laws of the United States.

I might point out further that in most States where the sales tax exists it is a lieu tax levied in place of property taxes, and the receipts from that go into the general fund of the State treasury and are used for the payment of the general expenses of the State government. That is the situation in my own State of South Dakota. We abolished the State levy on real estate and established a 3-cent sales tax, which is paid by the Indians as well as the whites. The proceeds go into the State treasury and are used to pay the running expenses of the State government—old-age assistance, bond issues, and every other purpose for which State revenues are spent. Obviously these Indians are all taxed and should be included in the enumeration on which the number of Representatives is based.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I wish to thank the gentleman for his splendid presentation of this matter that affects the Indians. It is inconceivable under our present set-up, considering all of our taxation evidence, to think of an Indian who is not taxed today. Is that not correct?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is right. They all do pay taxes, and I may say they all serve in case of war.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They pay taxes in some form or other.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They are citizens of the United States and, as the gentleman has just said, they serve in the Army in time of war.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; the gentleman certainly knows that to be the truth. He knows that our Indians in the Northwest are a brave people and he always fights for them.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not true that at the time the Constitution was framed 150 years ago most of the Indians of this country were not within the reach of our taxing power? They were men without property, and many of them were in the distant wilderness, where they could not be reached even if we had attempted to tax them.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. Of course, there has been a good deal of change in conditions and in statutory law since that time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDELSTEIN].

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I have heard with much concern the discussion which has been aroused by the committee's amendment which proposes to exclude aliens from population totals in apportioning representation. As a part of this discussion, although not necessarily related to it, one Member has stated on the floor of this House that aliens should not be admitted to citizenship unless they are qualified. That statement, it seems to me, merely begs the question. The statutes in relation to the admission of persons to citizenship distinctly provide that no person is subject to naturalization unless he or she is qualified. Therefore, to talk about aliens and to say that they should not be admitted to citizenship unless they are qualified is begging the question.

I come from a district whose population consists of American citizens of diverse origin. Some of them had native-born parents and can probably say that they are Americans of the second, third, fourth or even of a greater generation. Others were born in this country of foreign parentage and with equal pride can say that they are first-generation Americans.

There are other citizens living in my district who are equally good Americans, but who became citizens by naturalization. They are of Russian, Polish, Italian, Jewish, Ukranian, German, Hungarian, French, and Irish birth. There is scarcely a European race which does not have some representatives living in my district. These people are members of all the different Protestant sects, Roman Catholic Church, Greek Orthodox Church, and the Hebrew religion. In short, the population in my district comprises all races and all religions.

These people came to this country because they believed it to be a land of opportunity and a land of freedom. They availed themselves of the democratic privilege of becoming citizens of this democracy. They have been good American citizens, they have reared families, and their children are some of the most representative people in our community. It is with regret that I notice that the discussion with respect to aliens overlooks the fact that the great majority of aliens in this country are law-abiding, substantial people, most of whom have become citizens. To accuse aliens of faults or weaknesses which they do not have, as a group, is not consistent with the facts and ignores the rights which those aliens and their children have under our form of government.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDELSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I wish to approve what the gentleman has said in the light of my experience. I have known some of the finest people who came from foreign countries and who would not have been able to read their own names if they saw their names written in boxcar letters.

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Notwithstanding what the gentleman has said about a half a dozen judges in the United States who have sworn to support the Constitution, in the last few years have denied citizenship to aliens who were otherwise qualified to obtain that great privilege, on the sole ground that since they were aliens they had no right to seek relief, even though economic conditions made it imperative that they do so. Because these aliens had obtained relief these judges denied them admission to United States citizenship without any provision of the law authorizing them to take such action.

It seems to me that a good many attacks have been launched on aliens without justification for such attacks and that they are increasing in number. I wish to say that every time I hear such statements made about aliens as a group I find it necessary to determine whether the assertion is made sincerely or whether it is made merely for political capital. In my humble opinion, I believe that such remarks which are made only for political capital are both unfair and unjust. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I believe the fact that the committee of which I am a member is going to offer an amendment to the bill striking out the alien clause is sufficient evidence that it should never have been in the bill originally.

The gentleman from Missouri brought up the question of qualification for citizenship. I have no particular sympathy for an alien who is an announced anarchist, or who is a member of the Communist Party, or of any other group in this country that is opposed to the American form of government; but I have much less use for the American-born citizens, the sons and daughters of upstanding and outstanding American people, who are "parlor pinks," masquerading under the guise of citizenship granted them by birth, and belonging to communistic and other subversive organizations in this country, and who are going around in the parlors of the wealthy of the country preaching their "pink" communism and the overthrow of this Government. These people have had every single advantage that America could offer them, and still they are out trying to overthrow the form of government we all love.

This alien question is exaggerated. It is talked about altogether too much. This provision never should have been in this bill, and I am happy that the Committee is going to strike it out, because if we have a problem in this country it is not with the few hundreds of thousands of aliens, or even the few millions of aliens we have here, it is with the American-born citizens, educated in our schools and our universities, who are turning against their mother country, and turning against the principles of the Government that has given them every advantage in the world. This is the gang we have to watch out for, and we had better go into our schools and into our universities, if we are going to find the correction for this whole problem. [Applause.]

In Wisconsin we have some fine German immigrant folks, who have been so busy on the farm, making a living and raising a good family they have not given thought to obtaining citizenship papers. They are embarrassed because they cannot properly express themselves in English, and hesitate to take the examination. Who would say they were not good citizens? Who would condemn them? Certainly no one in their right mind.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, we have listened for an hour to a discussion of this bill, but I, for one, as a Member of this House, cannot agree that unless we amend the Census Act of 1929 there can be no apportionment. The fact is that if we do not pass any of these amendments as contained in S. 2505, then the reapportionment will be left in the hands of the Congress where it properly belongs. Nor can I see any reason for using the 1930 census figures as a basis for the 1940 apportionment. The amendment before us is brought here after action by the Senate, when in fact the whole matter much more vitally concerns the membership of the House of Representatives, where apportionment legislation should originate. No constitutional provision requires Congress to pass an automatic reapportionment act, nor to pass any reapportionment act, before the census has been taken. If we do not pass this bill, the reapportionment will be left in the hands of Congress, where it belongs. If this bill becomes law the next apportionment will be made by an agency of the Government, and not by the Congress, by the method of major fractions. And, unless further amended the automatic new apportionment would not take effect prior to the 1944 election when the Seventy-ninth Congress will be chosen.

The first congressional apportionment was made by the Constitution itself, and from that time to the present, Congress has met its responsibility in the matter after every decennial census with the single exception of that of 1920.

We should postpone the enactment of an apportionment law until the census has been taken, and until we know how the population of our country is distributed. I am quite sure that when this is done the Congress will meet its obligation and be in a better position to legislate on the subject of apportionment.

I have given some of the reasons why the Congress should reserve to itself its full power of legislation, instead of, by legislation of this kind, turning over to a bureau of the Federal Government further rights and duties which properly belong here.

I cannot subscribe to the theory that we must automatically provide for the taking of a census for fear the next Congress will not be of sufficient integrity to pass upon the subject.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINZER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. A great deal has been said about the constitutionality of certain features of this bill. I know the gentleman has given it very close attention for weeks. Is there anything in the Constitution that requires or even implies or infers that Congress should pass an automatic reapportionment measure?

Mr. KINZER. I find no such provision in the Constitution, and I do not think anyone else can.

Mr. CURTIS. And, on the contrary, the implication is that the census shall come first. Is not that right?

Mr. KINZER. Yes.

As has been stated here, I can see nothing sacred about the static number of 435 as the membership of this body in the growth of our country, and I feel sure that the next Congress will be just as able, just as capable, and just as efficient as we are; and when they know the population of the States, they will be honest enough to pass an apportionment bill, which they should pass after they have before them the full returns of the census of this country.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINZER. Surely.

Mr. WARREN. I think the gentleman is mistaken when he states that the act of 1929 freezes the membership at 435.

That is surely not the case, because under this bill, if the amendment is adopted here today to clarify the matter, Congress has the right at any time to increase the membership of the House or to reapportion or to do anything else it wants to do.

Mr. KINZER. Yes; but does not the gentleman from North Carolina really know and agree with me that that is the purpose of this bill? This bill first was introduced at the other end of the Capitol by a Member of that body who certainly is not so much concerned about the representation here as we ourselves are, and I know, and I think the gentleman will agree with me, that if this bill passes, by negative action on the part of the Senate they can hold the membership of this House static at 435, and we will never be able to change it.

Mr. WARREN. There ought not to be any criticism of a Member of another body introducing this bill.

Mr. KINZER. I am not criticizing anyone.

Mr. WARREN. Surely he is interested in seeing the mandate of the Constitution carried out, and surely he is interested in seeing whether his State would gain or lose in the electoral college.

Mr. KINZER. I do not know. I am not attacking any Member of the other body; but I do say that the apportionment which concerns the membership of this body, or legislation affecting it, should in all good conscience and judgment originate in this body. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT].

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the committee, I wish to summarize briefly the case for the proponents of this bill. Before doing that, however, I shall pay tribute to the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Hon. MATTHEW DUNN. He has presided over the sessions of our committee with unusual patience and ability, and it is with regret that we learn he is going to retire from this body at the end of this session.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there has been a great deal of irrelevant and immaterial discussion here in respect to this bill. The chairman of the committee is going to offer a committee amendment to strike from the bill the provision relative to aliens; so the argument, insofar as the committee is concerned, respecting the alien section of the bill is immaterial.

There is very little to discuss because this bill is simply a curative measure. Had it not been for the twentieth amendment to the Constitution, we would not now be discussing this bill. It simply adjusts the legislation of 1929 and brings it up to date, in conformity with the change in the convening dates of Congress, as a result of the twentieth amendment. There are two reasons why the bill should receive favorable consideration: In the first place, it is a clear mandate of the Constitution that this body should be apportioned in accordance with the population of the country. The legislation of 1929 was enacted in pursuance to this constitutional mandate. A second reason why this bill should have our favorable consideration is that this is a democratic country and a democratic government, and those of us who sit in this body do so because of the suffrage of the American people. The easiest and quickest way to bring democratic institutions into ill repute—and they have been attacked from abroad, as we know, and also at home—is for us to be partisan and unfair in our deliberations. Representation in Congress should be apportioned in accordance with population, not alone because required by the Constitution but also because fairness and justice require it. I was much impressed by the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] that if he knew, as a matter of fact, that his State would lose representation he would still vote for this bill because it is a just bill, and I think most of us agree with that comment. The bill under consideration passed the Senate unanimously. The only change here is to compel a reapportionment in the next Congress rather than possibly in the Seventy-eighth Congress. There can be no reasonable objection to the bill, it seems to me, and on behalf of the Census Committee I appeal to Members for their favorable consideration of the bill at this time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That an act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress, approved June 18, 1929, is hereby amended in the first sentence of section 22 (a) by striking out the words "second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress" and substituting the following words: "first regular session of the Seventy-seventh Congress", and by striking out "fifteenth" and inserting "sixteenth."

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 2, line 8, after the period insert:

"The said act is further amended in the first sentence of section 22 (a) by striking out the words, 'the then existing number of Representatives' and substituting the following words, '300 Representatives.' "

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane. If the gentleman desires to speak for a moment I shall be very glad to withhold the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oregon would like to reply to the argument, when the gentleman from North Carolina makes it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to reserve the point of order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much whether there is a single Member of this body who has not at some time expressed it as his opinion that the membership of the House of Representatives is too large. When the act of 1929 fixed the membership, or froze it at the then-existing number of 435, I believe a majority of the Members realized that it should have been frozen long before the census of 1910 brought it up to that number. The membership of the House should be reduced at least to the size that it was before it was increased to 435, and I believe if it were reduced to 300 we would have a still more effective and efficient body. The House of Representatives at the present time is so large that it is unwieldy, and I think all of us, through our experience, have come to that conclusion a long time ago.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman think that his State of Oregon would be better represented if they had only one Representative instead of three, as at present?

Mr. MOTT. Well, in the first place, the State of Oregon would be represented by more than 1 Representative, even if the membership were 300. The State of Oregon was represented by 2 Representatives when the membership of this House was much smaller than it is now. It had 2 Members back in 1890, when the population of our State was not half as large as it is now. In that regard, I think the State of Oregon could be just as well represented by 2 Members as by 3. The number would make no difference so long as its proportional representation was the same as all other States. I think the State of New York would be just as well represented by 35 Members as it is by 45 Members, as at the present time, provided that representation was proportional to that of the other States.

The House could conduct its work much more expeditiously and carefully and the people of the United States would, therefore, be better represented. They are just as well represented in the Senate, as a matter of fact, as they are in the House at the present time, and the Senate, of course, is less than one-fourth as large as the House. I think that 300 men in the House of Representatives could give the people of the United States better representation, and do it more easily and thoroughly, than they can with a membership of 435. I think nearly all of us believe that, although for political reasons many would not be willing to vote for the change.

The words which this amendment changes occur four times in the 1929 act. If this amendment should be adopted, I will offer amendments following that to make identical changes in other parts of the act where this language occurs.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. How many new men came in when we froze the number of the House at 435?

Mr. MOTT. One hundred and thirty-five, I think.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. One hundred and thirty-five were added?

Mr. MOTT. I may be mistaken as to the number. The last increase, I believe, was in 1910.

Mr. BLOOM. In 1900 there were 391 Members.

Mr. MOTT. Was that the figure before it was changed to 435?

Mr. BLOOM. Before it was changed to 435 it was 391. That was in 1900. In 1910 there were 435 and in 1930 there were 435.

Mr. MOTT. Well, the figure does not make a great deal of difference. The fact is simply that the House has grown into too large a parliamentary body. It is my opinion that if the membership of the House were 300 or 350, instead of 435, we could carry on our business a great deal better than we are carrying it on now and the people of the United States, accordingly, would have better representation than they are getting at the present time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman is going to insist on the point of order, I would like to be heard, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WARREN. Then I will state, Mr. Chairman, that section 1 merely provides for the time that the President shall report to Congress. The act of 1929, which this bill today seeks to amend, provides for an apportionment based on a House membership of 435. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], of course, would change the entire procedure of the act of 1929, and it is certainly not germane to this bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I just read the bill. The bill is an amendment to the general act. Inasmuch as the purpose of this bill now before us is to amend another bill, would not an amendment to the other bill be germane and in order?

Mr. WARREN. No; I do not think so, when the other bill sets up a method based upon a membership of 435 and sets forth the entire procedure of reapportionment.

Mr. MICHENER. But this is a bill to amend an act "to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress, approved June 18, 1929, so as to change the date of subsequent apportionments." That is the title of the bill that is now before us. It seems to me that the entire act is now before the House. We are attempting to amend that act in certain respects designated in this bill, but the whole bill is the subject of this amendatory bill. If we can offer an amendment to any part of the original act, then we could offer it here, even though it is not in this amendatory act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have had no opportunity as yet to answer the gentleman on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, the bill which is now under consideration is a bill to amend an act approved June 18, 1929.

The act of June 18, 1929, sets up the formula and the machinery for apportionment. It provides in that connection that the President within 1 week thereafter of the second regular session, and so forth, shall file a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State, as ascertained under the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census of the population, and the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of the then existing number of Representatives.

The act provides that the representation shall be apportioned on a basis of the then existing number of 435 Members. This amendment simply changes that basis from 435 to 300. This is offered as an amendment to the act of 1929. The bill the committee now has under consideration is also offered as an amendment to the act of 1929. They are both amendments to the same act, and both amendments relate to the same subject. I feel, therefore, that an amendment along this line would be perfectly germane.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard briefly on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment is not germane to the act of 1929 inasmuch as the act of 1929 applies a specific mathematical formula to a membership of 435. In other words, three factors are involved in the act of 1929: A House of 435 Members with a membership divided or apportioned to the respective States according to a definite formula based upon a certain population to be reported by the census. Two things are constant in that formula: First, the number 435; second, the method of dividing the population. If you insert "300," then you have set up an entirely new proposition, because you have put two variable factors into a mathematical proposition in which you originally had but one, that variable factor being the population of the country. You have, therefore, a new matter, a new subject, each differing from the other just as much as an appropriation for agriculture differs from an appropriation for military affairs. The original proposition being a mathematical formula, I do not believe that any amendment to the formula can be germane.

If the gentleman desires to offer an entirely new method of apportionment to 300, then I think such a substitute would be in order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. How does the gentleman contend that the formula is changed when only the number of Representatives is changed? The method of arriving at the proportional representation of each State is exactly the same. Does the gentleman further contend that because there would be two variables in this new formula that the two variables would make it not germane?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes; because I think the law provides a mathematical method in which only one variable was set out, that variable being the census of the population.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JONES of Texas.) The Chair is ready to rule.

There is no question that the amendment would have been germane to the act of 1929. The precedents, however, seem to be very definite on the proposition that when a bill proposes to amend an act in several particulars an amendment proposing to modify the act but not related to the bill is not germane.

In this connection the Chair reads from Cannon's Precedents, volume VIII, section 2947, the following:

> The House was then, May 14, 1924, considering the bill (H. R. 2169) proposing to amend several sections of the National Defense Act, when Mr. John J. McSwain, of South Carolina, offered an amendment proposing to modify a section of the national defense act not referred to in the pending bill.
>
> A point of order was made that the amendment was not germane either to the bill or to the pending section. After a brief debate the Speaker ruled:
> It does not seem to the Chair that this bill brings the whole National Defense Act before the House. It only brings before the House a very limited portion of it and not the portion affected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina. The Chair is disposed to sustain the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

The pending section of the bill does not in any way affect the total number of Members of the House but only proposes to change the time when the statement of the President must be transmitted to Congress. The Chair is of the opinion therefore that the amendment is not germane and sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Is a substitute amendment in order at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. That depends upon the wording of the substitute and its form.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Is an amendment in order at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are in order to the first section of the pending committee substitute amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Ohio: On page 2, strike out the first section of the committee amendment and insert the following as a substitute therefor:

"On the first day, or within one week thereafter of the first regular session of the Seventy-seventh Congress, the President shall transmit to the Congress a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed, as ascertained under the Sixteenth Census of the population of the United States. The Congress to which the statement required by this act is transmitted shall apportion Representative among the several States based upon the method used in the last apportionment."

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is simply to do away with the automatic provision of the amendment now being considered by the Committee. I have already expressed myself on this matter. It is the prerogative of this Congress to pass an apportionment bill. I want to repeat, however, it is not the prerogative of this Congress to pass apportionment bills for the future.

It is argued at great length that the Congress still has the freedom and the liberty to pass such apportionment legislation as it may decide upon after this bill is agreed to. I grant that, but I maintain that it would be more difficult for Congress to enact legislation pertaining to any particular apportionment if we leave the automatic feature in this bill than it would be otherwise.

I make the point that we certainly should have faith and trust in future Congresses to take care of their own legislation. It may be constitutional and probably is, but we cannot expect that conditions will always remain as we believe they might remain. In the future conditions may arise in which a Congress may decide differently. We do not know what those conditions are going to be or what they may be. I, therefore, submit that my amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Do I understand the purpose of the gentleman's amendment is this: It simply proposes to carry out the philosophy of this bill for this decade that is now before us? In other words, the gentleman wants the philosophy of this bill carried out so far as the census of 1940 is concerned, but he does not want to bind any other Congress for the next 10 years, or any future Congress. He is opposed to binding any future Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] misses the mark when he states that the act of 1929 binds all future Congresses on all future censuses. Why, the Congress has every right in the world to change and wipe out this whole thing today, or after the President sends down his report in January or at any time hereafter. This act—and I think someone else has stated it today—was conceived in the brain of one of the most able men whom it has been my privilege to serve with in this House. He was a great Republican Speaker of this House from the State of Ohio, Nicholas Longworth. He, with his associates, conceived this measure at that time because Congress had plainly shown for a period of 10 years following the 1920 Census that it would not act and would not reapportion itself as required by the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be voted down and that we preserve this splendid act in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The first sentence of section 22 (b) of such act is amended to read as follows: "If the Congress to which the statement required by subdivision (a) of this section is transmitted has not, at the session during which such statement is transmitted, enacted a law apportioning Representatives among the several States, then each State shall be entitled, in the next Congress and in each Congress thereafter until the taking effect of a reapportionment under this act or subsequent statute, to the number of Representatives shown in the statement based upon the method used in the last preceding apportionment." In submitting the statement to Congress he shall exclude aliens from the population total in the several States and apportion the number of Representatives accordingly.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. DUNN: On page 2, line 19, after the word "apportionment", strike out the remainder of the section.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Page 2, after the period at the end of the last line insert: "Provided, That in submitting the statement to Congress and making the apportionment, the reduction provided in section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution shall be made."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, of course the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] desire to be heard?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, the committee reported the bill with an amendment excluding two classes of people who are not to be counted in the apportionment, namely, aliens and Indians. This amendment therefore opens up the bill so that under the rules of the House we can add another class of those to be excluded in the count, particularly a class which is specifically excluded under the clear mandatory provisions of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. I respectfully suggest that the amendment is therefore in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JONES of Texas.) The Chair is prepared to rule.

If this were a question of first impression, the Chair might have some embarrassment; but the decisions on this and similar questions seem to be very clear.

On June 6, 1929, when the original act was before the House, an amendment was offered by Mr. Hoch, of Kansas, to exclude the term "aliens" in making the apportionment. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Chindblom, was chairman of the Committee of the Whole at that time. The language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas was as follows:

The word "persons" as used in this section shall not be construed to include aliens.

In holding that that amendment was not germane to a very similar provision of a very similar act the Chair stated:

This is the general proposition laid down. One individual proposition may not be amended by another individual proposition, even though the two may belong to the same class.

He illustrated, saying:

In a bill admitting a Territory an amendment admitting another Territory was held out of order.

In a bill for the relief of one individual an amendment for similar relief to another individual was held out of order.

The Chair there sustained the point of order against an amendment very similar to the language which has just been stricken from the bill. That particular language would have been subject to a point of order but for the fact that the rule itself states that the committee amendment shall be in order.

There is another ruling on the exact question. On January 19, 1921, when a reapportionment bill was under consideration, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TINKHAM, offered an amendment to section 1 of the bill, which read as follows:

Provided further, That if any State deny or abridge the right of any inhabitants thereof, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, to vote at any election named in the amendment to the Constitution, article XIV, section 2, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the number of representatives apportioned to that State shall be reduced in proportion to the number which such citizens shall bear to the whole number of citizens 21 years of age in such State.

The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Longworth, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane to the section under consideration. In passing on the question the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Campbell, who was presiding, stated among other things—

It has been held by well-considered decisions that even though a subject relates to the same matter, yet if it introduces a new element or an element of uncertainty, or if it provides a future action upon the happening of something indefinite, the matter so offered is not then germane as an amendment.

That decision goes even further than the previous one, but in the light of these decisions and the fact that this amendment follows in substance the exact amendment that has heretofore been held out of order, and since the pending bill only deals with the mechanics of an apportionment and does not deal with the census itself, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I well remember that during the consideration of the last apportionment bill the dry forces offered a do-not-count-alien amendment in order to reduce the representation from the so-called wet-city districts in the country. The wet forces countered with an amendment to enforce the provisions of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and make the mandatory reductions specified in that section. Both of these amendments were held in order, and they were voted on in the Committee of the Whole House and adopted in the Committee of the Whole House.

We hear so much about the Constitution on the Fourth of July and on and off the floor of the House. We also hear so much about the subversive activities which are undermining the Constitution of the United States; and to refresh the memory of some of you, I wish to read a few passages from the Constitution. No weasel interpretation could lead one to the conclusion that the principles included in my amendment should not be incorporated in this apportionment bill.

Section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution reads as follows:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crimes, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Down South you count the colored brethren for apportionment but do not let them vote, and the total vote cast in the entire State of Mississippi in a Presidential or congressional election is less than the vote cast in most of the individual congressional districts in the United States above the Mason and Dixon's line.

It is about time that the clear, mandatory language embodied in section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution by our forefathers is enforced, so that these southern New Deal States cannot continue by "Foxy Grandpa" clauses, educational tests, and your unconstitutional poll taxes to deny the right of the colored people to vote, although you count them in the census and for apportionment of Members of Congress and Presidential electors. In the last election the 7 congressional districts of Mississippi cast a total of only 36,000 votes. I want to call to the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], whose States have these poll-tax laws, that if they are interested in getting after real subversive elements who sabotage the Constitution, they should have the Dies committee go to Texas, Alabama, and other Southern States and investigate and expose the willful flaunting of the spirit and the letter of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment.

The Constitution does not say "may," it says "shall," with reference to reducing the representation in the Congress and electoral college when the right to vote is abridged, as it is in Texas, Alabama, and many other Southern New Deal States.

I sincerely hope that before many months elapse we shall enforce these provisions of the Constitution and stop these Southern States, which have poll tax and other laws to prevent the colored people from voting, from receiving far more representation in the electoral college and the House of Representatives than they are entitled to under the clear provisions of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the gentleman is not recanting his former position on this bill. I looked at the roll call in 1929 and find the gentleman from Wisconsin to be one of the most active and vigorous supporters of this measure. I hope the gentleman is still for it today.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I may say that if he examines the RECORD, the gentleman will find that the gentleman from Wisconsin, together with the distinguished Member from Massachusetts, the cradle of liberty, Mr. TINKHAM, was very active on the floor, off the floor, and in the Well of the House in favor of adopting the amendment to comply with the mandatory provisions of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and prevent you people down below the Mason and Dixon's line from counting the colored people for representation, but denying them the right to vote. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: On page 2, line 12, strike out "at the session during which" and insert "within 60 calendar days after."

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I took the floor a few moments ago while the rule was being discussed to explain the amendment that has just been offered.

The bill before the House, as reported by the Census Committee, would permit the Congress to delay until the closing days of the 1941 session the consideration of any reapportionment legislation. As the Congress, in recent years, has remained in session until the summer, not adjourning until June, July, or August, as I stated some time ago, this would mean that reapportionment legislation might, and probably would be delayed until after most of the 1939 legislatures had adjourned and gone home. This amendment would tend to prevent Representatives from those States that lose representation under a reapportionment bill from running at large. The amendment would make it obligatory on Congress to dispose of the matter of reapportionment within the first 2 months of the next year's session. Failure of the Congress, within that period, to enact a new reapportionment statute would ordinarily invoke mandatory reapportionment as provided by the act of 1929. This amendment restricts Congress to 60 calendar days for consideration of the reapportionment question, and places the deadline at approximately the same time each year for the Congress to act, namely about March 4.

The President's report on the census, under the present law, must be submitted on the day Congress convenes, January 3, or within 1 week thereafter. Thus the extreme limit, should the President's statement not reach the Congress earlier than January 10, or 1 week after the convening date, would be March 11. This date would still find virtually all the legislatures assembled in their January 1941, sessions.

I would like at this point to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] if the statement that I am now making is correct and also if this amendment would be agreeable to him.

Mr. WARREN. I am in a rather embarrassing position on that question because I am not a member of the Committee on the Census. As I stated in my first statement this morning, I personally have no objection to the amendment now being offered by the gentleman. It is just a question of whether the House desires to have, say, seven and a half months to change it, if they see fit to do so, or 60 days. Under the 1929 act we had 3 months with about 2 weeks taken out of that time for the Christmas holidays. It is really immaterial to me although, of course, I cannot speak for the committee. It is simply a question of what the Committee of the Whole wishes to do.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Let us understand this amendment. Suppose the State of Ohio should lose a seat and the legislature of that State adjourned on the 1st day of April, we will say, but the Congress had done nothing between January 1 and the 1st day of April, that would mean that every Member in the State of Ohio would have to run at large.

Mr. WARREN. No; the State of Ohio is not a good illustration. Some other States might be.

Mr. DONDERO. I only used the State of Ohio as an illustration.

Mr. WARREN. The State of Ohio has two Members at large now and therefore if the State of Ohio would lose one, it would be one of the Members at large.

Mr. DONDERO. Then take my State of Michigan. We have no one running at large in Michigan, but if this amendment were not adopted and the State legislature should adjourn, every Member from the State of Michigan would have to run at large.

Mr. WARREN. That is true if your State legislature refused to act.

Mr. McLEOD. That is the very point I wanted to bring out. In the event the State of Michigan, my own State, for example, would lose one Member under this reapportionment—and there are going to be several States that will lose—if the Congress does not act while the State legislature is in session, all Members from the State of Michigan would be obliged to run at large. This applies, of course, to all the States that are similarly situated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken and on a division, demanded by Mr. McLEOD, there were—ayes 81, noes 89.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. McLEOD and Mr. GOSSETT to act as tellers.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

There was no objection and the Clerk again reported the McLeod amendment.

The Committee divided and the tellers reported—ayes 119, noes 91.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee substitute as amended.

The substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the Chair, Mr. JONES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill S. 2505, and pursuant to House Resolution 456, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that a separate vote may be had in the House upon any amendment to the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote upon the committee amendment striking out the language excluding aliens from the count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUNN: Page 2, after the word "apportionment" in line 19, strike out the remainder of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER and Mr. GATHINGS) there were—ayes 209, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the substitute for the Senate bill as amended.

The substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUNN a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether or not the conference report on the independent offices bill is to be taken up tomorrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the intention.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial from the Washington Daily News of today, and also to extend my remarks and include a short article by Hugh Johnson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address delivered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, in view of an important national event taking place on Tuesday next, I ask unanimous consent that the special order which I had for Tuesday be transferred to Wednesday of next week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include two short excerpts entitled "Battle for the Land" and "Citizenship or the Dole for Farm Labor."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two letters which I have received today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a statement put out by the Press Cafeteria and the union of the cafeteria.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a protest of the citizens of Meade County, Ky., to the proposed expansion of Fort Knox.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include some election statistics and a few statistics from the Congressional Directory as far as the membership of the House is concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

AFTER THE NEW DEAL—TOWARD A CONSTRUCTIVE REPUBLICAN PROGRAM

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, critics of the Republican Party have been loud in their insistence that we have no program of leadership to offer the Nation. They lose no time in reminding us that the role of the gad-fly is always joyous; it is easy to criticize. There has never been a figure in public life whose record was invulnerable; nor has there ever been a national administration which did not make mistakes. Our opponents declare that the Republican Party has confined its efforts in the last 7 years to petty sniping, offering no constructive outlook, presenting no plan for national guidance. Some of them are willing to concede, if only for the sake of argument, that the New Deal itself has been guilty of many failures, both of omission and commission. Yet, they argue, no matter how drastic the failures of the national Democratic Party, a failure is better than nothing attempted. In the eyes of these adversaries, we are a do-nothing, fence-sitting, inept party, playing the part of the political opportunist instead of the political leader.

In terms which must not be lightly ignored, we are challenged to state our case. "After the New Deal—what?" they demand. "What difference in the conduct of national affairs may we expect if the Republican Party comes into power in 1940? Will there be a major upheaval in the Washington scene by the beginning of 1941? Does the G. O. P. propose to amend existing legislation affecting the lives of millions of our people? Specifically, is it the intention of the Republican leadership to make radical alterations in the workings of the Social Security Act? Is there any prospect of a drastic change in the Wagner National Labor Relations Act? Does the Republican Party intend to modify the Fair Labor Standards Act, fixing maximum hours and minimum wages?" All these questions, and a score of others as well, must be pondered and answered before we open the campaign of 1940.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman spoke of the program of his party. Has his party any program to curb monopolies and bring the price between manufactured products and farm products to a parity?

Mr. BENDER. If my friend will listen, I expect to answer his question.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I would like very much to have an answer. Does the gentleman's party have any program to give this country a workable monetary system sufficient to the needs of business?

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman is somewhat confused. He asks questions of Republican speakers. He interrupts them repeatedly just for the sake of interruption and not with the idea of getting a constructive reply.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I say the gentleman is in error. I should think the gentleman would like to show that there is some dialog in his debate; that he, himself, is offering something constructive.

Mr. BENDER. There is no question in my mind about the gentleman's attitude. He reminds me very much of a story I heard at Richmond, Va., the other evening. A schoolroom scene was described. The school teacher was asking questions of her class.

"Children, who gave us this beautiful school building?"

A child raised his hand and the teacher asked him to reply. He said, "Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Then the teacher asked: "Who gave us these beautiful monuments and buildings in the vicinity of this school?"

Another child raised his hand and, upon being directed by the teacher to reply, said: "Franklin D. Roosevelt."

The teacher asked a third question: "Children, who gave us all these beautiful trees and flowers and all this beautiful foliage in the vicinity of this school?"

Another child raised his hand and replied, "God."

With that, a child sitting in the back of the room said: "Throw him out; he is a damned Republican." [Laughter.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I might suggest to the gentleman from Idaho that if he would just wait, he will have an answer to all these questions, I am sure.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he does not believe that the money question is one of the most pressing questions that faces the country today?

Mr. BENDER. I will answer the gentleman's question if he will permit me to proceed; and I will attempt to answer other questions. I expect to be questioned by the gentleman and by others.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I shall be pleased to yield later.

There can be no doubt in the mind of every American citizen that the great promise with which the Democratic Party assumed national control in 1933 has gone completely unfulfilled. The more abundant life, the restoration of national prosperity, the elevation of our annual income to a point approximating its position in years gone by, were glowing visions. They captured the Nation's enthusiasm with the greatest of ease. But the magnitude of our optimism was in direct proportion to the size of our disappointment. We have come down to earth with the usual sickening thud. Nowhere do we see the realization of the New Deal's happy pledges. Not a single major group in our Nation can look upon the activities of the national administration with genuine satisfaction. Capital has watched with growing apprehension as it has recognized the increasing menace of Government in business. Industry has discovered to its deep chagrin that the Federal Government regards businessmen as distinctly antisocial creatures. For the first time in many years, the employers of labor have become consistent targets for the scorn of high officials, whipping boys for the national administration. The experience has been novel, and distinctly unpleasant.

Labor, in whose name a host of measures have been sponsored and enacted by the fertile minds of the "brain trust," finds to its dismay that harmony and peace do not necessarily follow in the path of legislation. Nor have the leaders of labor discovered any formula for permanent employment in the multitude of laws hatched by the New Deal. Despite the intensified interest in labor problems, labor relations, and union organization, the working men and women of the Nation, after 7 years of new dealing, are still lost in the shuffle. They are out of work, despondent, fearful of the future. And even now, with a European war stimulating a temporary boom in private reemployment, there are few who hold out hope for any lasting effect upon the 10,000,000 unemployed who have been with us these many years.

Farmers, too, have been taken up to the high places to view a new era of prosperity and independence. In every campaign since 1932, the Democratic Party has boasted long and loud of its undying concern over the plight of American agriculture. Markets were going to be opened. Farm prices were going to be maintained at a level consonant with the American standard of living. The heavy burden of mortgage debts which had hung over the Corn Belt like a never-lifting dust cloud was to be removed. The words are ashes in the mouths of our people today.

Farm dwellers are still living under desperate circumstances in every rural community of the land. The process of concentrating farm ownership in the hands of absentee landlords, holding large acreage, is still continuing. Mortgages have been transferred from private mortgagees to public mortgagees, but the necessity for continued payments out of appallingly meager earnings is still there. Farmers are no longer described by their fellows as prosperous. If they are getting by at all, they are called industrious.

The American people know this picture quite as well as the Republican Party. It is saying to us today, "How do you propose to repaint the scene? What do you offer?" We are developing our answers day by day. The solution of these problems cannot be visionary. It must be realistic. It must spring from the bitter experiences through which we have passed in the last decade.

We are not dealing with a partisan issue. We are discussing the future of the Nation in the formulation of our solutions.

Americans of every section must recognize the difficulties in our way. The day of extensive activity is passed. Our frontiers are no longer beckoning every adventurous son of the Nation. Soils are no longer lying beneath our feet in the first fertility of the nineteenth century. Populations are no longer increasing by the millions annually, demanding new products in never-ending succession. Today we must stimulate, we must encourage. Our economy is changing from extensive to intensive.

The Republican Party is recognizing this basic factor. No return to the era of "Go West, young man" is possible. We have literally millions of men and women whom we must plan for on the theory that they will require assistance for many years ahead. America can take care of them. This Nation can and will retrain many of them for new tasks. It will provide work for all of them. We must not yield to the temptation to pauperize those who cannot be reemployed. And while the process goes on we shall seek the middle course which has always been the American technique.

Social security legislation will not be scrapped. It will be modified from time to time as experience demonstrates its weaknesses and its strengths.

Labor legislation will recognize the inherent rights of men to organize for their legitimate objectives. Gains already realized will not be threatened.

Industry will move out of the dog house back into the good graces of the Nation for whose growth it has been so largely responsible. The epoch of name calling, witch hunting, and public hanging will end. Encouragement rather than deterrents will keynote the return of Republican leadership to our National Government.

Farms can still be made to pay in our land. The work of our State and Federal agricultural bureaus makes it evident that there are new crops, new methods, new ideas in farming which may yet restore agricultural prosperity. What we need most is a market.

In this connection, may I say that I had the opportunity of visiting a dairy farm quite recently. I was told by the dairyman that in this country we could consume very readily and should consume twice as much milk and dairy products as we do, if we developed the market. What is true in connection with that dairyman's statement is equally true in connection with other agricultural products. It certainly is possible for us to develop our home markets and to concern ourselves with a greater intensity in the development of our home markets.

A revived nation, with industry regaining the confidence it has lost, will build that market up anew. The frantic search for foreign outlets, initiated and promoted by the New Deal, must give way to the sounder economy of an increased American market.

Government will get out of business, because it has demonstrated repeatedly that it does not belong there. An institution which seeks to regulate by destroying is either blind or willful.

We Republicans are not recommending that people be taken off relief who are in need. We are not recommending that people who need W. P. A. be taken from W. P. A. We are asking the removal of some four or five hundred thousand people who are on Government pay rolls in bureaus and agencies which are not essential. If a proper survey is made of the various departments of Government surely we will find the agencies where that number can be taken off. There are thousands of people working here in Washington, D. C., who could find better jobs in private industry, if they were relieved from their Government jobs. They would not have to go on the relief rolls. If we have the determination to do that which the Democratic Party promised in 1932 when it made its campaign on decreasing Government costs 25 percent and bringing down the cost of government, I am sure we will do much toward solving our present economic situation.

The multitude of bureaus and agencies created by the Federal Government in the last 7 years will be decimated, retaining only those which can justify their existence through their constructive achievements. Federal expenditures will drop.

But above all else, these specific steps will restore the Nation's confidence in the future. Once the restraint upon private investment has been removed through more equitable tax laws, the millions of dollars now held in the vaults of our banks will be given opportunity to get to work.

"Idle money, idle men," bemoaned our President recently. Let us put them to work. Their employment waits upon the restoration of the Republican Party to national leadership.

Mr. Speaker, if you are at the head of a business, you know that you are the hardest-working person in that business. You have a responsibility, and when the Government taxes you as excessively as our business interests are being taxed—even before they open their doors—you take away the incentive for American industry to continue. You take away the incentive to provide employment, the incentive to provide regular jobs at regular pay, and when you take that incentive away you lessen the possibility of employment in all regular industries. The greatest crime of the New Deal experiment is best explained by the following incident: I have a relative who is secretary of one of the large industries in Cleveland. Recently they had occasion to hire some five or six hundred additional skilled mechanics and when they went out into the market to find these skilled workers they could not find them. There were over 500 jobs in that concern waiting to be filled by citizens of Cleveland, but they were not ready because the period of apprenticeship that every person in industry and in business was expected to experience before the New Deal seems to have vanished. As a matter of fact, today if you are over 45 years of age in the city of Cleveland or any other American city, you cannot find a job. Very rarely will an employer take you on and make you a part of his organization if you are over 45. There is no incentive for employers to keep their old employees. My father worked for one concern for 52 years and I know something about that concern. I know something of their experience. They loved to take care of their old people. That concern felt a responsibility to the old people. Today there is no incentive for them to do it because they have all kinds of inspectors and agents of the Government telling them how to run their business. If you have a card in some organization, whether you have had experience or not, you start at the prevailing wage or else you do not start at all.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Is it not a fact that the way relief and W. P. A. is being handled throughout the various States, and particularly in the State of Ohio, has resulted in breaking down the morale of the men?

Mr. BENDER. Absolutely. There is no question about that. The other day I was riding along the highway of my own State, going from Columbus to Mt. Gilead, to attend the funeral of our secretary of state. As we traveled along that road we saw 50 or 60 W. P. A. workers leaning on their shovels. Only 1 was working. The people in the car laughed about it; but it is not a laughing matter. The laugh is on you and me, because we are paying the freight. We are plunging this country into debt, and the Government of the United States is not only the laughing stock of citizens generally, but it is the laughing stock of those engaged in that work and on those jobs. Having the Government engage in the kind of thing which creates a feeling that people can get by with this attitude is a terrible mistake. I am not blaming anyone on W. P. A. As a matter of fact, if I knew of anybody who needed work and could not get it any other way I would be glad to do my very best to get him on W. P. A. in the absence of anything better. That is all right. But I say that kind of morale is not in keeping with the thing that has made America great.

Another phase of this issue is the lack of opportunity for our young people. Of course, the N. Y. A. is fine, and I would vote for any appropriation for that organization. I believe in such agencies, and in the absence of anything better they are all right, but when you have a philosophy such as the New Deal has given out in the last 7 years and you fail to provide an opportunity for young people in industry and in business, or you fail to make it possible for them to get into industrial plants, starting as apprentices and getting apprentice wages, you are harming the youth of the land. I know that in the State highway department in the city of Cleveland, for example, we have at least a dozen professional men such as doctors, lawyers, and dentists, who are working with picks and shovels on the State highways. There are as many persons in America today who need medical attention as there ever were, and as many people who need their teeth fixed, but they cannot have their teeth fixed because they cannot pay the dentist. Therefore the dentist is unemployed. He does not have the income to pay for his office expense, and of necessity he has to do other things in order to keep himself and his family going. That is the most serious part of this business.

I have heard on the floor of this House some of the most ardent new dealers pointing out new philosophies and new Utopias and saying to us, "This is the way and that is the way;" yet those very persons are the persons who are closest to the President. Certainly, the President has had 7 years and the administration has had 7 years to solve the problem, and we have tried everything imaginable.

It seems to me that the only safe and sound solution to this problem is for us to get back to first principles; that is, to get back to operating our business, our industry, on a sane and sound basis. Unfortunately, there are people in business who are not honorable, but they are not as numerous as the new dealers would have you think. Because there happens to be one crook out of a hundred men in business why condemn the other 99? Why develop a lot of new angles and new ideas for that whole industry because of one person's dereliction?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. In just a moment.

May I say that I remember the time in America, as young as I am, when our people worked 7 days a week, not 6 days a week and not 5 days a week but 7 days a week. Because of progress, because of the march of time, because of a disposition on the part of our people to provide a better living standard in America in keeping with the principles upon which this Nation was founded, those Christian principles and democratic principles, that condition was gradually eliminated until our people worked 6 days a week, and then they worked 5½ days a week. All that came long before we ever heard of Franklin D. Roosevelt. All of these benefits to the American citizen came long before we ever heard of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I remember the days when my own father used to go to work at 6 in the morning; that is, he used to have to be at work at 6 in the morning, and he would quit his work at 6 at night. Then, after the 12-hour day, came the 11-hour day, then the 10-hour day, then the 9-hour day, and then the 8-hour day. That came as a gradual thing, and it came in the regular way and not through any upheaval, not through the overthrow of our fundamental way of doing things.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KEFAUVER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Many of these New Deal half-baked crackpots denounce our American capitalistic system and their alleged economic royalists and princes of special privilege notwithstanding that their New Deal fuehrer in the White House, President Roosevelt, is one of the richest men in America, who has more than 150 of the richest men in the country among his chief supporters and lieutenants. Is not that a fact?

Mr. BENDER. Apparently so.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a further fact that many of the New Deal disciples of the Moscow Soviet system of government have been denouncing the machine progress in America, notwithstanding the fact that their New Deal fuehrer in the White House, only a few years ago, was the big shot of the Consolidated Automatic Merchandising Co., Camco, a slot-machine outfit promoted to improve and expand the machine age, particularly with reference to slot machines. The President and his fellow promoters took the people for a ride at that time to the tune of many millions of dollars, by selling them fake watered and worthless Camco stock.

Mr. BENDER. I recall having read something about that in the New York Times at the time.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The point about which I wanted to ask the gentleman a question has passed long since, but the gentleman mentioned something about there being a few people in business who, he thought, might not be up to the standard of the rest, and so on. I wish to say to the gentleman that it is not with any spirit whatever of blaming anybody in business or any place else that some of us are concerned about this problem. What does the gentleman think about a situation wherein it is true—at least I am convinced it is true—that under the very best of circumstances, with the very best of intentions on the part of everybody, we simply have come to a place where there is not under present circumstances and with our present distribution and monetary system room enough for profitable investment of the volume of funds that seek investment currently? That is not anybody's fault. You do not need to blame business, you do not need to blame anybody, but there is a problem that I believe we have to face up to, and I do not believe we can face up to it simply by passing it to one side and letting it go.

Mr. BENDER. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution. However, I wish to point out that before the New Deal, in the city of Cleveland and elsewhere in Ohio you could get 4-percent interest on your money by the banks, and today you are lucky if you can get 1- or 2-percent interest on your money. The reason we have that condition is because there are not the people who want to borrow money, and there are not the people who are willing to take the chances that must be taken under the New Deal. They have created this situation, they have created the problem and have increased it rather than decreased it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURRAY. I wonder if one of the answers to the problem is not that we are working too much at cross-purposes. Do you not think, personally, that if we had produced the $4,000,000,000 worth of competitive agricultural products that have come into this country during the last 7 years, we would not have heard so much about W. P. A. and that thousands of people could have been taken off of W. P. A. and given real jobs?

Mr. BENDER. I am in thorough accord with the gentleman. I recall butcher shops having their windows full of Polish hams a year or so ago, and we have been relieved of the Polish hams in the last year, and somehow or other our people are not losing anything by it. We are using our hams today, but I will say this to you: A lawyer in Richmond, Va., a gentleman by the name of Beale, said to me the other night that he has a farm which he operates on the side, and he stated that whatever money he makes in the law business he loses on the farm, and he also stated that he took some hogs to market where he got $3.41 for a great, big hog under the New Deal.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. I was just wondering if the gentleman cared to comment on the question of whether or not the President is going to run for a third term.

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, I do not care whether he runs or not. We are ready for him, and if he runs we will take care of him. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

ALL-RISK CROP INSURANCE FOR COTTON

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, next week, if I understand the schedule correctly, there is due to be taken up for consideration in the House a measure to extend crop insurance to cover cotton. I believe this is a measure entitled to the very hearty support of this House on both sides. It is not a partisan matter. Such a plan was carried in the platform of each of the major parties the last time.

We have already initiated the program in the insurance of wheat, and now in the progressive extension of this program to all of the major crops of the country it is proposed to extend it to cotton. I want to discuss this measure and some of the things that it seeks to do during the time that I have allotted to me this afternoon.

Most cotton farmers have at one time or another seen their crop destroyed or substantially damaged from causes over which they have no control. In view of the fact that cotton has always been a cash crop, produced largely on borrowed money, the loss of a crop brings about financial difficulties, not only for the current year but frequently causes increased debt burdens for several additional years.

Crops losses from drought, excessive moisture, flood, hail, and so forth, cannot be prevented. They occur every year in one part of the Cotton Belt or another. Is there, then, any economically sound method by which farmers can secure protection against such losses? Many of the risks from the standpoint of the individual are eliminated or reduced through insurance in practically every type of business enterprise except farming.

Whether or not insurance against unavoidable production hazards is feasible for crops such as cotton or wheat depends to a substantial degree on (1) the development of a sound actuarial basis by which the risks can be measured; (2) the development of a program that will be attractive to all growers, in order to avoid adverse selection of risks in a county or area and between areas; and (3) competent administration of the program, including the setting up of farm coverage and premium rate per acre figures that will reflect the risks on the farm as nearly as possible, and the fair and just settlement of losses.

The Federal crop-insurance program, which provides for all-risk insurance coverage against unavoidable production hazards on wheat crops, was placed into operation for the first time on the wheat crop harvested in 1939. It was expected that experience with the insurance of wheat crops would illustrate the practical application of crop-insurance principles to this crop, and would at the same time serve as an indication of how some of the problems in connection with the insurance of other crops could be worked out.

During its first year of operation, the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation wrote 166,000 insurance contracts which were distributed over about 1,200 counties in 30 States. Wheat growers paid in nearly 7,000,000 bushels of wheat or the equivalent in cash as premiums for insurance on about 7,589,000 acres. Claims for indemnities amounting in all to nearly 9,800,000 bushels were paid on about one-third of the policies.

The Federal Crop Insurance Corporation has already written over 345,000 insurance contracts covering over 10,000,000 acres of the 1940 wheat crop. This includes largely winter wheat, and estimates indicate that a total of possibly 385,000 growers will use the all-risk insurance as a means of insuring their 1940 wheat crops. The increased interest in wheat-crop insurance in the second year amply demonstrates the popularity of all-risk insurance for that crop. It also gives some idea of how cotton-crop insurance would be accepted by cotton growers.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. Did the gentleman give any figures of how much the Government lost on its wheat-insurance program?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall come to that later on in the discussion.

The plan for insuring cotton crops developed in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics and outlined in House Document No. 277, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, entitled "A Suggested Plan for Cotton-Crop Insurance," is comparable in most respects to the wheat-crop insurance program except for certain differences due to the nature of the crops. The need for and applicability of such a program in a typical southeastern cotton area can be shown by further and more detailed analysis of cotton-yield data collected by the Bureau and used in the development of the suggested insurance plan.

The hazards that the cotton farmer must face in producing a crop of cotton are no less than those involved in producing wheat or any other major crop. Consequently, the need for cotton-crop insurance, as reflected by crop failures or substantially reduced cotton yields from these unavoidable production hazards is as pronounced as for other crops. It is true that widespread crop failures occur less frequently in most of the Cotton Belt than in the Great Plains. Losses that do occur are therefore less spectacular than the wheat-crop failures in 1934 and 1936.

The fact that severe damage to cotton crops such as that suffered by farmers in parts of Alabama and Mississippi in 1939 occurs infrequently is not an indication that insurance protection is not needed. This point can be illustrated by the experience with wheat-crop insurance. The demand for insurance on wheat crops has been just as pronounced east of the Mississippi River, where crop failures are infrequent, as in the Great Plains, where crop failures are common. One reason for this is the fact that wheat yields are higher and premium rates are lower in the Eastern States, so that risks to be carried are smaller, and more protection against crop loss is available at a lower cost.

Similar demands for cotton-crop insurance will no doubt exist, because under the plan now being considered a farmer does not have to lose his crop in order to be eligible for indemnification. He can get insurance coverage up to 75 percent of his average yield. If his average yield per acre during a representative period of years is 400 pounds, he could get insurance protection up to 300 pounds per acre. If his yield on a crop insured for 300 pounds per acre amounted to 200 pounds, he would be indemnified for 100 pounds per acre, or the difference between his yield and his coverage.

That this type of protection against crop losses from unavoidable causes would be highly desirable is illustrated by table 1, which shows the annual yields of a representative sample of farms in typical counties during the years 1933–38, inclusive, the percent of farms in this sample selected in each county on which losses would have been sustained each year under the 75-percent plan, and the estimated number of farms in each county to which this percentage would apply. Included in the table are all of the seven counties of the Eighth Congressional District of Alabama which I have the honor to represent, also typical counties in Arkansas, Georgia, and Mississippi. These counties are representative of an area where cotton yields are fairly stable. The estimated number of farms in each county on which losses would have occurred had this period been used as a basis for insurance represents the percentage of all farms in the sample on which yields each year fell below 75 percent of the 1933–38 average for the farm applied to the total number of farms in the county. This means that if 10 percent of the farms in the sample studied had losses in a given year, then about 10 percent of all farms in the county could be expected to have losses that year. The 6 years 1933–38 probably do not represent a period of sufficient length on which to base insurance. However, a study of yields during this period should give some idea of how yields fluctuate from farm to farm and county to county in a normal period of years.

It will be noted from the table that losses occurred each year in all of the 12 counties studied, except in Lee County, Miss., in 1937. The proportion of farms having yields below three-fourths of their average ranged from 62.4 percent, or 1,303 farms in Marshall County, Miss., in 1935 to none in Lee County, Miss., in 1937. During 1935, which was probably the most unfavorable year from 1933 to 1938 in this area, due to drought, over 36 percent, or 9,769 farms out of a total of 26,795 farms in the 7 Alabama counties studied, probably had yields low enough to justify a claim for indemnity under the 75-percent insurance plan. Nearly 56 percent of the 4,485 farms in Lee and Marshall Counties, Miss., would have had losses below three-fourths of their average yield during 1935.

A study of actual farm yields from year to year shows that losses in cotton yields occur every year in one place or another. Even in 1937, when cotton yields generally were the highest in history, 3.3 percent or about 875 of the approximate 26,800 farms in the 7 Alabama counties shown in table 1 had less than three-fourths of an average crop. In Mitchell and Sumter Counties, Ga., nearly 15 percent of all farms produced less than 75 percent of an average crop in 1937 in spite of the fact that the average yield in these counties was 10 percent above normal in 1937.

It is significant to note that these crop losses continue to occur each year, even though the average yield of all farms has generally shown an upward trend since 1933. For instance, the average yield of the 12 counties shown in table 1 was about 30 percent higher in 1938 than it was in 1933, yet the 1938 yield on more than 8 percent of all farms studied in these counties was less than three-fourths of their 1933–38 average.

The number and percentage of all farms in the 12 selected counties on which yields were below three-fourths of the 1933–38 average during one or more of the years 1933–38 is shown in table 2. The advantages of having protection against crop losses through crop insurance are demonstrated by the fact that 47 percent of the farms in these counties had yields below three-fourths of their average in at least 1 year of the 6; 21 percent suffered such losses during 2 years of the 6; and 5 percent lost in 3 or more years. These percentages remained somewhat uniform from county to county, indicating that about the same percentage of farms in each county had losses one or more years. Individual farms are not identified in this table, and as a consequence, a given farm having loses in 3 years may or may not be included in those having losses in 2 years or 1 year.

The fact that losses occurred during each year does not necessarily mean that premium rates for insurance based on past loss would be high, because many of the losses were small. It is true, however, that losses were most severe in the years when the most farms had losses.

In 1933, nearly 31 percent of the farms in the 12 counties had yields below three-fourths of their average, as shown in table 3. However, few, if any, of these crop losses were complete crop failures, because the average loss in 1933 on the sample farms studied amounted to about 14 pounds of lint per acre. While crop losses occurred on more than 60 percent of the farms in Marshall County, Miss., in 1935, the average loss per "insured" acre was only 22 pounds in that county in 1935. On the other hand, the average loss per "insured" acre in Lawrence County, Ala., during 1935 was 24 pounds, and losses occurred on 55 percent of the farms. The fact that crops losses are usually not extreme in this area indicates that premiums taken in would have exceeded losses paid out during 4 of the 6 years 1933–38. During the 2 years when indemnities would have exceeded premiums, more than one-third of all farms sustained losses justifying indemnification, and the county yields amounted on the average to about 80 percent of normal.

[1] A farm would have a "loss" when the yield in any year fell below 75 percent of the 6-year (1933–38) average yield for the farm. The average loss per insured acre is the total deficiency in yield below 75 percent of the average, divided by the acreage of farms in the sample.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is making a very interesting, convincing, and informative address, as he always does. The gentleman's statistics, carrying details, show very clearly that he has made a wide and exhaustive study of this important subject. I am sure that the distinguished gentleman's address will meet with the approval of millions and millions of cotton farmers in the South who feel that they are not getting a square deal under the present program.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate more than I can say the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma. I do believe in the program so thoroughly that I am convinced that all of us who will make a study of it will be in favor of it, because it is simply good business, applied to the farmer, or rather it simply enables the farmer to apply good business to his own productive work.

During the years 1933–38 losses occurred on about 10 percent of the sample farms in years when the crop equaled the 6-year average and losses during such years amounted to about one-third of premiums paid in. In years when the crop was 75 percent of the 6-year average, losses about doubled the premiums and would have been paid on about 60 percent of the farms. Premiums and indemnities would probably have balanced in years when the crop amounted to about 85 percent of average, during which years indemnities would have been paid on about 25 percent of the farms.

These estimates probably would not prove accurate in any given year, because they are based on average conditions, assume for the county as a whole the same relationship between average yields and average losses per insured acre as for the sample farms, and do not reflect any adverse selection of risks. Furthermore, the years 1933–38, inclusive, probably do not represent a period of sufficient length to serve as the basis for a crop-insurance program. However, the estimates do illustrate the crop-insurance principle of building up in years of good crops when premiums exceed indemnities of reserves that could be used for payment of losses in years of poor crops when indemnities would exceed premiums.

The average premium rate per acre for insurance of 75 percent of the average yield for a farm, based on losses during a representative period of years, would amount to about 10 pounds of lint per acre in the Alabama counties listed, or the equivalent of about $1 per acre at 10-cent cotton. This premium rate figure would be higher than the average lint loss per acre during the 6 years 1933–38, because it would include insurance coverage against average losses of cottonseed, as well as lint. The indemnities for losses would also be higher when indemnities for average loss in yield of cottonseed are included. However, the premium rate and the indemnity per acre would be increased by the same percentage in order to offer insurance against average losses in yields of cottonseed.

The average yield for these counties during the 6 years 1933–38 was about 260 pounds, so that this premium rate would be for a coverage of about 195 pounds per acre. Thus farmers would, on the average, pay for this "all-risk" insurance a premium amounting to a little more than 5 percent of the coverage.

These yield and premium-rate figures constitute a part of the actuarial basis for cotton-crop insurance developed by the Department of Agriculture from a study of cotton yields for the 6 years 1933–38 on nearly 70,000 farms in over 900 cotton-growing counties. The Department's suggested plan for crop insurance with respect to cotton is based on this and other research conducted during the past several years.

HOW THE COTTON-CROP INSURANCE PLAN WOULD HAVE WORKED IN SELECTED COUNTIES IN 1939

I do not for the moment know just what the cotton-crop conditions were in all of the various sections of the country during 1939. I do know that in parts of my district it was a very poor cotton year. Two counties in particular, Colbert and Lauderdale, suffered heavy losses in cotton production. I therefore asked the Department of Agriculture to give me some statistics as to how the cotton-crop insurance plan would have worked had it been in effect in 1939 and asked that Colbert and Lauderdale Counties in my district be included.

At this point, I might call your attention to the fact that as a result of the disastrous crop conditions during 1939 in Colbert and Lauderdale Counties, the Federal Government was called upon to spend large sums of money for farm relief.

I have obtained from the several agencies of the Government the amount of money, or the equivalent of money in commodities, expended in Lauderdale and Colbert Counties, Ala., during 1939, such outlays being considered as resulting from the disastrous crop conditions in these two counties:

	Colbert County	Lauderdale County
Farm Credit Administration (Emergency Seed Loan Office)	$290.00	$1,775.00
Reconstruction Finance Corporation (Disaster Loan Division)	305.00	1,780.00
Farm Security Administration	[1] 12,400.00	[2] 13,300.00
Department of Public Welfare (representing commodities furnished by Surplus Commodities Corporation)	23,199.15	40,636.02
Total	36,194.15	57,491.02
Total for 2 counties	93,685.17

[1] Represents 758 grants. [2] Represents 843 grants.

Mr. Speaker, that represents money paid out during the winter months of 1939, and does not include all of the additional funds that will have to be paid to help those same people in their crop planting this year and to some extent get them rehabilitated.

As a matter of fact, I am thoroughly convinced that even though the Federal Government is required to bear the administrative expense of the crop-insurance program, in the long run it is the finest economy possible for the Government. It not only gives security and stability, but over a long period of years it will effect considerable savings in farm relief expenditures. In fact, over the 10-year period from 1926 to 1936, the Federal Government spent for emergency agricultural relief $600,000,000. This was largely necessitated by crop failures.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. I have a letter from Secretary Wallace referring to that same matter. He states that they expect to pay over $9,000,000 in the way of grants to these people. Referring to the relief, here is the difference. When you give certain grants to a farmer, certain amounts of money, and we are spending millions along that line, he uses it to take care of himself and his family, but if he had insurance, he would be able to largely pay his obligations and go on in fairly good state. Relief money does not pay his obligations, and the result is he commences his next year in bad condition because he has been unable to pay his obligations.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I fully agree with the gentleman in that statement. As I say, this simply helps the individual farmer to get stability.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman observed a while ago that putting into effect an insurance program on cotton such as we have on wheat, is nothing more or less than pursuing good business principles. With that I entirely agree. I do not know what the conditions are in the State of Alabama, but out in our country where we are in the habit of mortgaging crops, such as wheat crops and cotton crops, where the farmers go to the bank, it has been a practice for a large number of years for the lender to require the owner of the crop to have it insured before he can even consummate his loan, and the same principle, of course, as the gentleman has stated should apply in loans by the Government, and if the Government can make the insurance policy, of course, it is a more direct way of getting at it. It is pure business and nothing else.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that contribution from the gentleman from Oklahoma. Now, in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] about the loss on wheat insurance last year, I have found a figure here that I believe is an answer to his question. One million eight hundred thousand dollars was used the first year in the payment of losses. Of course, I know that to some people that seems to give a bad picture, but I call attention to a few things that affect that loss. First of all, it is not fair to measure an insurance program by 1 year.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will in a moment. It is not fair to measure it by a single year.

As a matter of fact, in order to get a correct measure, we ought to have 5 or 10 years. I said in my statement that even a 6-year period was not sufficient.

Then another thing I want to call attention to, and that is that in this first year's program the wheat farmer was allowed to take out his insurance even after his crop had been seeded, and for that reason a great many bad risks were written. That has been changed now, and he must take out his contract prior to the seeding of his crop.

Then another thing: Last year there were only 165,000 policies. It is estimated that for the next crop there will be more than 375,000 policies. Naturally, the wider the spread, the more areas covered, the lower may be expected to be the loss.

I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. This is rather confusing to me. I am sure that my fellow member on the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], will know that personally I am not trying to pick on cotton in any way, but when a Member, like the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], gets up here and says that cotton has not had very fair consideration under this agricultural program, if it has not, I would like to know what has. For example, cotton has had 45 percent of the parity money. Some States, as you know, have had up to 27 percent of it. Your State, as I remember the figures, has paid into the Treasury $28 per capita, and has had back in benefits $135. Then I understand that in that section of the country 35 percent of the farmers are delinquent on Federal loans today. With all of this money pouring in, which represents 35 percent of the assessed valuation, then tell me you have not been treated correctly, I would like to know what you think about Wisconsin, Minnesota, and such States as those.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should first like to say that I did not make any such statement, and it is not my purpose to argue that question. I do not want to argue that point, and I do not want to go into the question of the revenues that have been collected from the States and the benefits that have been received by the States. I have never believed that that was a sound argument. That is one of the very reasons for which the Federal Government was organized, in order that the States might stand together, and the strong States help support the weak States. But I am talking about the application of good business to the growing of cotton, in order to let the farmer carry for himself an insurance policy on his crop, with the Government simply paying the administrative expense.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Is it not a fact that you are basing your argument upon the fact that it will in part do away with a lot of Federal grants?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I certainly do think that. I brought out the fact a few minutes ago that over the 10 years from 1926 to 1936, over $600,000,000 was spent in the form of emergency agricultural relief. This kind of plan, when applied to all of the major crops, will, I believe, certainly enable our Government to cut down that vast amount of agricultural relief expenditure.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. I have been very much interested in the splendid address that the gentleman is making upon this subject of cotton insurance. As a member of the Appropriations Committee and the Agriculture Department Subcommittee on Appropriations, I was proud to have part in getting ample appropriations for the last fiscal year to carry on wheat insurance. My district has many wheat growers in it. The fight was made on the initial appropriation here on the floor, and a rather bitter one, on the ground that we were proceeding on an uneconomical basis and in a manner that would lead to nothing but failure. The gentleman has shown that in the first year of operation an unusually high degree of success has been attained. It is true a loss resulted, but that was by reason of an unusual weather condition throughout the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, and Oklahoma, an unprecedented loss, and the loss that was paid through the Crop Insurance Corporation was small compared with the money that would have had to be given had there been direct relief. But the fact that 1 year's experience has proven the potential possibilities of this as a stabilizing influence on wheat would seem to me to justify an extension of this program into our next major crop, cotton; and if that is worked successfully, then on into corn, and then on into other fields of agriculture, and then these critics of some of the present farm program would have less to criticize. I cannot for the life of me see how an individual can oppose this, because it is along the most constructive lines. The lean years are cared for by the results of the abundant years. It comes more nearly establishing an ever-normal granary, in a practical way, and yet not going into the field of what some call socialism. I commend the gentleman and I would be glad to support an extension of the program into cotton.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I surely thank the gentleman from Washington. And I should like to add that, regardless of how bitterly some may criticize our present agricultural program or any other proposed agricultural program, at no time since both major parties in their respective platforms of 1936 went on record for crop insurance has any agricultural program been seriously proposed that did not include as a part of it a crop-insurance plan.

Mr. FULMER. Is it not also true that the farmer is expected to pay his own way in paying the premium?

Mr. SPARKMAN. He surely is. He pays for everything except the administrative expense.

Mr. FULMER. And the thing that should appeal to the average man representing districts other than agricultural districts is that the millions we are giving now by way of relief and for employment of farmers by W. P. A. would be eliminated to that extent and would give to the Members representing city districts where there is unemployment and relief as much as if we were to increase the total appropriation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think that is a powerful argument.

A general idea of how the cotton-crop insurance plan might have operated in selected counties had the insurance been in effect on the 1939 crop may be obtained by assuming that insurance had been written in 1939 on the same representative farms selected at random which were used in developing the actuarial basis for insurance. From available acreage and yield data it was possible to develop average yields and premium rates per acre for insurance on the 1939 crop for the sample farms in accordance with the insurance plan outlined by the Department of Agriculture in the publication entitled "A Suggested Plan for Cotton-Crop Insurance."

Under this plan the average yield for each farm for the base period 1933–38, inclusive, was determined as the average of the yield figures for the farm for these 6 years. These annual-yield figures for a substantial proportion of farms in each county are on file in the office of the county agricultural conservation committee. The 6-year average yield was then adjusted by a statistical process in order to reflect the yield on the individual farm for the longer, more representative period of years, 1928–38, inclusive. The amount of insurance per acre for the farm under the 75-percent plan would be 75 percent of the adjusted-average yield. This figure is commonly referred to as the coverage per acre.

The premium rate per acre was computed for each farm by averaging the loss experience for the farm with the loss experience for the county. The county-loss experience, or loss cost, represents the average of the loss experiences of all sample farms in the county. As in the case of average yields, the loss experience figures represent 6-year data for individual farms adjusted to the 11-year basis. Thus the premium rate per acre for a farm would be the loss experience—or average loss per planted acre—for the farm for the 6 years 1933–38, adjusted to reflect the 11-year, 1928–38, loss experience, and then averaged with the county loss experience for the same 11 years. Consequently the farm premium rate reflects both the risks that affect the individual farm and those that affect all farms in the county alike.

The premium rate per acre thus developed was applied to the acreage planted to cotton in 1939 on each sample farm to arrive at the total premium that would have been paid for the farm.

In order to determine the loss in yield per acre, if any, that each farm sustained in 1939, the actual yield for each farm in 1939 was compared with the amount of insurance per acre. Had a farm been insured for 200 pounds of lint per acre and the 1939 yield amounted to 150 pounds per acre, then the grower would be entitled to indemnification for 50 pounds per acre, or the cash equivalent thereof, determined from current market prices. In case the farm yielded 200 pounds per acre or more in 1939, then no indemnity for loss would be due.

The five counties in which 1939 yields have been analyzed in this study to determine the extent of crop losses had an insurance program been in effect in 1939 are Lauderdale and Colbert Counties in northwestern Alabama in my district, Marengo County in southwestern Alabama, Chickasaw County in eastern Mississippi, and Washington County in the Mississippi Delta. All of these counties except Washington represent an area in which widespread crop losses occurred in 1939. Cotton yields in the Delta were considerably above the average in 1939, so that the experience in Washington County serves as a contrast to that in the other counties.

A summary of the results that could have been expected in the 5 selected counties in Alabama and Mississippi had the sample farms been insured under the 75-percent plan in 1939 is shown in table 1.

[1] Yield and premium rate figures are based on the plan and the procedure outlined in H. Doc. 277, 76th Cong., 1st sess., entitled "A Suggested Plan for Cotton-Crop Insurance." They represent average figures for sample farms in each county for the years 1933–38 inclusive, adjusted to reflect the experience during the years 1928–38 inclusive. Premium rates shown are for lint coverage, and were not increased to provide additional protection against losses of cottonseed. Actual acreage and yield data for 1939 were obtained for each sample farm.

The average of the yields used as a basis for insurance ranged from 291 pounds of lint in Washington County, Miss., to 159 pounds in Marengo County, Ala. Within the counties the yields showed wider variations between farms, ranging from 485 pounds to 76 pounds in Washington County and from 287 pounds to 35 pounds in Marengo County. Yields that would be used as the basis for insurance on the 1941 crop would include the 1939 experience and would not be the same as those used for the insurance in 1939.

Premium rates per acre also varied widely between farms, although the premium rate for a farm would be based partly on the variation in yield on the farm and partly on the average variation in yield on sample farms in the county. The county average premium rate per acre was highest in Washington County—14.4 pounds—but was lower in Lauderdale County, Ala.—5.9 pounds—than in Marengo County—8.5 pounds. In Washington County the premium rate per acre for individual farms ranged from 38 pounds to 9 pounds, and in Marengo from 33 to 5 pounds. As in the case of yields, premium rates for insurance in 1941 would include the 1939 experience and might be lower or higher than for 1939. Furthermore, the premium rates used in this study were based on lint coverage and were not increased to provide insurance protection against losses in yields of cottonseed.

A comparison of the premium rates per acre for the country as a whole or for an individual farm does not reflect the cost of insurance in terms of the protection offered, because yield, or coverage, and premium rates per acre are not often directly related to each other. This means that a high-yielding farm may have a low premium rate, or vice versa. Premium rates per acre expressed as a percentage of the coverage affords a better comparison. On this basis the per-acre cost of this all-risk crop insurance to the average farmer was 9.8 percent in Chickasaw County, 7.1 percent in Marengo County, 6.6 percent of the coverage in Washington County, Miss., 4.6 percent in Colbert County, and 3.3 percent in Lauderdale County, Ala. Thus the premium rate in terms of protection afforded was highest in Chickasaw County, Miss., and lowest in Lauderdale County, Ala.

The average acreage planted to cotton per farm in 1939 varied from 114.3 acres in Washington County, Miss., to 10.1 acres in Colbert County, Ala. Consequently, the total premium per farm amounted on the average to 1,646 pounds of lint in Washington County, and 75 pounds for the average grower in Colbert County. In four of five counties shown in table 4, the average premium payment per farm would have been less than a bale of cotton. Even in Washington County, the total premium for almost 54 percent of the farms would have amounted to less than 500 pounds of lint. In the other four counties, the total premium would have amounted to as much as 500 pounds of lint on only 4 percent of the farms studied. This indicates that the payment of premiums in the cash equivalent or by some means other than in lint cotton would be desirable or necessary in practically all cases.

CROP LOSSES IN 1939

The county average yield per acre in 1939, the percent of all farms studied on which losses would have been sustained had the farms been insured under the 75-percent plan in 1939, and the average loss per insured acre are shown in table 5. The 1939 crop was below 70 percent of the average for the 11 years 1928–38 in all of the five counties except Washington, Miss. In Colbert, Marengo, and Chickasaw Counties, the yield in 1939 was about 55 percent of 11-year average, and losses were sustained on three-fourths of all farms studied in these counties. The premium rate that would have been paid for insurance in 1939 amounted on the average to 9.7 pounds per acre in these three counties, and the average loss that would have been sustained was 48.1 pounds per insured acre. Thus the average loss per insured acre that would have been sustained in 1939 in these three counties was over five times as large as the premium per acre that farmers would have paid for insurance. It should be kept in mind that the 1939 average yield per acre in each of these counties was lower than for any year during the 11 years 1928–38. In fact, complete crop failures in 1939 were reported on about 9 percent of the farms studied in these three counties. As in the premiums, the indemnities shown are for lint loss, and were not increased to provide for additional indemnification for losses in yields of cottonseed.

The most important single factor contributing to the severe crop losses in this area was excessive rains, which began in May and continued into July. Most farmers were only able to cultivate a small portion of their crops. Most of the cotton on bottom land was either washed up, covered up, or drowned out. A few crops were destroyed by hail. Conservative estimates made late in June indicated that the crop could not exceed 40 percent of average.

Washington County, Miss., was included in this study for the purpose of comparing the experience in a county in which very few losses occurred with that in the other counties where losses were common. The county yield in this county in 1939 was 34 percent above the 11-year average, and losses in yield under the 75-percent insurance plan occurred on only 3 percent of the farms studied. The average indemnity per insured acre amounted to only 0.6 pound, or about 4 percent of the county average premium rate per acre that would have been paid in 1939.

If insurance had been written on one-half of the acreage in each of the five counties, the total indemnities collected by farmers would have exceeded the premiums they paid by 3,791 bales, as shown in table 6. In this table, the average premium rate per acre and average loss per insured acre for each county were applied to one-half the acreage planted in the county in 1939. The highest loss ratio would have been in Colbert County, where indemnities would have exceeded premiums by 1,434 bales; while the lowest ratio would have occurred in Washington County, where premiums would have exceeded indemnities by 1,583 bales. The similarity between total premiums and total indemnities and the excess of indemnities over premiums in the three Alabama counties is striking.

TABLE 2.—Average cotton yield, the percentage of farms on which losses would have been sustained had the 1939 crop been insured under the 75-percent plan in selected counties, the average lint loss per insured acre in pounds and as a percent of the 1939 premium [1]

The accuracy of an estimate of the result of an insurance program in the area represented by this group of counties had the 1939 crop been insured would depend on the extent to which the sample farms represented the farms on which insurance would be written in an insurance program. Moreover, the experience in these five counties could hardly be expected to accurately represent the experience in any large area of Alabama or Mississippi. However, four of the counties do represent a section in western Alabama and eastern Mississippi in which cotton yields were generally lower in 1939 than they had been for a number of years. The other extreme is represented by Washington County, Miss., where yields in 1939 were considerably above the average.

This wide variation in yields between comparatively small areas shows how very low yields, causing severe losses, even in one section of a State might be offset by high yields and very few losses in another section of the State. It also demonstrates that by a spread of risks over the entire Cotton Belt severe losses in a given area during any year would be offset by fewer losses in other areas, because extreme crop losses over the entire cotton-growing area have never occurred simultaneously.

While crop failures occur every year in one part of the Cotton Belt or another, losses as severe as those in part of Alabama and Mississippi in 1939 are very infrequent in that area. Consequently growers in the area are not as well prepared to meet financial difficulties brought about by crop failures as those in areas where losses are expected at more frequent intervals. For many farmers in the area the indemnity that would have been received for their 1939 crop loss would have been sufficient to pay premiums on insurance for as many as 10 or 12 succeeding years, provided such severe losses did not reoccur during that period. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

A MILLION FORD CARS IN A YEAR

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, on the streets, in business and financial circles, in public forums and in the public press, much has been heard about idle funds—dollars without jobs as well as men without jobs, banks filled with money waiting to go to work, idle capital that has been driven into seclusion only waiting for a fair chance to come out and begin new industries and expand old ones.

Why this condition exists is no longer a secret. Some blame industry and business for not putting this money to work and thus provide employment for those now unemployed. The opposite view is that unwise legislation and the attitude of Government itself has made capital unwilling to assume the risk and take chances with crushing taxes, Government competition, increased labor costs, and uncertainty.

Here in the Nation's Capital recently a man came into possession of a substantial sum of money. He was enthusiastic to start a small industry which had long been his dream. It would employ about 40 men. But when he was informed that his dream of establishing a factory would cost him about $3,000 in registration fees and corporation expenses under rules and regulations imposed by the Securities and Exchange Commission his courage collapsed, his enthusiasm died, and with it his dream of engaging in industry. Forty men will continue to walk the streets looking for jobs. They and their dependents might have been provided with the necessities of life from good wages from this employment, and their visions and hopes and dreams of better days also died with the dream of the man who would have employed them. The fate of one was the fate of the others, and who was to blame for the failure?

This man's experience came to my mind as I stood on the steps of this Capitol Building with other Representatives from my State of Michigan, to be photographed with the twenty-eight millionth Ford car, which came into Washington today on an international goodwill tour.

A year ago we stood on the same step when the twenty-seven millionth Ford car came to Washington. Not long ago the General Motors Co., which has a number of its factories situated in my congressional district, celebrated the production of its twenty-five millionth Chevrolet car.

What does it mean to build a million cars? In 1 year a million Ford cars are manufactured. I have obtained some facts concerning the automobile industry. It ought to be encouraging to all of us, and it ought to awaken in all of us increased confidence in the capacity of private enterprise to provide employment and its ability to contribute so much to the general welfare of the American people. The building of a million cars in 1 year by this one company, the Ford Motor Co., has provided employment for thousands of workers, directly and indirectly. What is said about this one company can also be said about the Chrysler Corporation, the General Motors Corporation, the Hudson Motor Co., and other motor industries in Detroit and Michigan. Over 100,000 persons, including many women, have been working on these 1,000,000 Ford cars at the Ford factory at Detroit, Mich., and other Ford plants throughout the country. In every one of the 48 States of the Union something is obtained that goes into the production of these cars.

I believe that one of the greatest aids we have in the solution of our economic problems can be found in the expansion of private business and industry, and for that reason I have made it a point to discover and learn what materials go into, and what it means to manufacture a million Ford cars.

In metallurgy alone I find that this twenty-eight millionth Ford car, of which I have just spoken, requires 4,600 pounds of iron ore, 1,500 pounds of limestone, 400 pounds of iron, and 1,900 pounds of steel. It requires nearly 2½ tons of coal to furnish the heat, and then there is, also, aluminum, cadmium, and steel, and strange as it may seem 694 pounds of sand for molds and the glass plant. Wages are paid to obtain this sand and transport it before it ever reaches the workers in the factory. This is also true of the iron ore, the limestone, and the coal. In order to arrive at some idea or opinion of what it means to manufacture a million cars, multiply these figures I have just given by a million and you have the total metals and minerals used in the production of Ford cars last year.

Let us now turn our attention to agriculture. What has the building of a million Ford cars done in the past year for the products of the farms, ranches, and plantations. Let us begin with cotton. It requires more than half a million acres, 577,500 acres to be exact, to produce the cotton used by the Ford Motor Co. in upholstery, tires, brake linings, timing gears, safety glass, top and curtain materials, 112,000,000 feet of lumber is used in the body construction and shipping containers. A countless number of shipping containers are required for which nails must be purchased and carpenters employed to make the boxes and drive the nails.

Sixty-nine million pounds of rubber are used not only in the manufacture of tires but in mountings, gaskets, mats, running-board covers, insulation, steering wheels, and convertible top materials. And here let me say that we Americans both of North and South America can take pride in the pioneering done by Henry Ford to grow rubber in this Western Hemisphere. From the Ford plantation, 600 miles up the Amazon River in Brazil, latex is now being shipped to the monster automobile factory at Detroit to be used in the new tire plant.

In Indiana, Michigan, and other States soybeans have become not only an important but a rapidly increasing cash crop to farmers due to the experimentation carried on by Ford. The oil from this lowly bean is used in paint, enamel, shock absorbers, and core oil. The meal which remains or the residue is used in molded parts, horn buttons, coil covers, light switches, and gear-shift knobs. The farmers of this land plant 50,000 acres each year of soybeans to grow the amount necessary to produce these million Ford cars.

To this must be added 17,500,000 acres of flax for paint, core oil, soft soap, and glycerin for these cars. Sixteen thousand acres must be planted to produce the tung oil for top materials, varnish, and brake linings.

It required the corn that grows on 11,280 acres to produce the butyl alcohol, top-coating materials, and artificial rubber that are necessary in places which come in contact with oil and gasoline. Jute, hemp, sisal, and manila fiber also are used in this mass production, as well as a million gallons of alcohol and other products of sugarcane. The gaskets on these cars require 250,000 pounds of cork. Leather and lacquers use up 240,000 pounds of castor oil.

Let us now turn from agriculture to the animal kingdom. The wool from 800,000 sheep is used in the floor coverings, gaskets, upholstery, and antirust lubricants. Thirty thousand cows furnish the leather that goes into these 1,000,000 Ford cars. Twenty thousand hogs contribute to the lard oil, and their bristles are used for brushes. Let us not overlook the goats. Seventy-eight thousand five hundred of them yield 350,000 pounds of mohair for pile fabric and window-channel fabric.

With the addition of this latest million cars manufactured through the past year by this one company, the Ford Motor Co., not to say anything about the great General Motors Co. and others, has paid $700,000,000 in taxes, nearly $5,000,000,000 in wages to its employees, and more than twice as much, or $10,000,000,000, to other companies for materials.

So, while newspaper headlines have been focusing our attention on the war-torn countries of the Old World during the past year, this one industry, the Ford Motor Co., has gone on quietly producing another million cars, with all that it means to the wage earner, to the distribution of American purchasing power, and the welfare of the American people. [Applause.]

SENATE

FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, April 8, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious God, whose tender mercies are over all Thy works, who seest the suffering and misery which reign in a world today: We commend to Thy fatherly pity all who are oppressed with care and are heavy laden with labor and sorrow. Deal tenderly, dear Lord, with all the poor, with the sick and afflicted, and all who are dependent on the public care. Give unto us and this whole people grace to show kindness toward all whom Thy dear Son has called his brethren, that by the sacrament of human sympathy, there may, through us, be mediated some measure of Thy love divine.

We implore Thy help in this time of our world's great need. Quicken to repentance those who by willful indifference or blatant selfishness are responsible for this all-but-universal chaos. By Thy holy will assuage, we beseech Thee, the bitterness of this great calamity, and help us as a nation to seek more diligently to do Thy bidding and to live more and more in humble dependence upon Thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR BURKE, OF NEBRASKA

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I should like to make a very brief statement regarding the defeat of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] in the Democratic primary in Nebraska last Tuesday.

This is no time to write a political obituary for Senator BURKE. Nebraska has proven its independence of political partisanship many times. What the future holds I do not know, but the Democratic Party has lost a great Senator. No man in the Senate has greater political courage than has Senator BURKE. There must be some quality in the wide, windswept plains of Nebraska that infuses the sons of Nebraska with courage. The great senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] bucked the tide of conservatism which overran this Government in the twenties, and his independence has made him a national figure.

I have not always agreed, in fact, I have often disagreed, with the junior Senator from Nebraska. I know nothing of his opponent, and I do not speak of him today. But I would rather be represented by a man of courage and conviction who disagreed with me than by one whose guiding star was political expediency.

Only the game fish swim upstream. ED BURKE often resisted the tide. He always spoke and he always voted his convictions. Expediency often urged him to "go along." When expediency met head on with his beliefs, he never went along. It is probable he would have been victor last Tuesday if he had gone along. When his beliefs were with the administration, he had the same courage.

Many thought that Senator BURKE antagonized powerful groups in his State when he boldly expressed the hope that the Allies would win in the present war, and that we should do all within our neutrality to aid them. Politically, silence in his case might have been better. ED BURKE would not remain silent to be expedient.

Mr. President, there are many courageous men in the Senate. The man Nebraska's Democracy turned down was one of the first among them.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2505) to amend an act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress, approved June 18, 1929, so as to change the date of subsequent apportionments, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That an act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress, approved June 18, 1929, is hereby amended in the first sentence of section 22 (a) by striking out the words "second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress" and substituting the following words: "first regular session of the Seventy-seventh Congress", and by striking out "fifteenth" and inserting "sixteenth."

SEC. 2. The first sentence of section 22 (b) of such act is amended to read as follows: "If the Congress to which the statement required by subdivision (a) of this section is transmitted has not, within 60 calendar days after such statement is transmitted, enacted a law apportioning Representatives among the several States, then each State shall be entitled, in the next Congress and in each Congress thereafter until the taking effect of a reapportionment under this act or subsequent statute, to the number of Representatives shown in the statement based upon the method used in the last preceding apportionment."

Mr. VANDENBERG. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANK CASEY—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 180)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, S. 2433, an act for the relief of Frank Casey.

The bill provides that in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Frank Casey shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on November 18, 1889, as a sergeant, Company B, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry.

The military record of this former soldier shows that he received an honorable discharge as a private from a 5-year enlistment in the Army on June 21, 1884; that he reenlisted on July 15, 1884, and while serving as a sergeant in the above company, was tried by general court martial on August 5, 1889, upon charges involving disobedience of lawful orders and drunk and disorderly conduct. He was convicted and sentenced to reduction to the grade of private and confinement at hard labor for 3 months and was discharged as a private on November 19, 1889, when his sentence expired, at which time he was not in a status of honor at discharge and his discharge was therefore held not honorable.

The Secretary of War recommends that the bill be not approved for the reason that there appears to be no justification for the proposal to place the beneficiary of this bill in a different status from that which applied to others discharged from the Army other than honorably, and I concur in the opinion and recommendation of the Secretary of War.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 12, 1940.

REIMBURSEMENT OF COTTON COOPERATIVES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday the parliamentary situation, as the Chair understands it, was that a resolution (S. Res. 257) had been submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to refer the pending bill to the Court of Claims. The question comes upon that resolution.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I inquire if that is an independent resolution or is it in the form of an amendment to the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is an independent resolution.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I will explain it in a moment, and I may say to the Senate that I shall take but a very short time this morning, and that we will have a vote, I hope, in a few minutes, and dispose of this matter finally. Before explaining as to the resolution I wish to make reference to a statement that was made yesterday about the experts examining these accounts. Fortunately, we have in the testimony a statement as to the examination of the accounts. Take the Alabama association, for instance. I quote from a letter from the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton Association:

> During the period of approximately 9 years intervening between the respective dates of the original transactions and the present time, many of the underlying records necessary to an accurate determination of carrying charges and carrying time have been abandoned by the association, and, for the most part, the employees who originally handled the transactions for the association have severed their connections with the association.
> It was, therefore, impracticable for us at this late date, to make specific identifications of transactions to the cotton in question.
> The foregoing paragraphs have particular reference to carrying charges incident to future contract cotton, such as transfers and transfer costs, fluctuations in the differences between the futures contract months, etc.

The Senate will recall that it has come out in the testimony that of the 1,300,000 bales of cotton comprised in the 16-cent loans the cooperatives immediately sold 800,000 bales, and bought 800,000 bales of futures. That set up a complicated condition that ought to be examined into before the Senate pays out this large sum of money.

I also refer to the audit of the Georgia association, prepared by Ernst & Ernst. It states that the auditors had been notified by the officials of the American Cotton Association that practically all of the Georgia records had been lost or destroyed, and that to arrive at the figures the auditors, on instructions of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, used the per-bale figures of Alabama, as the carrying charges and the holding time of Georgia and Alabama are "closely parallel and reasonably comparable."

Here is testimony that the Alabama cooperatives did not have the records and did not know what the carrying charges were; and the Georgia association was in exactly the same fix, but based its guesses upon the Alabama figures, which nobody knew anything about. So that is the way these figures have been arrived at. These figures by the so-called experts of Ernst & Ernst were brought here upon the statement made by the American Cotton Cooperative Association, which wants to have these large sums given to it—given to it—when we referred the wheat claims of the remainder of the country to the Court of Claims to establish if there was any reason why a legal or a moral claim should be allowed against the Government.

I desire to read to the Senate the authority for the motion which is now made.

Section 151 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, page 1138, volume 36, part 1, has the following provision:

> Whenever any bill, except for a pension—

When pension bills come up, we allow them or disallow them—> is pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States—

Just as this is—

> legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may, for the investigation and determination of facts, refer the same to the Court of Claims, which shall proceed with the same in accordance with such rules as it may adopt, and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy, together with such conclusions as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, either as a claim, legal or equitable, or as a gratuity against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant: Provided, however, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court upon the facts established that under existing laws or the provisions of this chapter the subject matter of the bill is such that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and it shall report its proceedings therein to the House of Congress by which the same was referred to said court.

Mr. President, why is not that entirely fair? Here are these claims, with doubt about every one of them. There is no question that there is doubt about them. We are all in doubt about them. I presume I have less doubt about them than most other persons, because I have examined them more carefully, probably, than anyone else; but if there is a legal or an equitable claim on account of this cotton, and it is established by an independent and an impartial court like the Court of Claims, I want to say that I will vote for the payment of any such legal or equitable claims as may be found. I am unwilling, however, in the present state of the record and of the proof, the uncertainty about it, to vote for it as one would put his hand into a grab-bag. We do not know whether or not we are doing right. Therefore I have submitted this resolution; and if Senators will listen to it for just a moment—I hope they will; it is very short—they will see what it provides:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2585) entitled "A bill to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes", now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act—entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary", approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

That is the act which I have just read—

Mr. President, that resolution was suggested to me by the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. He felt that that was the proper way to dispose of this matter. I have agreed with him. If we owe these people anything, if there is a legal or an equitable claim, it can be established by the Court of Claims. They will have every opportunity to establish it. All the papers in these hearings will go before the court. They will have every opportunity to determine the matter. I have submitted this resolution so as to give them every opportunity to do so.

I had overlooked the statute of 1911 until the Senator from North Carolina was good enough to call it to my attention. Thereupon I felt that, of course, this was the right way to deal with the matter; and I thank the Senator from North Carolina most cordially for his good advice.

As has heretofore been stated, I do not believe this is a just claim; but, out of abundance of caution, I do not want to deny to any person or to any organization a claim for which there is legal or real equitable ground. If the Government honestly owes a claim, it ought to pay it. The Court of Claims is a tribunal which is accustomed to looking into these questions. That court, without fear, without bias, without interest of any kind, nature, or description, will determine the claim on its merits and will report to us first whether it is a legal claim or an equitable claim and will also report the amount of the claim. I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

With that statement, I ask for a vote; but, before we vote, may the yeas and nays be ordered? I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution having been agreed to, the pending measure, Senate bill 2585, is disposed of because it is referred to the Court of Claims.

KATHERINE M. DRIER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has made a special order of Calendar No. 1346, Senate bill 3097.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 4 (c) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay forthwith, out of the German special deposit account in the Treasury of the United States, to Katherine M. Drier, an American citizen, formerly resident in Germany, the sum of $160,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 percent per annum from January 1, 1920, being the amount due said Katherine M. Drier pursuant to an agreement between the United States of America and the German Government under which all the claims of said Katherine M. Drier against the German Government were settled and adjusted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I intend to make a fairly thorough explanation of the claim covered by the pending bill, for the reason that I have just received by messenger the following letter signed by J. Harry Covington, a lawyer here in Washington, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: I yesterday informed the New York counsel for the American holders of awards from the German-American Mixed Claims Commission (and which awards are still largely unpaid), of your proposed amendment to the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier. They called me yesterday evening to say that after a conference with the committee representing the award holders they are still opposed to the diminution of the special fund in the Treasury available for the partial payment of Mixed Claims Commission awards which will result from payment on account of a claim rejected by the Commission through decision by the umpire. They said that they are therefore wiring the two Senators from the State of New York and Senators on the Finance and Foreign Relations Committees, setting forth their opposition to the Drier bill.

I feel it is proper for me to inform you of their action.

Sincerely,

J. HARRY COVINGTON.

I had supposed on the face of the correspondence previously received, and on the basis of conferences, that the amendment which I intend to offer to the bill entirely satisfied all these lawyers, because the amendment, which I will now read, places the claimant, Mrs. Drier, on substantially the same footing with reference to participation in the German special deposit account as these lawyers and clients are.

I now read the amendment, which I intend to offer at the conclusion of my explanation of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the view expressed by the Senator as to placing Mrs. Drier in the same category as the other claimants is substantially correct, except that the others who are receiving portions of the fund produced testimony before the committee which justified the awards. With respect to this $160,000 carried by the bill, the claim for that amount was not presented and approved by the Commission, which was set up under the treaty between the United States and Germany. The claim of this lady has not been proven before the Commission in the same manner as the other claims have been proven.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there is a misunderstanding on the part of the distinguished Senator from Utah about the real situation. Certainly there must be a misunderstanding on the part of lawyers who would write what has been written in the letter which I just read to the Senate, namely—

On account of a claim rejected by the Commission through decision by the umpire.

That is a misunderstanding of the facts, and it is a misunderstanding that ought not to exist, because the decisions of the umpire are in writing, and they are quoted in the hearings and in the report to the Senate.

I am sorry to have to state the case out of its natural and logical order, but since the Senator from Utah has raised the point at this time let me say that the original bill in the language in which it was couched was based upon something which the Mixed Claims Commission did not have legal jurisdiction of at all, namely, an accord and satisfaction entered into through diplomatic negotiations between the Government of Germany and the Government of the United States. It was the introduction into an already pending petition in the Mixed Claims Commission by Mrs. Drier, of this extraneous and different character of a claim, that caused the umpire to hold that he had no jurisdiction to pass upon the merits of her claim or to find the amount of her damages. So it is not quite exact, and certainly it is not equitable, to deny this woman recovery of justice and recovery of equity, on the theory stated in the letter which I read, that the Mixed Claims Commission have held against her on her claim, or on the other theory stated here, that they have heard it and denied it or that she has failed to prove it.

I shall now read from the memorandum made by H. H. Martin, counsel for the American Commissioner, on the day when this agreement was entered into, compromising and settling a claim of more than $1,000,000 for $160,000, and the interest thereon at 5 percent from January 20 until the time of payment, with an understanding among all that that amount was to be paid within a very short time. Senators will observe as I read that it was referred to as to be settled within 2 days afterward. I now read a letter from H. H. Martin, counsel for the American agent, dated February 28, 1933, addressed to Mr. Aron, who was counsel for the claimant, Mrs. Drier:

DEAR MR. ARON: I am enclosing herewith for your information and any comment and correction you care to make therein, a short memorandum covering our conference of yesterday with the German agent in relation to the Drier claim, Docket Nos. 4712 and 11485.

The German agent has not as yet called me up in relation to this claim. I assume accordingly that he has not as yet heard from the Foreign Office authorizing his settlement of the claim on the basis arrived at yesterday. As soon as I hear anything from the German agent I shall promptly advise you.

Very truly yours,

H. H. MARTIN, Counsel.

Here is what he enclosed:

MEMORANDUM

FEBRUARY 27, 1933.

CONFERENCE RE DRIER CLAIM, DOCKET NOS. 4712 AND 11485

I had a conference this afternoon in regard to the Drier claim. There were present the German agent, H. G. Aron, Esq., counsel for claimant, and myself. This conference began about 2:30 p. m. and ended about 5:30 p. m.

At the beginning of the conference the German agent was advised by me that Mr. Aron had cabled claimant, who is now abroad, asking her for the minimum figure she would take in consideration of a prompt settlement of the claim. Claimant replied to this cable to the effect that she was not interested in a settlement but was willing to allow the matter to follow its regular course before the Commission.

I, however, said that I had talked the matter over with Mr. Aron and it was agreeable to me to proceed with the conference with a view to endeavoring to arrive at a figure that he and Mr. Sargent, who is associated with him in this claim, would agree to submit to the claimant. Mr. Aron in the first place advised the German agent that he had no figure in mind, but that he was, however, willing to proceed with the conference and endeavor to arrive at a figure that he and Mr. Sargent might consider acceptable and then advise claimant by cable of their conclusions and further tell her that if this figure was not acceptable to her they would then withdraw from the claim.

Mr. Aron further said that shortly prior to the entering of the award of April 1929, he had strongly recommended to claimant that she be fully satisfied with an award on the basis of a principal recovery of $500,000 and that he was willing at this time to abide by that advice to his client but that she was thoroughly convinced that she should recover practically the full amount of the claim. On this basis we then proceeded to discuss figures.

After considerable discussion back and forth, Mr. Aron said that in arriving at his figure of $500,000 principal he was willing to have the proposed additional award as of January 1, 1928, reduced by 20 percent in order that the difference in the present value of the dollar and the value of it as of 1928 might be taken into account. In addition, he recognized the justice of taking into consideration a 3-year period of interest during the time between the handing down of the award of April 1929 and the filing of the petition for the further award on November 18, 1932, as during this time it could not be said with any justice that Germany should be responsible for interest.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not quite finished the reading. I should like to finish reading this memorandum. I call attention, in passing, to the fact that this is a current memorandum, made on the very day that the agreement was entered into, February 27, 1933.

I now continue reading the memorandum:

Applying these principles, we arrived at a figure of $160,000, with interest at 5 percent from January 1, 1928 [this date is typographical error for 1920], as being Mr. Aron's conception of an award his client should be willing to take by way of compromise settlement. This figure the German agent said he would recommend to the Foreign Office for acceptance and Mr. Aron said that he would send off this evening a telegram to Mr. Sargent advising him of the settlement and asking his approval of a joint cablegram recommending her acceptance of the figure. The German agent is to advise me in the morning as soon as he hears from the Foreign Office as to whether it will approve this settlement. I am to immediately advise Mr. Aron as to the position of the Foreign Office in the matter.

If this settlement goes through, it is with the distinct and definite understanding that all claims as of this date the claimant is asserting against the German Government are to be wiped out. This includes not only the claim before the Commission but the diplomatic claim that has been asserted by claimant arising out of the treatment she has received in recent years in Germany.

H. H. MARTIN.

Then follows the letter of March 1 to Mr. Aron:

MARCH 1, 1933.

H. G. Aron, Esq.,
Bar Building, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. ARON: This will confirm our telephone conversation of this noon in relation to the proposed settlement of the Drier claim, Docket Nos. 4712 and 11485.

The German agent advised me just a few minutes ago that he had received authority for making settlement of the Drier claim in accordance with our conference of the 27th ultimo. Under this settlement we are to get a further award of $160,000, with interest at 5 percent from January 1, 1920, to date of final payment.

As I understand, this settlement is satisfactory to you and Mr. Sargent as attorneys for claimant, and it is your purpose to cable claimant for her approval. You expect to receive claimant's reply so as to notify me of her attitude sometime tomorrow in order that final disposition of the claim may be made by the Commission at a meeting that will probably be held Friday the 3d instant.

That is, within 2 days.

You, of course, understand the position of the German agent in reference to this and other settlements covering claims that are now pending before the Commission, the understanding being that the arrangement involves the disposition of all claims pending before the Commission. So far as I am now aware, there will be nothing to interfere with carrying out this arrangement.

Sincerely yours,

H. H. MARTIN, Counsel.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator a question, and in order to ask the question I shall have to state my understanding.

From hearing the testimony I had no doubt that Mrs. Drier had a justifiable claim. The question in my mind was whether or not she was entitled to 100 percent of her money, while the other claimants to this fund would receive probably only 80 percent of theirs. At the time of the hearing the Senator and counsel for Mrs. Drier appeared before the committee and stated, as I recollect—I am sure with complete reason so to state—that the other claimants had no objection to Mrs. Drier receiving 100 percent. The letter which the Senator has just read, which came in today, indicates that the other claimants do object.

It is true that in the letter the lawyer makes a mistake in describing how the claim happened to be disposed of, but, nevertheless, the letter does indicate an objection on the part of the other claimants. So far as the question of the 100 percent is concerned, as compared with the 80 percent, the impelling motive was the fact that the other claimants did not object. I ask the Senator whether this letter does not change the situation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has asked that question at this point because I can clear it up completely.

At the time I presented this matter to the committee it was my understanding that the letters, which are in the hearings on pages 38 and 39 as exhibit 7, one being addressed to H. H. Martin, Esq., counsel to the American agent, Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, Washington, D. C., signed by Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, dated January 2, 1937; another by the same firm to the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, Department of State, Washington, D. C., dated the same day; and another by the same firm to Harold G. Aron, dated January 2, 1937, expressed the assent of the distinguished lawyers who represented the award holders to the allowance and payment of Mrs. Drier's claim on condition that she would not rely upon the Munich protocol. She withdrew her reference to the Munich protocol and was therefore entitled to the benefit of the waiver.

After the bill had been reported to the Senate, I learned, through distinguished Senators and through Mr. Covington, who represents the firm of Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, that that situation may have been true then, and in the condition of the claim before the Mixed Claims Commission, but that it could not be applied to any other form of recovery.

In other words, merely because Mrs. Drier's claim was turned aside as not within the jurisdiction of the Commission, and she was forced to come to another sanctuary for her relief, these distinguished lawyers now say, "We object."

In connection with that objection I have an amendment, which I was about to read when the interruption occurred, and which will meet entirely and completely the claim that, if this bill should be passed, the other claimants would have to wait a little longer than Mrs. Drier would have to wait for the huge sums of money which they seek to obtain out of the $26,000,000. I am remedying that situation by offering for the acceptance of the Congress—and it ought to be accepted—this amendment:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "forthwith."

On page 2, line 4, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That payment of such sum of $160,000 and interest thereon as herein provided shall be made as follows:

"(1) There shall be paid forthwith to the said Katherine M. Drier an amount which bears the same proportion to such sum and interest thereon as the amounts heretofore paid out of such special deposit account to claimants on whose behalf awards have been made by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, bear to the total awards so made to such claimants; and

"(2) Payment of the balance of such sum and interest thereon shall be prorated on the basis of the amount of the respective payments authorized by section 2 (b) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, and remaining unpaid."

Does the Senator comprehend the effect of that amendment?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator that, if his statement is correct and she waived her rights under the Munich protocol after the receipt of this letter from the New York firm of attorneys, I think the Senator is going much further than he would need to go. It would seem to me, if she waived those rights upon the basis of this letter, that they would be estopped from later objecting to the award in the amount of 100 percent.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am not standing on an estoppel at all; I am not standing here before the people of America upon a technicality. Let me tell the simple story, and I will leave it to the justice and honesty of every citizen in America as to whether we ought not to pass this bill forthwith.

Mrs. Drier was born in Vermont, and while a young lady went over to Germany to perfect her education in music. There she married a baron. In 1913 her husband died, leaving a will by which he devised to her a castle, called Bonnewitz, which was of a value of more than a million dollars.

This is not a guess. The evidence presented to the Commission included a statement and opinion by a man who certainly was worthy of trust on such a matter—Carl Adolfo von Carlowitz, chamberlain to the King of Saxony, in which kingdom this property was located. This witness, who had been familiar with the property all his life and had always taken a special interest therein, as it originally belonged to one of his ancestors, after looking through the various documents, expressed the opinion that—

The immovable and movable property mentioned in the beforesaid documents must have had a value of from five to six million gold marks in the year 1919. (Exhibit G, filed March 19, 1929, being one of the documents turned over to the German agent June 1, 1927.)

This opinion, coming from a neighbor who held the rank of chamberlain to the King of Saxony, is assuredly entitled to material weight, particularly as there has never been made any suggestion, either directly or indirectly, as to his incompetency or his lack of fairness.

As to the forest land—and the Senate will understand that forest land in Germany is worth more than it is in our great country—the valuator of the forest land was the Royal Forester of Saxony. There were opinions by other experts, who were not American experts, but were German experts; and in the whole record before the umpire of the Mixed Claims Commission there will not be found one particle of evidence qualifying or denying the valuations. In the answer, an answer which was made 2 years after the German agent had had these valuations in hand, knew all about them, and after he had been to Germany where he could interview the witnesses, check any error or any extravagant opinion, and be well advised how to answer, he came in and filed an answer to the effect that he did not have sufficient knowledge either to deny or affirm anything with respect to the valuations placed on the property by the valuators.

Mr. President, I do not expect the United States Senate to pass upon the question of the value of that property, but it should be borne in mind that, in addition to the confiscation of this valuable estate, the German Government has used this woman most shamefully. She was arrested by the German Government on two different occasions and committed to jail under circumstances which called for the condemnation of even the German consul in the city of New York. It was through the efforts of friends and officials that she found bail and was released from jail on both occasions, but the bail was confiscated by the German Government. Thus there arose a diplomatic claim in addition to the claim which came within the jurisdiction of the Mixed Claims Commission, a claim in addition to the claim for the seizure of her property.

As I have pointed out in this memorandum of the American agent, all these claims were compromised and settlement and accord and satisfaction were made and entered into between the German agent and the American agent, which included the diplomatic negotiations between the Secretary of State and the Ambassador of Germany, for the payment immediately of $160,000, with interest thereon at 5 percent from January 1920 to the time of payment, in full accord and satisfaction of all her claims against the German Government.

Mr. President, for 20 years this poor woman has been striving to get justice. She has had two awards. The validity of her claim has been recognized time and time again; but full satisfaction of it has never been accorded to her, although she was awarded $48,000 on one occasion and $250,000 on another occasion. Still her financial condition is such that in 1931 she was just about level with the world, her debts paid, and in a position and at an age in life when the payment of the remainder of the indemnity ought to have been made to enable her venerable years to be passed without suffering what she has had to go through ever since.

Now, let me point out how many distinguished witnesses there are who have testified to the accuracy of this accord and satisfaction as bearing upon the obligation of the United States Congress to see that out of these German moneys held in the United States this claimant at least should be indemnified.

Mr. President, I realize that after 20 years of effort in the attempt to secure justice the file becomes cluttered up, and there are numerous things to which in the time of the Senate I ought to take to give to this matter I cannot refer, but I think those few which are referred to establish beyond any doubt whatever that there is no question here whether this is a debt due to a national of the United States which has been agreed to by the debtor and to collect which there is no forum other than the Congress of the United States to which she can go, she having been turned out of the Mixed Claims Commission solely on a technicality—well, it was more than a technicality; it was on the fact that the Mixed Claims Commission has not the authority of a court to enforce an accord and satisfaction. That was the ground of the rejection of her claim. As to her not having established it before that Commission, that is a queer claim to make today, when this poor creditor has been turned out and has not been given an opportunity to establish the fact that she had closed the incident by an agreement between the two governments concerned.

Mr. President, I ask the Senate to listen to a simple, clear statement by the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, a man whose word every Senator respects. I read from a letter from Cordell Hull to His Excellency Hans Luther, dated May 7, 1934, in which he said, in part:

I regret that the German Government is unwilling to have this case closed along with the other cases on which agreements were reached by the two agents in February of last year.

Senators will realize that this communication is dated 1934; and we are standing upon an agreement made on February 27, 1933, a year before that.

He says:

The claim was the subject of discussion between the American and German agents and counsel for the claimant at various times, and on February 27, 1933, an additional amount of $160,000 was agreed upon. The German agent, so I am informed, stated that he could not give his final approval to the settlement until he had consulted his government. It appears that later, namely, on March 1, he informed the American agent that his government had approved the settlement, and this information was conveyed to counsel for the claimant.

That ought to end it, but there is more:

Since that time the claim has been included in the list of claims on which tentative settlements had been reached, and prior to the receipt of your note of May 7, 1934, no condition was stated, except that the work of the Commission be promptly closed. The present correspondence is calculated to limit the work of the Commission so as to bring its work to an end at the earliest practicable date. The failure to settle this claim in accordance with the understanding reached more than a year ago is placing the claimant and this Government in an embarrassing position, since both had relied upon the agreement reached and had considered the case as definitely settled, save for the formal consummation of the arrangement.

That is not hearsay, Mr. President. That is a communication by the diplomatic representative of the United States Government to the diplomatic representative of the debtor, the German Government. Was he bound to say anything? Was the man to whom this communication was addressed bound to reply? Mr. President, as good lawyers, we recognize that mere silence is not evidence; but silence when a man ought to speak is evidence, and the circumstances here were such that the representative of the German Government ought to have spoken or forever hold his peace, for this communication was in the Mixed Claims Commission before the umpire, a place where the truth or falsity of this claim was to be passed upon.

Did the German representative deny that settlement entered into? He did not. He never denied it; and how can we listen and give any force and effect to the claims of these lawyers, with their big fees, coming in here to block and obstruct and hold back this poor woman from recovering on that promise in this the only forum to which she can go for justice?

That is one witness. Now let me call your attention to another, whose probity and whose position as representing us all is worthy of weight. I read, from page 25 of the hearings, a letter from the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, written to me August 24, 1935, in which the following occurs; and the whole letter may be read with much benefit by every Senator, for it is in the hearings, and it ought to be read with benefit by these lawyers.

The subject matter of this petition for further award later became the subject of discussions between the American and German agents and counsel for the claimant.

This is the President telling me about this claim concerning which I had written and asked.

And on February 27, 1933, an additional amount of $160,000, with interest from January 1, 1920, was agreed upon by the two agents and acquiesced in by counsel for claimant. On March 1, 1933, the German agent informed the American agent that his government had approved this settlement. Counsel for the claimant was notified of this on the same day.

Like settlements were reached during the month of February 1933 by the two agents with respect to a number of other claims then pending before the Commission. These settlements, that were in the nature of compromise agreements, however, could not be given final validity until submitted to and approved by the Commission.

Shortly thereafter the German Government indicated its readiness to have these compromise settlements submitted to the Commission for approval on condition that the work of the Commission should thereupon be considered as closed and the Commission dissolved. This condition, made subsequent to the settlement negotiations, was one that the Commission, in the absence of instructions from the two Governments, had no power to agree to and the settlements accordingly could not be submitted to the Commission for its final approval.

This is in the letter of the President of the United States.

Counsel for the claimant was notified of this on the same day.

Again, at another place in the letter appears the following, referring to the scene in the Mixed Claims Commission to which I have already referred:

On May 7, 1934, the German Government finally agreed to allow the claims on which the two agents had arrived at compromise settlements in February 1933 to go before the Commission for awards. The German Government, however, excepted from this arrangement the Drier claim, giving as the reason for this exception that the evidence on which the award in 1929 was predicated appeared "to be not beyond suspicion."

In other words, they are trying their case on suspicion.

And that further time would be required for making an appropriate investigation with respect to this evidence.

Now, note this: This is the President saying this:

No evidence, however, on which these suspicions of the German Government were based has ever been furnished the Department.

Senators will notice that I have called attention to the current memorandum, which proves to the satisfaction of any reasonable person the making of the settlement and accord. I have called attention to the presentation of that statement in the Mixed Claims Commission by correspondence between the diplomatic representatives of the United States and Germany, in which the assertion is positively made, and is not denied. I have called attention to the fact that the Chief Executive of one of the parties to that settlement—namely, the President of the United States—has repeated almost in haec verba the exact, substantial terms of the agreement. I am now going to call your attention to one more matter, and that is the statement of the American agent made before the Mixed Claims Commission, not idly made, but the claim of the representative of a party and a great party; namely, a treaty power, a nation, in that tribunal in which each of those nations had a representative, and both had an umpire.

I read from an exhibit in the hearings which begins on page 26, a memorandum relating to the claim of Katherine M. Drier against Germany, filed before the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, under the agreement of August 10, 1922—42 Statutes 2200:

In the report of the agent of the United States submitted to the Secretary of State on December 31, 1934, the following statements are made with respect to the claim of Katherine M. Drier:

I am turning over to page 27, and quoting therefrom only a paragraph:

An interesting example of the treatment according enemy property in Germany, in at least one instance, is afforded in the claim of Katherine McNider Drier (Docket Nos. 4712 and 11485), an American national who had resided in Germany for a number of years prior to the entry of this country into the war.

On page 28, another paragraph:

Following the filing of the second petition several conferences have been had between H. H. Martin, counsel for the American agent, counsel for claimant, and the German agent. As the result of these conferences a tentative agreement was reached that the two agents would join in recommendation to the Commission that a further and additional award be entered in this claim in the amount of $160,000, with interest at 5 percent a year from January 1, 1920, which amount was approved by the German Foreign Office.

This is a statement of record in the Mixed Claims Commission.

What did the umpire do with this claim? Let us turn to page 30 of the report of the hearing. The Umpire referred to it in this way:

The showing is—

That is, he means the representation which appears in the pleadings—

The showing is that the two Governments, by their authorized agents, orally agreed that this claim, amongst others, should be submitted to the Commission for a further award of $160,000, but that the German agent refrained from signing, and refused to sign, an agreed statement of facts for submission to the Commission in the premises.

Again, the umpire said this—and I am also reading from page 30, at the bottom of the page:

The position of the claimant in the present application is not clear. The relief asked is that the cause be reopened for a further hearing. In this respect this position does not differ from its predecessor. If, however, the prayer should be granted, the function of the Commission would be to reconsider upon the original record, or upon that record as it might now be supplemented, the question of the measure of damages to which the claimant is entitled.

I pause in reading to say that there the claim would have been approximately a million dollars, in view of the accrual of interest. Notwithstanding the allowance previously made, there was still this claim, if it had stood upon that basis. I now resume the reading:

But if there has been an accord and satisfaction, as asserted in the petition, this could not be done.

Mr. President, that is the meat of the coconut. Resuming the reading:

Upon the theory of accord and satisfaction, the petitioner would be entitled to a judgment for $160,000; but the Commission is, as I understand it, without the authority of a court to enforce agreements made between the diplomatic representatives of the two Governments. Thus, if a new cause of action is asserted, based upon an agreement between the diplomatic representatives of the two Governments, I think the Commission is entirely without authority to enter a decree based thereon.

Mr. President, I have read just a sentence of the gravest importance here, in view of the position taken by the learned counsel, which I read at the opening of my remarks. Listen to this, in contrast. I read a phrase in the letter to which I have referred.

They called me yesterday evening to say that after a conference with the committee representing the award holders they are still opposed to the dimunition of the special fund in the Treasury available for the partial payment of Mixed Claims Commission awards which will result from payment on account of a claim rejected by the Commission through decision of the Umpire.

Listen again to what the Umpire said:

Upon the theory of accord and satisfaction the petitioner would be entitled to a judgment for $160,000 but the Commission is, as I understand it, without the authority of a court to enforce agreements made between the diplomatic representatives of the two governments.

It was on that basis that Katherine M. Drier was turned away. I am not criticizing that. I agree with that. I agree that legally the Mixed Claims Commission could not take jurisdiction of an accord and satisfaction, and implement the execution of it. But what is the effect upon Katherine M. Drier? Is she to be cast out without any indemnity for her great loss? Is this Government of the United States going to abandon her to the wiles of Germany, or to the opposition of these greedy persons, also interested in this fund, who would stop a poor woman from her participation, pro rata, in the fund, even though they know the merit of her claim, even though they know that she was turned away from this tribunal purely because it had not jurisdiction to pass upon the accord and satisfaction?

Here, indeed, is cause for Congress to exercise its chancery power, as it is sometimes called upon to exercise it, in order that this great sovereign power shall do justice and equity among its people.

Mr. President, let me now speak of another phase of this matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. When this matter was first brought to my attention a few days ago, it occurred to me that Mrs. Drier, having appeared before the Mixed Claims Commission upon two different occasions, certainly must have submitted some evidence to justify awards which were made. She did receive two awards, and it occurred to me that if she had the opportunity, as apparently she did have, to present to the Mixed Claims Commission any claims she might have arising out of damages to person or to property, they should have been presented. I wondered why, with the two presentations and two awards, there was not included in the final examination of her case the $160,000 which is now the subject of the measure under consideration at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a fair question, and I will try to answer it. I think I know the answer.

I make no comment about the conduct of the business. I merely show that while there was pending this last petition for reopening of the hearings in the Mixed Claims Commission, based on the theory that what had been awarded to her before was not in conformity with the treaty of Berlin, and the law of the United States and Germany, by all of which she was entitled to have awarded to her the full indemnity for her loss and injury—while there was pending the petition to reopen the case because she had had only lesser amounts awarded to her, there occurred a diplomatic negotiation relating to her false imprisonment. That was a subject concerning which the Mixed Claims Commission had no jurisdiction. The funds which were impounded here in the German special deposit account were not originally impounded with that in view; that is, not in contemplation of being paid through the Mixed Claims Commission. Any relief outside of that for the expropriation of her property, therefore, could not be passed through the Mixed Claims Commission. The situation was confused by her making a diplomatic settlement after she filed her petition for reopening the hearings before the Mixed Claims Commission, thus introducing into the jurisdiction of the Mixed Claims Commission a matter which was extraneous, and concerning which it had no authority, and creating a confused situation which the umpire referred to in almost that language. He said, as appears on page 30 of the hearings:

The position of the claimant in the present application is not clear. The relief asked is that the cause be reopened for a further hearing. In this respect this petition does not differ from its predecessor. If, however, the prayer should be granted, the function of the Commission would be to reconsider upon the original record, or upon that record as it might now be supplemented, the question of the measure of damages to which the claimant is entitled. But if there has been an accord and satisfaction, as asserted in the petition, this could not be done.

Mr. President, that is the point. There was the confusion in this tribunal created by the introduction of a matter which was extraneous and over which the Commission had no jurisdiction. Let me comment on the peculiarity of that situation.

The umpire, in effect, said:

You might have relied upon that accord and satisfaction as an additional ground of equity if you had amended your petition and had filed the accord and satisfaction here, not for the purpose of recovering the amount of accord and satisfaction, but as further evidence of your interest and your right to have a reopening of the hearing here, and start fresh with the proof of your damages. But you did not do that, and you have got into this position. The position of the claimant in the present application is not clear.

Therefore, the umpire said, and I read from page 36:

Thus, if a new cause of action is asserted, based upon an agreement between the diplomatic representatives of the two Governments, I think the Commission is entirely without authority to enter a decree based thereon. It can act only upon the agreements of the national agents accredited to represent the respective nations before it. On the other hand, if the matters now alleged are put forward as an additional basis in equity for the reopening of the former order of the Commission I find myself at a loss to know why, between March 1933 and July 1934, they were not placed in the record, for, during that entire period, it was open to the petitioner to supplement her pleading and to permit Germany to answer on the pleading so supplemented instead of answering only the original petition alleging other grounds for relief.

In either view, therefore, I think the Commission cannot consider the petition now under review and that it must be dismissed.

Does that answer the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite clear. As I understand the facts, Mrs. Drier presented a claim before the Mixed Claims Commission upon which an award was made. Subsequently she presented another claim, as I suppose for damages to property, and a further award was made. Later she filed a petition to reopen, based upon this diplomatic agreement, and the Mixed Claims Commission held that it had no jurisdiction over that, and dismissed the claim.

The Senator is a lawyer and knows that the courts do not favor splitting up demands. If he has a valid claim against a defendant, the presumption is that he presents in one suit his entire claim, instead of splitting it up into fragments and bringing numerous complaints.

If this lady was damaged, and I assume she was damaged—it is clear that she was damaged in property as well as in person—and she filed a claim; why did she not in that claim include all which she insisted was due by reason of the injury or confiscation of property? Why did she not in that same suit or claim set up the damages which she sustained by reason of false imprisonment and the injuries to which she was subjected in person and in property by reason of the illegal acts of the German Government?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a very natural question, and it is a lawyer's question. The Senator from Utah is a great lawyer, among his other excellent qualifications, and I hasten to answer his question.

The chronology of events is the answer. I am going to make a list briefly.

1913: Baron von Rosenberg died.

1916: Claimant married John C. L. Drier, who was a United States consul.

1918, in May, her property was taken over by the Saxon authorities for war purposes.

November 1919, more than a year after the armistice, the property was sold by the German custodian over the claimant's protest.

In August 1922 the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, was created.

In January 1925 an award of $48,000 was entered.

In March 1927 the present claim was submitted to the American agent, Robert W. Bonynge, in a letter dated March 23, 1927.

In June 1928 the claimant was arrested in Germany.

Time tells this story. She did not have that injury when she made her petition in March 1927. She was arrested in Germany, and I am informed that this is a quotation from a former German consul general at New York.

Under most atrocious circumstances.

In March 1929 she made a petition for additional award.

In April 1929 the second award was made of $250,000.

In October 1930 she was arrested and imprisoned, and the facts were then presented to the State Department.

Here is the beginning of the diplomatic negotiation.

October 1, 1931, with President Hoover's approval, further payments by Germany into the German special-deposit account was postponed. Her financial condition at that time was dependent on the settlement of this claim, and since that time it has continued to be so dependent.

I believe I have sufficiently stated the history to show the sequence of events and to show that at the time of her petition in 1927 she had not been arrested at all, and at the time of her petition in 1929 the second arrest had not occurred. Diplomatic negotiations began in 1930. That accounts for the petition itself not comprehending this element of damage.

Mr. President, I do not know how much more time of the Senate I ought to take. It seems too bad to use up so much time of this great deliberative body on a simple matter of the Senate doing equity to an American citizen and carrying out the purpose expressed at the time when Congress took charge of these German funds, and put them in a special deposit account. In 1917 we declared, at the time we took over this property, that it should remain and be always under the control of the Congress.

I have had the assertion made to me since this matter came up that these funds were in trust for somebody particularly. Not so. There is no trust. The United States owns these funds absolutely by the exercise of extraordinary war power, as a matter of national defense, and untrammeled by any of the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution; we have jurisdiction, and we have declared by statute on more than one occasion that we would apply these funds to the payment of damages suffered by American nationals by virtue of the misconduct and injury of the enemy to property and persons, and claims of American nationals of that kind have a right to participate in these funds.

The great lawyers who have huge fees which cause them so great an interest in heading off this small claim have no vested right in this property. This is not a trust for their benefit. Mr. President, it seems to me that, according to the rules of the game of life, they have not the right to present such a claim as that made in the letter I received this morning, as a ground for impeding the speedy remedy which should be accorded to this poor woman after 20 years of long struggle to recover what belongs to her.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator just alluded to a letter received by him this morning. I was not advised in regard to that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I read it at the beginning of my remarks.

Mr. KING. I was wondering whether it is similar to the telegram which just this minute was received by me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me read the letter, and then the Senator can see. The letter is from J. Harry Covington, of Washington, D. C., addressed to me.

Mr. KING. The telegram I received is from Mr. John B. Coleman, of New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. He must refer to that, for he says this in his letter:

They state that they are therefore wiring the two Senators of the State of New York and Senators on the Finance and Foreign Relations Committees setting forth their opposition to the Drier bill.

I want them to come to the Congress of the United States and make all their claims. They will have respectful treatment from me and, I believe, from every other Senator. I have treated them courteously whenever I have had the opportunity to meet them, and I am willing to continue to do so. But when they make a claim which is in direct contrast with the record, I shall call attention to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of what I stated, and what the Senator has just indicated, perhaps it would not be improper for me to ask permission to read into the RECORD a telegram which I just received.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, indeed; I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. KING. The telegram is dated April 12, and is addressed to me. I am a member of the Finance Committee, and I presume for that reason the telegram was sent to me.

15 BROAD STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y., April 12, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM H. KING,
Senate Office Building:

American Awardholders' Association, representing 99 holders of awards allowed by German-American Mixed Claims Commission, with balances largely unpaid and to great extent unrealizable, strongly oppose passage of Senate bill 3097, calendar number 1346, providing for payment of disallowed claim of Katherine M. Drier for about $300,000. This sum would be paid out of German special deposit account held by Treasury under existing legislation as trust fund limited to payment of awards allowed by Commission. Drier claim previously rejected by Commission after prolonged consideration. Even though Drier claim possibly unique in character, payment through congressional action after rejection by duly constituted international tribunal would be unwise interference with arbitral process as well as inequity to existing awardholders. Fact that bill was presented as private claim allowed no notice or opportunity to be heard by numerous American nationals affected by its terms.

JOHN B. COLEMAN, Jr.,
Secretary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am very glad to have that telegram in the RECORD. It shows what the motive is. It shows what the interest is, and it also shows upon what the other claimants stand. They stand upon an alleged rejection by a duly constituted tribunal.

I have read the record twice, perhaps three times, showing that no tribunal has rejected this claim on the merits. A tribunal has denied its authority to consider the claim of an accord and satisfaction made between the diplomatic agents of Germany and the United States.

I was about to proceed to show the control of Congress over these funds, and also the fundamental right, power, and duty of Congress, by virtue of its chancery powers, to execute performance of the agreement between the United States and Germany. I have an excellent precedent for this action; but, before I cite it, let me point out how interested some lawyers appear to be in blocking this poor woman from the allowance of her just claim. I have before me an extract from the New York Times of March 16, 1940, by the Associated Press, entitled "Three Federal Judges Doubt Their Power To Stop Road Paying Black Tom Legal Fees":

PHILADELPHIA, March 15.—Three Federal judges today voiced doubt they had the authority to stop the Lehigh Valley Railroad from paying fees to a group of lawyers, and amounting to $4,950,000, for services in obtaining a $9,900,000 judgment against the German Government for property damages in the Black Tom explosion 24 years ago.

Circuit Judge Albert B. Maris and United States District Judges George A. Welsh and Harry E. Kalodner suggested to counsel for Graydon A. Rhodes, of Englewood, N. J., a bondholder who protested the fees, that he file objections with the American Mixed Claims Commission, which made the award. Mr. Rhodes' protest, however, was taken under advisement.

Counsel for the Lehigh Valley told the court that the company had made a contract with a group of lawyers to pay them half of any award they could obtain against the German Government, but had asked the Mixed Claims Commission to pass upon the fairness of the fee, since there is a Federal law imposing a penalty four times any excessive amounts paid for such services.

Pending further study, the judges indicated that they felt their jurisdiction was limited to deciding whether the court should permit the Lehigh Valley and three of its subsidiaries to effect a plan to defer payment of interest and principal until its revenue enabled it to meet the obligations.

Counsel for Mr. Rhodes argued that payment of the fee would have a vital bearing on the company's financial condition and also upon the rights of the State of New Jersey.

At the same time the judges postponed until June 7 a hearing to determine whether the Lehigh Valley's plan for a moratorium on payment of principal and interest on some of its matured securities should be approved. The reason given for the delay was that no settlement has been reached yet with New Jersey on property taxes of $5,214,123 still due for 1932 to 1939. The company already has paid $9,407,604 on the State's claim for $14,621,727, and seeks to obtain an adjustment on the balance.

Mr. President, I do not charge that these are the same persons who at this last minute are trying to block this legislation. I believe that they are not the same. I use this illustration only as an indication of the type of transaction in which at least one claimant, who is seeking to participate in this fund, is engaged. I do not know whether or not that firm has the audacity to attempt to stop, impede, or hinder the payment to Katherine Drier of her claim for $160,000 and interest. I wish I knew.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator has probably covered this point, but why was this claim submitted to the diplomatic officers representing the German Government and the diplomatic officers representing the United States Government for determination of the amount, when an agreement was reached on $160,000 with interest? Was that an unusual procedure?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know that it was an unusual procedure in itself, but, in my opinion, it was outside the original conception.

Mr. MILLER. My idea was that it was over and beyond the original construction of the law for the settlement of such claims.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. The abuse of this woman, the false arrest and imprisonment, occurred in 1928 and 1930, long after the war; and the question of whether or not the matter came within the terms of the Alien Enemy Property Act of 1917, the Treaty of Versailles, or even the terms of the Mixed Claims Commission Act of 1928 would naturally suggest to the mind of a lawyer the question whether he ought to go through diplomatic channels rather than try to go through the Mixed Claims Commission.

Mr. MILLER. Those negotiations were opened primarily because of the abuse and mistreatment of Mrs. Drier?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And as an incident to those negotiations an effort was made to settle the whole question at one time?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. From the files I have read it is my understanding that in reality the claimant, Mrs. Drier, treated the $160,000 as applying only to her property damage suffered in 1916 and waived the personal-injury claim.

Mr. MILLER. My impression was that a compromise settlement of the entire matter was sought.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is true; and it is so stated in the memorandum made that day.

Mr. President, only a few things more, and I shall take my seat.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is there sufficient money in the funds which were set aside for the purpose of meeting adjudicated claims to pay the entire amount which was awarded to the various claimants by the Mixed Claims Commission; or, if the payment to Mrs. Drier is made, will there be a reduction in the amount paid to each of the other claimants who has established his claim before the Mixed Claims Commission?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, answering broadly, let me say that no one yet knows what the answer will be, because there is property on deposit with the Federal Government which has not been transferred to the German special deposit account. It has been held as security for the performance of promises by Germany; and it is hoped that ultimately every claimant will be paid 100 percent of his claim.

Those who have an award—and those who are interposing the objection have had an award—have been paid a proportion of their claims. I do not know exactly what the proportion is. When I appeared before the Committee on Foreign Relations I had the idea that they had been paid 80 percent. Some of the lawyers with whom I have since talked have made me doubt that they have yet received all of 80 percent. However, I believe that they have already received between 70 and 80 percent, cash in hand.

My amendment would permit Mrs. Drier to receive forthwith the amount of her claim which is proportionate to what other claimants have received, which would not give her any priority in time over the poor lawyers and their clients; and then, in order to satisfy their cupidity, let her wait for the remainder of her little claim until they receive the rest of theirs, letting her take in exactly the same ratio as they take. My amendment puts this poor widow on a footing with the great banks, railroads, and lawyers who are seeking millions of dollars.

Let me call attention to what happened in that respect. One firm of lawyers informed me through Mr. Aron that they would be glad to withdraw any objection they had if I would have the report on this claim contain the following paragraph:

The committee is advised that there is now in the German special deposit account ample funds to provide for the payment to those on whose behalf the United States received awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, on the 30th of October 1939, sufficient to place them upon a parity of payment with those who have already received payments on account of prior awards, including the petitioner herein, and the payment to the petitioner hereunder will not interfere with the payment to such holders of awards granted October 30, 1939, of the amounts necessary to produce such parity.

They were not so greedy as to insist on payment in full. All they asked was that Mrs. Drier take payment on a parity with them; and they wanted to know if the fund was such that this poor woman, with her small claim, could get her share on that basis and still leave them unharmed in the receipt of parity as of the date of their award, which was October 1939.

Mr. President, I did not ask the Treasury Department to express any opinion on this bill or to foretell any consequences. I asked the committee to write to the Department, which was done on February 29. The following letter was addressed to Hon. Daniel W. Bell, Under Secretary of the Treasury:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C., February 29, 1940.

Hon. DANIEL W. BELL,
Under Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In the absence of the chairman and at the direction of the acting chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of a letter to the chairman from Senator AUSTIN dated February 28, 1940, requesting that the Treasury Department be asked to furnish the committee with a statement as to the facts and correspondence upon which the statement quoted in the attached copy of letter purports to be based. The statement has reference to funds now in the German special deposit account.

It is desired that this information be incorporated in the hearings recently held on the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier, which bill was ordered reported favorably by the committee on February 21, 1940.

Your expeditious consideration of this request will be appreciated.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES A. WHITE, Acting Clerk.

Notice what the Acting Secretary says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 1, 1940.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to the letter dated February 29, 1940, from your committee, asking for certain information with respect to funds now in the German special deposit account.

There was available as of February 29, 1940, for paying the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, approximately $26,049,739.92 in, or available to, the German special deposit account, as follows—

There follows a detailed statement, concluding with the words:

Approximate amount in or available to the German special deposit account (all in cash), $26,049,739.92.

And then this significant statement follows:

It is estimated that approximately $23,600,000 would have been needed as of December 31, 1939, to pay the holders of the so-called sabotage awards in the same proportion as payments have been previously made to other award holders.

This letter should not be construed as a report by the Treasury Department on S. 3097.

Very truly yours,

D. W. BELL,
Under Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, there is the information; that is all the answer this poor woman ought to be called upon to make to the inquiry of the Senator from Utah. She knows no more about the future than does the inquirer. She is informed by the custodian of these funds that they are ample, that there is $3,000,000 more than necessary to pay all the award holders of all classes and kinds on the same basis of parity as of December 31, 1939. That is all we know about it, and by the amendment offered we take a chance with them as to the future. For my part, I hope they will all get their 100 percent. I certainly would feel like crying if the lawyers did not get theirs.

Mr. President, there is one more thing I should like to mention, and then I will conclude. I say that we have a duty to perform which should give us joy. We can do justice and equity to a citizen of the United States who for 20 long years has been trying to get justice and equity and has been unable to get it, and in the process of doing so has twice been cast into jail unlawfully. She has become a venerable lady, when her days should be peaceful and happy, and we can see to it that for the rest of her life she shall have enough to eat, and need no longer fear that she may not have shelter. So I plead for the speedy exercise of the power to which I will now refer.

Here is the precedent. It will be remembered we are dealing with an agreement entered into orally between these two nations through their accredited agents. I now call the attention of the Senate to a case where the very power was asserted which I am summoning today to the aid of this citizen of the United States.

From the Spanish Treaty case of 1819 the following is quoted in Moore's International Law Digest (vol. 5, p. 188):

The treaty of February 22, 1819, which provided for the cession of the Floridas by Spain to the United States, and for the mutual adjustment of various claims, stipulated for the exchange of ratifications within 6 months.

The agreement now in question was expected to be ratified within 2 days.

Before the treaty was signed, Mr. Onis, the Spanish Minister, delivered to Mr. Adams, who was then Secretary of State, his full powers, which contained the following clause:

"Obliging ourselves, as we do hereby oblige ourselves and promise, on the faith and word of a King, to approve, ratify, and fulfill, and to cause to be inviolably observed and fulfilled, whatsoever may be stipulated and signed by you; to which intent and purpose, I grant you all authority and full power, in the most ample form, thereby as of right required."

With reference to this passage, Mr. Adams, after citing Vattel, book 2, chapter 12, section 156, and Martens' Summary, book 2, chapter 1, section 3, said: "The obligation of the King of Spain, therefore, in honor and in justice, to ratify the treaty signed by his Minister, is as perfect and unqualified as his royal promise in the full power."

I ask the Senate to notice this:

"And it gives to the United States the right, equally perfect, to compel the performance of that promise." * * *

"The President considers the treaty of 22d February last as obligatory upon the honor and good faith of Spain, not as a perfect treaty (ratification being an essential formality to that), but as a compact which Spain was bound to ratify; as an adjustment of the differences between the two nations, which the King of Spain, by his full power to his Minister, had solemnly promised to approve, ratify, and fulfill." * * *

Let me digress from the reading to comment that in the instant case the officers and representatives of Germany and of the United States who made the oral agreement had the previous authority of their respective governments to make that agreement—

"The King of Spain was bound to ratify the treaty; bound by the principles of the law of nations applicable to the case; and further bound by the solemn promise in the full power. He refusing to perform this promise and obligation, the United States have a perfect right to do what a court of chancery would do in a transaction of a similar character between individuals, namely, to compel the performance of the engagement as far as compulsion can accomplish it, and to indemnify themselves for all the damages and charges incident to the necessity of using compulsion." * * * (Moore, International Law Digest, vol. 5, pp. 188–190.)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I just came into the Chamber a short time ago. I wish the Senator would tell me from what he has been reading.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have been reading from pages 6 and 7 of Report No. 1300 of the Committee on Foreign Relations on Calendar No. 346, Senate bill 3097, for the relief of Katherine M. Drier.

Mr. President, I promised to offer my amendment, and now offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the word "pay", it is proposed to strike out "forthwith"; and on page 2, line 4, before the period insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That payment of such sum of $160,000 and interest thereon as herein provided shall be made as follows:

"(1) There shall be paid forthwith to the said Katherine M. Drier an amount which bears the same proportion to such sum and interest thereon as the amounts heretofore paid out of such special deposit account to claimants on whose behalf awards have been made by the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, bear to the total awards so made to such claimants; and

"(2) Payment of the balance of such sum and interest thereon shall be prorated on the basis of the amount of the respective payments authorized by section 2 (b) of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, and remaining unpaid."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in view of the letter from these lawyers, which was brought to me just as I took the floor, I want a quorum call at this time, so that no claim can be made by and by that this measure was rushed through or any advantage was taken. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bailey	Barkley	Bridges
Ashurst	Bankhead	Bilbo	Brown
Austin	Barbour	Bone	Bulow

Byrd	Guffey	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Byrnes	Gurney	McCarran	Sheppard
Capper	Harrison	McKellar	Shipstead
Caraway	Hatch	McNary	Smathers
Chandler	Hayden	Maloney	Smith
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Mead	Stewart
Connally	Hill	Miller	Taft
Danaher	Holman	Murray	Thomas, Idaho
Donahey	Holt	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Hughes	Nye	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Johnson, Calif.	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Frazier	Johnson, Colo.	Overton	Vandenberg
George	King	Pepper	Van Nuys
Gerry	La Follette	Pittman	Wagner
Gibson	Lee	Reed	Walsh
Gillette	Lodge	Russell	Wheeler
Glass	Lucas	Schwartz	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEMENT ON TELEVISION BY MANTON DAVIS ON BEHALF OF RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement on television, made on behalf of the Radio Corporation of America by Manton Davis, its vice president and general counsel, before the Federal Communications Commission on April 12, 1940.

In connection with the statement I desire to say that in response to a resolution submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce held a brief hearing on the question whether or not we would have an investigation of the actions of the Commission in regard to television. During the course of the hearing a dispute arose as to whether or not the radio sets which are being put out by the radio corporation could receive the various systems of television or only one particular system. I asked Mr. Sarnoff, when he was on the witness stand, if it would not settle the dispute, and if television could not go ahead, if the Radio Corporation of America would put out a receiving set which would be able to receive any one of the different so-called systems of television that were discussed. At that time he stated that it would cost something like $20 more to make such a receiver. When I questioned him as to whether, if the sets were turned out in mass production, they would not cost less than that, he said possibly that was the case.

Today, through its counsel, the Radio Corporation states, among other things:

The Radio Corporation of America does not believe that the adoption of such a suggestion would prove to be of advantage either from an engineering, economic, or public-service standpoint. Nevertheless, if the F. C. C. licenses transmitters to broadcast television programs to the public on standards in addition to those now in use, and will specify what such standards are to be, the Radio Corporation of America is prepared now to build television receivers so that they will also receive television programs from such transmitters.

I ask to have the entire statement inserted in the RECORD. It seems to me the matter ought to be worked out so that television can go ahead in this country.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT ON TELEVISION MADE ON BEHALF OF THE RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA BY MANTON DAVIS, ITS VICE PRESIDENT AND GENERAL COUNSEL, BEFORE THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ON APRIL 12, 1940

The engineers of the Radio Corporation of America subscribe to the majority opinion of the engineers of the radio and television industry that the transmission standards formulated by the Radio Manufacturers Association represent the best set of standards with which to start commercial television operation in the United States. The Radio Corporation of America is using these standards because it believes they incorporate the best features that have been developed in the major television laboratories of the United States, England, Germany, and the rest of the world.

After years of experimentation and practical operation, we believe that television products built under these standards are superior in performance. In our opinion they will give the public a larger measure of satisfaction than if built under any other standards that may be proposed in the present state of the art, within the 6-megacycle channel which the Federal Communications Commission has allocated for television operation.

During the course of the present hearings the suggestion has been made that television receivers be manufactured that would be able to receive from television transmitters operated under other standards as well as under those of the Radio Manufacturers Association.

The Radio Corporation of America does not believe that the adoption of such a suggestion would prove to be of advantage either from an engineering, economic, or public-service standpoint. Nevertheless, if the Federal Communications Commission licenses transmitters to broadcast television programs to the public on standards in addition to those now in use, and will specify what such standards are to be, the Radio Corporation of America is prepared now to build television receivers so that they will also receive television programs from such transmitters.

The Radio Corporation of America hopes that this offer will help the Commission to overcome the present deadlock which is retarding the progress of a new and promising industry and thus create employment for idle men and idle money, on a wide, competitive basis.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7079, Calendar No. 1377.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the title of the bill for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I was about to ask for an explanation of the measure; but I have no objection to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional circuit judges, as follows:

(a) One for the sixth circuit;

(b) One for the eighth circuit.

SEC. 2. The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, six additional district judges, as follows:

(a) One for each of the following districts: Southern district of California, district of New Jersey, western district of Oklahoma, eastern district of Pennsylvania;

(b) One for the southern district of New York;

(c) One who shall be a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the bill which has just been made the order of business is a bill creating certain additional judges of both the circuit and district courts. Last year the same identical measure was considered by the Senate at some length, and was passed. The bill went to the House last year; but, for some reason, this year the House of Representatives, without considering the Senate bill, took up its own bill and passed a different measure, although in substance they make the same provision.

The House bill came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee on the Judiciary struck from the House bill all after the enacting clause and inserted identically the same measure which the Senate considered and passed last summer. It is that bill which is now before the Senate.

I understand that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] desires to make a statement at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico stated a part of the truth. All he said was true, but he did not tell quite the whole story of the history of the bill.

The Senator from New Mexico is correct in stating that last year the Senate passed a bill which went to the House. What became of that bill, no one is certain. I made inquiry in the House of Representatives, and was told that the bill which we passed was still on the Speaker's table. Perhaps some of the former Members of the House know what that means. As I understand, it means that the House has no intention of considering it. Then the House passed a bill of its own.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. What the Senator states is not an unusual procedure in the House of Representatives. If it was the intention of the House to take the Senate bill from the table and substitute its own bill with an amendment, that was a proper procedure, and no doubt that was the intention, but it was overlooked, so that after the House passed its bill, and had overlooked taking the Senate bill from the table, it left the Senate bill on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I assure the Senator from Arkansas that I did not say it was an unusual procedure. I was merely reciting the history of the bill, and the information given me was that it was still on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MILLER. That is true, but that does not alter the case at all from the statement I made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to go through the history of the bill and the various steps; then I wish to discuss the increase in the number of judgeships, and the decline in the amount of litigation, and to present letters from judges stating additional judges are not needed, notwithstanding the fact that they are provided for in the bill. We have a letter, for instance, from a judge of the sixth circuit stating that an additional judge is not needed in that circuit. The distinguished Senator from New Mexico himself, in charge of the bill, moved to strike that provision from the bill, but it is still in the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Not now.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator referred to me, and I merely wanted to clarify what he stated, but that is all right.

Mr. REED. I shall be very happy to return to that subject, and yield to the Senator from New Mexico, but I prefer not to be interrupted just now.

After the bill, to which I have been referring, was placed on the Speaker's table, where it still reposes, a Member of the House introduced a bill, known as H. R. 7079, which was introduced on July 5, 1939, by Mr. WALTER. In that bill he included provision for a judge for the sixth circuit, and a judge for the eighth circuit, as did the Senate bill. Mr. WALTER also included in the bill which he introduced, provision for a district judge for the southern district of California, one for New Jersey, one for the western district of Washington, the latter of which is not in the bill before us, one for the western district of Oklahoma, one for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one for the southern district of New York, and a judge for Florida. But the Committee on the Judiciary of the House could not agree with him. The bill was reported with amendments and ordered to be printed. By that time the number of district judges provided in the bill had been reduced to five. There was no provision for an additional judge for Florida, or for Oklahoma, but there was provision for an additional judge for Georgia.

I can state only my understanding of what took place, that the committee did not report the bill with provision for an additional judge for Oklahoma because the member of the Committee on the Judiciary, from Oklahoma, originally did not think Oklahoma was entitled to or needed another judge. As the bill passed the House, it was amended so as to include provision for an additional judge for Oklahoma, and an additional judge for Georgia.

I now come to the pending bill. When the bill reached the Senate from the House, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary struck out everything after the enacting clause, and wrote its own bill, the identical bill which we passed last year. The difference between the bill passed by the House and the bill we are now considering is that the bill as passed by the House did not, if my memory serves me correctly, include provision for a judge for Florida, but did include provision for a judge for Georgia, and the Senate Judiciary Committee struck out the provision for a judge for Georgia, and included a provision for a judge for Florida and one for Oklahoma. I think the bill was amended on the floor of the House to include provision for a judge in Oklahoma.

Mr. President, this is a rather serious matter. I wish to read from the record showing the increase in the number of judges in the United States during the last 20 years. Under the Harding administration there were appointed 22 additional district judges and 1 additional circuit judge. Under the Coolidge administration there were appointed 20 additional district judges and 4 additional circuit judges. Under the Hoover administration there were appointed 14 additional district judges and 8 additional circuit judges. Under the Roosevelt administration to date there have been appointed 31 additional district judges and 9 additional circuit judges. During the period since March 4, 1921, 87 additional district judges and 22 additional circuit judges have been appointed; a total of 109 additional Federal judges of the 2 classes.

I ask that a statement embodying these figures be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Number of additional district and circuit judges appointed from Mar. 4, 1921, to date

	New positions
	District	Circuit	Total
Mar. 4, 1921, to Aug. 2, 1923 (Harding)	22	1	23
Aug. 3, 1923, to Mar. 3, 1929 (Coolidge)	20	4	24
Mar. 4, 1929, to Mar. 3, 1933 (Hoover)	14	8	22
Mar. 4, 1933, to date (Roosevelt)	31	9	40
Total	87	22	109

Authority: Department of Justice records.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I now present a statement showing the volume of litigation in Federal courts, and I interject at this point the statement that as the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary of the House have failed to make an accurate analysis of the situation in the various districts of the United States, within the last 2 weeks I have done so, with the assistance of the Department of Justice and the Administrator of the Supreme Court. The distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, will recall that last year we passed a bill creating a new position, that of Administrator of the Supreme Court. Am I not correct, I ask the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REED. I have consulted these two sources for all the information I am giving here today.

I now wish to read the salient points of a statement which has been prepared showing the volume of litigation between 1930 and 1940, and I ask to have it included in my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total number, criminal, United States civil, other civil, and bankruptcy cases, filed and concluded

	(1) 1930–35	(2) 1935–40	Percent (2) of (1)	1930–40
Total criminal cases:
Filed	368,293	175,770	0.4769	544,063
Concluded	389,879	175,987	.449	564,966
Total United States civil cases:
Filed	119,739	58,676	.490	178,415

Total all cases combined:
Filed		1,581,358
Concluded		1,626,985

1. This table indicates that the average number of criminal cases filed during 5-year period 1930–35, exceeded the number of cases filed 1935–40 by 192,523.
2. That taking 10-year period 1930–40, the courts decided 20,903 more criminal cases than were filed.
3. That the average number of United States civil cases filed during the years 1930–35 exceeded the number of cases filed 1935–40 by 61,064.
4. That taking the 10-year period 1930–40, the courts decided 10,709 more United States civil cases than were filed.
5. That the average number of other civil cases filed during 5-year period from 1930–35 exceeded the number of cases filed 1935–40 by 9,748.
6. That taking the 10-year period 1930–40, the court decided 11,233 more civil cases than were filed during the same period.
7. That the average number of bankruptcy cases filed during the 5-year period 1930–35 exceeded the number of bankruptcy cases filed 1935–40 by 23,808 cases.
8. That the average number of bankruptcy cases decided 1930–35 was 12,050 less than decided 1935–40.
9. That the total combined cases filed 1930–35 exceeded the total combined cases filed 1935–40 by 287,142.
10. That taking the 10-year period 1930–40, there were 2,782 more bankruptcy cases decided than were filed over the same period.
11. That the total combined cases decided between the years 1930–40 exceeded the number filed during the same period by 45,627.

Conclusion: With litigation decreasing, with the number of pending cases decreasing, why increase judges?

Authority: Department of Justice records.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if we divide the last 10 years into two periods, the first running from 1930 to 1934, inclusive, and the second from 1935 to 1939, inclusive, we find a situation which is remarkable in that, in the light of the facts now available, after Congress has authorized, and the President has appointed, in the last 20 years 109 additional Federal judges, we have a markedly and sharply declining business for these judges to handle. These figures also come from the Department of Justice.

In the first 5-year period there were 368,293 criminal cases filed. In the latter half of that 10-year period there were 175,770 criminal cases filed. In other words, the cases of that class filed in the last 5 years amount to only forty-seven and a fraction percent of the number of cases filed in the previous 5 years.

I wish to be perfectly frank with respect to this matter. We all know that during the period of national prohibition there were a great many more criminal cases in the Federal courts than had been the case previously or has been the case since. Therefore I do not want the Senate to accept that statement as a correct index of the business of the courts.

I am now going on to the other classes of cases which furnish a correct index. In the first half of this 10-year period there were filed what are known as United States civil cases—those are cases in which the United States is a party—to the number of 119,739, and in the last 5 years, 58,576. In other words, 49 percent as many cases of that class were filed in the last 5-year period as there were in the 5-year period immediately preceding.

We now come to the class of cases that are entirely between citizens, "Other Civil Cases." In the first 5 years of that period there were 126,845 such cases filed. In the last 5-year period there were 117,097 such cases filed. The last 5-year period shows ninety-two and a fraction percent as much litigation of that kind as was had in the previous 5-year term. But I beg Senators to remember that this administration alone appointed 31 district and 9 circuit judges, in addition to those already on the bench, to handle a lessened volume of litigation.

Mr. President, I wish to inject here a general statement which I shall later prove by figures which have been laboriously gathered from the Department of Justice. I say "laboriously" without any criticism of the Department of Justice, which has been very courteous and very helpful to us, and prepared tables for us, and gathered together the facts concerning the litigation. Nothing that I now say or will say later is to be taken as a reflection upon the cooperation of the Department of Justice. It might be considered a reflection on the Judiciary Committee of this body for failing to go to the bottom of the facts. What I have to say I say without feeling and without rancor, but as a fact.

Mr. President, I make the general statement that there is not a single district for which an additional judge is provided in this bill whose docket is not in better shape, with fewer cases, and in most instances more judges, than has been the case for 10 years.

On the 30th of last June, the last fiscal year for which data are available, the docket of every district included in this bill was in the best shape it had been in for 10 years.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield for a question. I hope the Senator will confine himself to that.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not want to transgress on the time of the Senator, and I would not do so if it were not necessary for me to leave shortly to take a train. I shall occupy only a moment, but I do want to take sharp issue with the Senator in his analysis of the docket situation, certainly so far as the State of New Jersey is concerned.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BARBOUR. If the Senator——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I yielded only for a question. I had prepared and printed at my own expense, a table——

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator did not let me conclude what I was going to say.

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator's pardon. I yielded for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield further?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator from Kansas believe his information is better and more correct than that of his Republican colleague the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] on the question of whether or not New Jersey needs another judge?

Mr. REED. If the Senator from New Jersey please, I think it takes a great deal of gall to come here and ask for an additional judge——

Mr. SMATHERS. Will the Senator——

Mr. REED. Just a moment.

Mr. SMATHERS. Will the Senator answer my question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. REED. I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator declines to answer the question?

Mr. REED. I am answering it. I am going to answer it. I say it takes a lot of nerve to come here and ask for an additional judge for a district in which a vacancy existed for 18 months due to the inability of the senior Senator from New Jersey and Boss Frank Hague, of Jersey City, to agree upon who should be judge.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. REED. I hope it is a little more sensible than the first one, but I will yield for a question now.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator from Kansas agree with me that it also takes a lot of nerve for a Senator to come out of the wheatfields of Kansas into the State of New Jersey and, contrary to the opinion of his Republican colleague from that State [Mr. BARBOUR], contend that that State does not need another judge?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas is a Senator of the United States, and hopes that includes New Jersey.

Mr. President, I prepared a table of nine pages that covers all the districts about which I am going to speak. But before I get to that, I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, and I call attention to the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Schwartz
Ashurst	Downey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Austin	Ellender	Lee	Sheppard
Bailey	Frazier	Lodge	Shipstead
Bankhead	George	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gerry	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gibson	McCarran	Stewart
Bilbo	Gillette	McKellar	Taft
Bone	Glass	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Bridges	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Harrison	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hatch	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hayden	Nye	Wagner
Capper	Herring	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Caraway	Hill	Overton	Wheeler
Chandler	Holman	Pepper	Wiley
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pittman
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Reed
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 7, beginning with the word "two", it is proposed to strike out through line 10, and to insert in lieu thereof "an additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kansas that his amendment is not in order at present. There is an amendment pending, offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer my amendment as an amendment to the amendment. As a matter of fact, the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico was a substitute for the whole House bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment I offered was on another occasion, when we attempted to obtain consideration of the bill. I had forgotten it. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico is withdrawn. Therefore the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas is in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not blame the Senator from New Mexico for withdrawing his amendment.

The effect of my amendment would be to permit the eighth circuit to have an additional circuit judge, but to eliminate the judge provided in the bill for the sixth circuit.

I wish to read from the judicial conference report, which I hold in my hand. In 1938 the judicial conference recommended an additional circuit judge for the sixth circuit. We passed a bill along about July of last year. In September the judicial conference again met, after the bill had passed the Senate. I wish to read from the report of the judicial conference, September session, 1939.

The judicial conference is composed of the Chief Justice of the United States and the senior circuit judges, if they are able to attend. Two of them are so old that usually they do not attend but send someone else. I ask the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] whether or not that is a correct statement.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REED. This is the comment of the judicial conference, found on page 6 of the report:

> We are able to report, as heretofore, that in general the circuit courts of appeals are up with their work. We called attention last year to the accumulation of cases in the sixth circuit. Progress has been made in the disposition of these cases, and the conference believes that with the present force of circuit judges the circuit court of appeals will be able in the near future to make its docket fairly current.

The report continues with a recommendation for an additional judge in the eighth circuit, and then says:

> No other recommendations for additional circuit judges are made at this time.

I do not blame the Senator from New Mexico, who enjoys an excellent reputation. As I told him last year, I am only trying, in my feeble way, to do with the judiciary what he has already done with politics and political patronage.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a statement regarding the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. I am always delighted to yield to my friend, the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I think it is due to the Senator from New Mexico that I make this statement. I am sure he has not the slightest interest in the creation of any judgeships. Certainly he has no personal or political interest whatever in the matter. In fact, it would be impossible to find on the Judiciary Committee a man more judicial and critical in his examination. It so happens that in the roll of the dice of destiny the chairman of the Judiciary Committee named the Senator from New Mexico to have charge of this particular bill. He was chairman of the subcommittee which had charge of the bill providing for the creation of additional judgeships.

I repeat that, in my judgment, the Senator from New Mexico has no personal interest in this matter. What he has done, he has done from a sense of duty. It is an onerous duty, and I am very grateful to the Senator from New Mexico for relieving the chairman of that duty. The duty fell upon the Senator from New Mexico, and he has discharged it with remarkable zeal and fidelity. I am grateful to him for the work he did on the bill.

I thank the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I join the Senator from Arizona in expressing confidence in the Senator from New Mexico. I can fully appreciate the fact that the distinguished Senator from Arizona is very glad to have somebody else help him apologize for the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Only very briefly.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it would hardly be polite for me to listen to all these gracious words said about me without acknowledging my appreciation and thanks to both the distinguished Senators.

The work which I did on the committee was not very heavy work. It was divided among other Senators on the Judiciary Committee, each Senator taking a district or a circuit, and, not relying on figures found in the Department of Justice, but going out into the circuits, to the dockets of the district courts and the circuit courts, and conferring with the circuit judges, the district judges, the prosecuting attorneys, the lawyers, and, in some cases, the litigants. On the basis of that kind of an investigation and analysis, the recommendations were made.

So far as my own work is concerned, I had the seventh circuit. I went out and inspected the situation, made the kind of investigation I have just described, came back to my committee, and reported that an additional judge was not needed. The committee eliminated the additional judge, and that item remains out of the bill. Other Senators on the committee made the same kind of examinations.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator from New Mexico takes his seat, may I inquire whether or not the circuit court authorities in the seventh circuit told him that an additional judge was needed?

Mr. HATCH. Opinion was divided. When I went to Chicago, I found a division. Some of the judges thought an additional judge was needed, and some did not think so. I talked with others; and, having done so, I came to the conclusion that an additional judge was not really needed. I said to the judges, "I shall go back and report that an additional judge is not needed in this circuit. I might be mistaken in my conclusions. You have a great amount of business here. There will be another session of Congress next year"—which is this session. I did not then dream that this bill would now be under consideration. I said: "If we are wrong in the decision we make, and you really need another judge, I am sure the Congress will grant it; but let us be sure about it."

The other day, to be sure I had not made a mistake in Chicago, before the bill came up I telegraphed to Judge Evan A. Evans, the senior judge of that circuit, and asked him again if circumstances had changed. He replied that they had not. If they had changed, I expected to offer an amendment to include an additional judge for that circuit. Conditions have not changed, and the additional judgeship is not in the bill.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. Only for a question. The last time I had the floor on this bill, last year, the distinguished majority leader scolded me a little for being too generous in yielding. I do not want to be too generous in yielding.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to yield to him in a moment, but not now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will be generous enough to permit me to make a brief statement. I have an engagement. I shall not require more than a minute.

Mr. REED. May I hold my watch on the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am sure it would be safe, no matter who held it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. REED. Let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that I do not think there is any probability that this question will be disposed of today. The Senate will probably take a recess until Monday. Let me ask the Senator from Kentucky whether or not that is the plan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is my hope that we may dispose of this bill and go over until Monday.

Mr. REED. I assure the majority leader that he is entertaining hopes which have no foundation. The bill will not be disposed of today.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator realizes that "hope springs eternal in the human breast."

Mr. REED. I sympathize with the majority leader in the heavy burdens he carries. I do not wish to add to them. I merely wish to tell him the truth, that this subject will be thoroughly ventilated. It is now 3 o'clock——

Mr. BARKLEY. Are we to understand that the Senator is filibustering against this bill?

Mr. REED. We shall see. I have enough facts to enable me to talk for 3 or 4 hours; and they are entitled to be heard. The people of the United States are entitled to know that the courts are being packed with unnecessary and useless judges in the face of all the evidence that can be accumulated.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. REED. I will yield for a moment, but I suggest to my good friend from New Jersey that he had better go home and come back on Monday and make his statement.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, under the circumstances, and in view of the frame of mind exhibited by my genial friend from Kansas, I realize that I am at a disadvantage and have not the opportunity to say anything. For that reason I will not attempt to encroach on the Senator's time.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. President, I wish to read from what the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] said on this bill when he was on the floor on March 25 of this year, if you please. He called it up by unanimous consent. His remarks are to be found on pages 3345 and 3346 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I read now merely a sentence from the statement of the Senator from New Mexico in which he told the Senate that an additional judge in the sixth circuit was not necessary. He closed the first part of his remarks with this statement:

> I ask that on page 2, line 9, the provision for an additional judge in the sixth circuit be stricken out.

That is precisely what the amendment I have sent to the desk calls for.

Mr. President, I have read so far from the report of the judicial conference and also a statement of the senior Senator from New Mexico, in which I hope the senior Senator from Arizona, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, concurs, but I want to go further than that and go directly.

I hold in my hand a letter written by the Hon. Charles C. Simons, who is judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. The letter reads:

> Chambers of the Court, Cincinnati, Ohio, April 5, 1940.

This letter is addressed to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] because the Senator from Michigan is in that circuit, and was passed to me. The letter of Judge Simons reads:

> The judges of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals have advised Senator BARKLEY and Senator ASHURST, through Judge Hicks, our senior circuit judge, that the progress the court has been making with the docket during the last year has obviated any need for a sixth judgeship. The causes that led to the accumulation of work 2 or 3 years ago are not likely to reappear.
>
> Very sincerely yours,
> CHARLES C. SIMONS.

I did not happen to be present when the senior Senator from New Mexico, in charge of the bill, got it up on the 25th of March. If I had been he would not have gotten it up by unanimous consent, but he did get it up, and the only reason he did not have it passed perhaps was because the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader, objected. The sixth circuit happens to be the circuit in which he resides, as well as the distinguished presiding officer of the Senate at this time, the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. So I am going to try on this first amendment to the bill to find out whether the Chief Justice of the United States and the judicial conference, the senior Senator from New Mexico in charge of the bill, and all the judges of the circuit have as much influence in the Senate in keeping an additional judge from being appointed as the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky has in getting one appointed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no interest or knowledge concerning who may be appointed if the additional judge is provided by this bill. As I stated at the time the Senator from New Mexico brought this measure up, the Senate had nearly a year ago passed a bill including a new judge for the sixth circuit, and it did so after the Judiciary Committee had sent two of its own members, who, as I recall, were the late Senator Logan and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], out there to investigate the matter. They came back and both reported in favor of the proposal. My information is that even when the docket was at its worst the distinguished judge who has written the letter which has been read objected to an additional judge in the circuit. The House had passed the bill after making its own investigation.

Of course the mere fact that I happen to live in the sixth circuit is a coincidence. When the Senator from New Mexico based, as I understand, purely on the letter that Judge Simons had written to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], suggested that that judgeship be eliminated, that was the first notice I had, after both Houses had passed this bill and included such a judge, that any motion of that sort was to be made. I objected on the ground that certainly we had the right to know why at the last minute, when both Houses had included this judgship, it should be eliminated.

The Senator from New Mexico did not make his suggestion because I happened to be majority leader, but because, living in the circuit, I might have some information in respect to the condition of the docket there, and I think I have.

Mr. REED. Nobody familiar with Kentucky and the fact that the majority leader lives in Kentucky and with the past history of Kentucky would have any possible doubt that the majority leader, the senior Senator from Kentucky, would have an interest in a matter of that kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the Senator is making a desperate effort to be funny, without success.

Mr. REED. I never have as much luck as does the senior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may not be funny to himself, but he is excruciatingly laughable to many other people.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I was not present when the Senator read my remarks from the RECORD, and I assume that he pointed out that I merely asked for that change in order that the matter might go to conference and that an investigation might be made. That was the purpose. I did not want to pass an opinion on it with what information I had.

Mr. REED. Perhaps that was the Senator's purpose but this was his language:

> I ask that on page 2, in line 9, the provision for an additional judge in the sixth circuit be stricken out.

Mr. HATCH. Did the Senator read all the language——

Mr. REED. There is considerable language preceding and also following that statement.

Mr. HATCH. In which I stated that I wanted the amendment to go to conference so that we could investigate the situation.

Mr. REED. I think that is correct. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Arizona whether or not he received a letter such as Judge Simons referred to as coming from Judge Hicks?

Mr. ASHURST. I distinctly recall receiving a letter from a circuit judge—I am not sure it was Judge Hicks—opposing an additional judge in the sixth circuit, which letter I laid before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary for their information; and it is now in their files.

Mr. REED. I am sure the distinguished Senator from Arizona—and being merely a humble layman and modest minority Senator I have a very difficult time in matching these eminent lawyers, among the most eminent being the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator's modesty is comparable to that of a shrinking violet.

Mr. REED. Something like that, I should say.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to have any information the Senator can give.

Mr. REED. Well, this letter is dated April 5.

Mr. ASHURST. This year?

Mr. REED. This year; and it reads as follows:

> The judges of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals have advised Senator Barkley and Senator Ashurst, through Judge Hicks, our senior circuit judge, that the progress this court has been making with the docket during the last year has obviated any need for a sixth judgeship. The causes that led to the accumulation of work 2 or 3 years ago are not likely to reappear.

May I ask the Senator from Arizona if he has recollection of such a letter?

Mr. ASHURST. My judgment is that the files of our committee show such a communication was received and laid before the committee.

Mr. REED. It was received?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; but, with about 600 letters a day coming before the committee, I would not state positively it was received. My judgment is that it was. I will put it in this way: I am quite certain that there is before our committee some communication from the judge mentioned opposing an additional judge in that circuit. That, I think, is true.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator desire to see this letter? I will be very happy to pass it over to him.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. This is a letter to Senator VANDENBERG.

Mr. REED. I said so when I read it.

Mr. ASHURST. I will read the letter. It is as follows:

> The judges of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals have advised Senator Barkley and Senator Ashurst, through Judge Hicks, our senior circuit judge, that the progress this court has been making with the docket during the last year has obviated any need for a sixth judgeship. The causes that led to the accumulation of work 2 or 3 years ago are not likely to reappear.

Now, what is the question of the Senator?

Mr. REED. In his letter Judge Simons refers to the Senator from Arizona; and I asked the Senator from Arizona if he had received such a letter from Judge Hicks.

Mr. ASHURST. My best judgment at this time—and memory is quite fallible when one receives hundreds of letters a day—is that such a letter was received and laid before the committee. That is my answer.

Mr. REED. And yet that was after the bill was reported and was on the floor here; and but for this information coming to a Member of the Senate—information recently brought to the attention of the chairman of the committee and the majority leader—we would have had no indication from the committee of any change in the situation in the sixth circuit.

Mr. ASHURST. We might choose entirely to disregard the opinion of that distinguished judge. Not having changed our minds, what should we do except to consider the letter? Should we send a copy of the letter to the Senator? The files are open to him and to every other person who wishes to explore them. The Senator may have a key to the room of the Judiciary Committee and see all the correspondence which has taken place in the past 20 years, if he so desires.

Mr. REED. But was the distinguished Senator from Arizona here a moment ago when I called attention to the fact that the Senator in charge of the bill offered an amendment to strike out this particular judgeship?

Mr. ASHURST. I was here when the able Senator referred to that matter; yes.

Mr. REED. Why does the Senator suppose he did that?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want to give the Senator a flippant answer, because he is a distinguished and a worthy man. I do not know what processes control the mental operations of other persons; least of all do I know what processes control my own mental operations.

Mr. REED. I myself have sometimes been in doubt about that.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let me say this, with the Senator's kind permission: The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] described our proceedings. We sent Senators into the field. The chairman did not go. They sat in the courtrooms. They consulted the judges, the clerks, the district attorneys. We did not want to depend alone on the records of the Department of Justice. The late Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Logan, was for some years a member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. He was a very conscientious and able man. He was named to make the investigation of the sixth circuit. He made two trips into the sixth circuit. He visited with the judges, so far as I know, and he returned with his report. The Senate acted upon the report. The Senate approved Senator Logan's report, and about 9 or 10 months ago passed the bill with provision in it for this judge. It may be that the situation now has changed, because, frankly, I have not explored the records for the past 10 months; but I think the Senate was abundantly justified in acting upon Senator Logan's recommendation.

Senator Logan has gone to another tribunal. He has gone where, beyond these voices, there is peace; and I but express the wish of every Senator here when I say, may the sod rest lightly on his bosom. He was a gallant gentleman; he was a good lawyer; and, while I do not want to disclose secrets, I urged his nomination as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think he would have made an excellent Justice of that Court; and if he made any mistake in recommending an additional judge for the sixth circuit, that fact has never been brought to our attention. I would much rather take the view of the distinguished late Senator from Kentucky, who was an impeccable gentleman, than the judgment of the judge who has been quoted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is the Senator from Arizona familiar with the fact that while the judicial conference, headed by the Chief Justice, recommended an additional judge for the sixth circuit in 1938, they rescinded that recommendation at their meeting in September 1939?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct. I do not hold it against them that they changed their minds. That is no criticism of the judicial conference. The situation may have changed.

Mr. REED. And the judges of that circuit are now writing to the Senate Judiciary Committee to the effect that the additional judge is not necessary.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, what is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 7, beginning with the word "two", it is proposed to strike out through line 10 and insert in lieu thereof:

An additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Russell
Ashurst	Ellender	La Follette	Schwartz
Austin	Frazier	Lee	Schwellenbach
Bailey	George	Lodge	Sheppard

Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Wiley
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was of the opinion that the Senator surrendered the floor.

Mr. REED. I called the attention of the Presiding Officer to the absence of a quorum. I did not yield the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under the rules a Senator calling for a quorum in his own time yields the floor; but if the Senator desires to occupy the floor longer, I have no desire to interfere. The Senator asked for the yeas and nays, and then made the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was of the opinion that the Senator from Kansas yielded the floor. However, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Let me say to the senior Senator from Kentucky that I will not take more than a couple of minutes. For the benefit of the Senators who have just come into the Chamber, I wish to state the question raised by the amendment, after which the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky may have the floor for as long as he desires.

The vote is about to be taken on an amendment which I offered, which is identical with the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] on March 25 to a similar bill, the Senator from New Mexico being in charge of the bill. In 1938 the judicial conference recommended an additional judge for the sixth circuit. We passed a bill last year providing for such a judge. In September last year, 1939, after we passed the bill, the judicial conference reversed itself, and, upon additional information, found that the additional judge was not necessary. On the 25th of March, during the consideration of this very bill, the Senator from New Mexico moved to strike out the provision for this judge. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary thinks that since that time he received a letter on this subject, but at least the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] did receive a letter from one of the circuit judges saying that the circuit judges of the sixth circuit had advised the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], through the senior circuit judge, that an additional circuit judge in the sixth circuit was not necessary. That is the whole question.

I yield now to the Senator from Kentucky, if he desires to speak.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to go into the technicalities of this situation. We all know that the Committee on the Judiciary is a careful committee, which does not bring in proposals for legislation increasing the number of judgeships through whim or caprice. It made its own investigation by sending members of its own committee to the various parts of the country, to make their own investigation, and report back to the Committee on the Judiciary with respect to the need for additional judges, and as a result of that the committee reported a bill providing for two additional circuit judges—one in the sixth circuit and one in the eighth circuit—and four or five additional district judges.

The bill went to the House, and if the ordinary procedure, which was probably contemplated, as the Senator from Arkansas pointed out a while ago, had been followed and the Senate bill had been passed instead of the House passing its own bill, this question would have been settled, there would not have been any controversy about the matter. But for some reason, a matter of oversight, the Senator from Arkansas explains, and I have no doubt that is the fact, instead of passing the Senate bill the House passed its own bill—a measure almost identical with the one the Senate had passed, except that I think they added one more judgeship, but that judgeship is not in controversy, either in connection with the Senate bill or the House bill. That was about 3 weeks ago. The House bill came to the Senate and went to the Committee on the Judiciary, and was reported to the Senate containing provision for an additional judge for the sixth circuit.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I have not followed the matter closely. Is there any question as to the accuracy of the information given to the Senate by the Senator from Kansas that the judges of that circuit stated that an additional judge was not needed? Is that agreed to by them?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am coming to that now. In a colloquy a while ago I said that Judge Simons, according to my information, had never agreed that an additional judge was needed in the sixth circuit. When the docket was at its worst he was still opposed to a new judge being appointed in that circuit. Notwithstanding that opposition the judicial conference recommended an additional judge. The member of the Senate Judiciary Committee who went out and made an investigation recommended an additional judge. Both the House and Senate committees have recommended an additional judge. Only the other day, since this matter came from the House and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] sought to bring it up by unanimous consent, based upon a letter received by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] from Judge Simons, the Senator from New Mexico suggested that the additional judge for the sixth circuit be eliminated in order that the matter could go to conference and the conferees work it out.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Senator mentioned the various agencies of the Government which have recommended an additional judge in the sixth circuit. I call his attention to the Attorney General's report dated January 3, 1940, made after he had had ample time to read and digest the report of the judicial conference submitted in 1938, when it in effect recommended two additional judges in the sixth circuit, and again in 1939 when it withdrew that recommendation, one additional judge having been appointed; nevertheless the Attorney General stated in his report to the Congress that the additional judge in the sixth circuit was needed, and made that recommendation.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was the report for the year 1939, made to the Congress at the beginning of this session.

Mr. BROWN. It is dated January 3, 1940. I should like to read a part of that report, as follows:

> It is manifest that no function can ever be expeditiously and efficiently performed without sufficient personnel. This obvious fact is as true of judicial business as it is of other fields of activity. In recognition of this need the Congress during the past few years has properly provided for additions to the judicial personnel.

Then he reports the findings of the judicial conference held on September 29, 1938, which recommended a permanent increase in the judicial position of one judge for the sixth circuit. He then says:

> Legislation to effectuate these recommendations has been approved by me. A bill (S. 2185) embodying most of them passed the Senate.

He comments on the fact that a similar bill had passed the House, both of them providing for the additional judge in the sixth circuit.

I am familiar with the sixth circuit, I think more so than is the Senator from Kansas. I am a member of that bar. It happens that, because of some litigation which came to me before I became a Member of the Senate, I was in that court in October of 1938. We had an important case, and it was necessary for us to petition the court to advance hearing months before the time when we could possibly have the case heard. I would say that the docket was not in current condition for litigants from the very busy district which this circuit covers.

The Senate knows that this circuit includes the very busy districts in the State of Michigan, where there is probably more patent litigation than in any other circuit of the United States, and patent litigation, as Senators know, is most complicated, takes a great deal of time, and occupies practically all the time of one of the five judges in the eastern district of Michigan.

I am not familiar with the situation in Tennessee and Kentucky, but I know that much patent litigation exists in Ohio, where there is an extensive automotive industry in Cleveland and in Dayton. It has placed an unusual burden on the appellate court in the sixth circuit.

The Senator from Kentucky says that Judge Simons has always been opposed to any additional judge in the sixth circuit, notwithstanding the fact that the judicial conference found that there was need for two additional judges in that circuit. He was opposed to it then. He wrote me a letter similar to that which he wrote the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I do not agree with what he wrote.

I think it is our duty, guided by the Attorney General, and guided by our Judiciary Committee, and the House guided by its Judiciary Committee, to determine this question for ourselves.

I do not happen to know Judge Simons personally, although he is from my State of Michigan, and is an excellent judge, but from my own knowledge of the situation, from my knowledge as to the findings of the late Senator Logan, of Kentucky, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], I believe the Senate ought to decide this question for itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan for his very valuable contribution. I wish to say——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at present. I wish to complete my statement.

There is no doubt there has been an improvement in the condition of the docket in that circuit. It would have been almost a discredit to the court if there had been no improvement, because the docket was in a deplorable condition. But, in spite of that improvement, there are some judges whose desks are piled high with cases submitted to them which have not been heard. In order to improve the condition of that docket, as I happen to know, because I live in that circuit, some of those judges, if not all of them, worked all last year day and night, without vacation, in order that they might improve the condition of that docket.

The question for the Senate to determine is not whether Judge Simons or the Senator from Kansas objects to an additional circuit judge in the sixth circuit, but whether, in order to keep the docket reasonably current, we shall require these judges or any other judges to work all the year, day and night, without a day's vacation. I do not think we ought to require them to do that.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator yield to me again at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I have Judge Simons' letter of March 18, in which he indicates that with five judges working some progress had been made; and he says this:

> I am confident that in no case that really needs to be heard promptly that it will fail to find a place upon our docket.

My idea is that every case upon that docket needs to be heard promptly. The litigants want to get their litigation out of the way. He goes on to say:

> By next winter—
>
> A year from the present time—
> we will be in good shape.

It seems to me, in view of the fact that the judges are still behind, and that even with an additional circuit judge they have not yet been able to clean up their dockets, that they ought to welcome an addition to the bench.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, of course, it is also not a question of whether a case is going to be placed on the docket, but when it is going to be tried after it gets on the docket. It is an easy matter to get a case on the docket. It is a different matter to get to it and try it.

I hope this amendment will be defeated. I believe the additional judge is needed, and I believe that the litigants who have cases and matters of sufficient importance to justify them in going to this court ought to be given at least as much consideration as some judge who, for some reason of his own, however sincere he may be, may conclude that he does not want another judge on the bench on which he serves.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very sorry that a humble layman has to inform a distinguished lawyer, such as the junior Senator from Michigan, concerning things in his own circuit about which he spoke. I wish to correct two misstatements. I grant that they may have been, and are, unintentional, but nevertheless they are incorrect. That is a better term to use.

The judicial conference has never recommended two judges for the sixth circuit, as stated by the Senator from Michigan. I hold in my hand the report of the judicial conference in 1937, and on page 5 the conference recommends as follows:

> The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit is not able, with the present number of judges, to hear all of the cases as promptly as they should, and an additional circuit judge is necessary.

The judicial conference repeated that statement on page 7 of its report in 1938; and it recommended one additional judge, not two, as stated by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield for a question. I am reading from the report of the judicial conference.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator if it does not appear on page 20 of the Annual Report of the Attorney General for 1938 that the statement from the judicial conference is as follows:

> The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has a large accumulation of cases, and it is apparent that in order to secure the prompt disposition of its work an additional judge will be needed even after the existing vacancy is filled.

If the Senator can add, one and one make two. The vacancy was not filled. We had created an additional judgeship, and before the vacancy was filled the judicial conference said, "We need another judge."

Mr. REED. The Senator from Michigan certainly does not mean to say that because a vacancy existed the judicial conference would recommend two judges, including the one to fill the vacancy. The judicial conference was talking about the number of additional judges that were necessary.

Let me go forward with the 1938 report, in which an additional judge was recommended for the sixth circuit. In 1938 the judicial conference, from whose report I am reading, recommended only one additional circuit judge, and that was for the eighth circuit. On page 6, it said:

> No other recommendations for additional circuit judges are made at this time.

It is unfair so to state facts as to give a wrong impression. An attempt is being made to lay the whole burden upon Judge Simons. It is true that Judge Simons wrote to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], but for the information of the Senator from South Carolina, who asked the question—and a very fair question—I will state that Judge Simons, who is a judge of the sixth circuit, writing from his chambers in Cincinnati, said:

> The judges of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals have advised Senator Barkley and Senator Ashurst, through Judge Hicks, our senior circuit judge, that the progress this court has been making with the docket during the last year has obviated the necessity for a sixth judge.

The distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has a recollection of receiving a letter of that kind. It is wholly unfair to say that this is the act of a single circuit judge, when all he does is to advise one Senator that all the judges, speaking through their senior circuit judge, have communicated certain views to other Senators.

I agree with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. On the 25th of March he offered an amendment to do this very thing, so that the matter could go to conference. The only way to get it to conference is to adopt my amendment.

Mr. President, I am through.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] will not be agreed to. I should not detain the Senate, except for the fact that my predecessor in this body, after a careful investigation on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, recommended that an additional judge be provided in the sixth circuit.

I now have the honor to be a member of the Committee on the Judiciary; and notwithstanding the fact that some of the judges indicated their desire not to have an additional judge, others indicated their desire for an additional judge because they thought it was necessary.

I speak on behalf of the litigants and lawyers in that circuit—the litigants whose cases are behind, and who do not have an opportunity to have their matters adjudicated, and the lawyers who have to attend those courts and wait to be called, at great expense and loss of time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. REED. All I wish to do is to call the Senator's attention to the report of the judicial conference to this effect:

> Progress has been made in the disposition of these cases, and the conference believes that with the present force of circuit judges the circuit court of appeals will be able in the near future to make its dockets fairly current.

Mr. President, I have no desire to break into the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky. The late distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Senator Logan, was a friend of mine, and a very fine gentleman. I wish I had the eloquence to pay him such a tribute as was paid him by the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. As I understand, Senator Logan made his investigation about 2 years ago. Is that correct?

Mr. ASHURST. It was in the early part of 1939.

Mr. REED. After the Congress of 1938 had adjourned the various members of the committee went out to investigate conditions. Is not that correct?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. The investigation made by Senator Logan was in the early part of 1939.

Mr. REED. That was nearly 2 years ago. In the meantime, according to all the evidence, every bit of congestion has been cleared up.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Kansas, I have the feeling that the investigation was made not quite a year ago instead of 2 years ago.

Senator Logan lived in the circuit, as I do; and in his time he was a practicing lawyer in the courts of that circuit, and was familiar with conditions. If a judge were asked for in Kansas, I should not feel able to say to the distinguished Senator from Kansas and his people that the litigants and lawyers in that circuit are not entitled to an additional judge in order to clear the docket. When judges reach that high and rare atmosphere they are not inclined readily to admit that other lawyers who are not so fortunate, and have not had an opportunity to be called "judge," are entitled to consideration. However, I speak on behalf of the lawyers and litigants of that circuit.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. There have been times within the past 2 years when the judges have said that two additional judges are needed. They now say they do not need two, but they do say they need one. In his report the Attorney General of the United States says they need one.

The distinguished Senator who preceded me in the Senate is now appearing before the Judge Who guides the destinies of all men; and he appears in good grace, because he was of good conduct when he lived here among us. As I occupy his place, I feel that I should carry on for him the work which he started and which he could not finish. I think the Senate might well heed the words of my disinguished predecessor, the words of the Attorney General of the United States, and the words of the House and Senate Judiciary Committees. The committee did receive the letters which have been referred to, but in the minds of the committee the letters were not sufficient to change the combined judgment of the membership of the committee.

Mr. President, I respectfully ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Reed
Ashurst	Ellender	La Follette	Russell
Austin	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz
Bailey	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Sheppard
Barkley	Gibson	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bilbo	Gillette	McCarran	Smathers
Bone	Glass	McKellar	Smith
Bridges	Guffey	McNary	Stewart
Brown	Gurney	Maloney	Taft
Bulow	Harrison	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Byrd	Hatch	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Hayden	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Herring	Norris	Tydings
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Vandenberg
Chandler	Holman	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Overton	Wagner
Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Walsh
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Wheeler
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having responded to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] in the Chamber at the moment. I happen to know that he wanted to offer an amendment which it would be proper to offer at this time. He wanted to offer the amendment on behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. The Senator from Missouri has been very much interested in the provision of this bill as it relates to the eighth circuit.

Mr. GILLETTE entered the Chamber.

Mr. HATCH. I note that the Senator from Iowa has entered the Chamber, and I am sure he would prefer to offer the amendment himself. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that the amendment as to the eighth circuit would now be in order.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has presented an amendment which is on the desk. Because of his necessary absence from the Senate Chamber and from the city, he asked me to call it up at this time. If the amendment has not been reported from the desk I ask that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment heretofore offered by the Senator from Missouri will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 2, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "One" and in lieu thereof insert "Two."

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I merely wish to call to the attention of the Senate a statement made by the Senator from Missouri just before he left the city on last Monday. If the Senate will bear with me, I will read a portion of the statement which he made on the floor of the Senate.

Referring to the fact that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] had, on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, made a special investigation with reference to the need of additional judges in the eighth circuit and that the Senator from Nebraska had reported to the committee that there was need for one additional judge, the Senator from Missouri said:

Mr. President, the position of the Senator who investigated the matter of the eighth circuit was entirely justified at that time, because at the time of his investigation the eighth circuit had three retired circuit judges who had never retired from the active performance of their duty. Although technically retired circuit judges, they performed as arduous and as efficient duties as they had when they were active judges. The three were Judge Faris, of Missouri; Judge Van Valkenburgh, of Missouri; and Judge Booth, of Minnesota.

Since the time of that investigation Judge Faris has died, Judge Booth has become totally incapacitated, and Judge Van Valkenburgh has become less able to perform the service which he had performed before his retirement.

Therefore the situation has completely changed, and I think that any investigation will disclose the fact that two judges in that circuit are imperatively needed now, as was recommended by the judicial council 2 years ago.

I may add that, as, of course, is known to the committee and to the Senate, that the bill as passed by the House provides for two additional judges in the eighth circuit.

In view of the change in the situation to which the Senator from Missouri referred, and at his request, I present the matter, and hope that his amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I have some information about this matter——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield for that purpose?

Mr. HATCH. I do not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico declines to yield for that purpose.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I merely wish to refer to something as to conditions in the eighth circuit which has come to me and which I think the Senate should have. It is quite true, as the Senator from Iowa has said, that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] did go into the eighth district to investigate conditions there and came back last year and reported that only one judge was needed. For that reason the Senate bill included only one judge for the eighth circuit. The House bill includes two additional judges for that circuit.

Early this year, since the last regular session of the judicial conference, a special session was held, and I read now from the report of the judicial conference, dated January 31, 1940, by Charles E. Hughes, Chief Justice of the United States. I quote from the report:

At the session of the judicial conference in September 1938 the conference noted that the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit had been able to keep abreast of its work only through the aid of retired judges, and recommended provision for two additional circuit judges for that circuit. At the session in September 1939 the conference decided to recommend but one additional judge. On a review, however, of the situation in that circuit, the conference at its present session thought it desirable to renew its original recommendation that two additional circuit judges be provided.

In addition to that report, which was called to my attention only recently, Mr. President, I have a letter from Judge Stone, presiding judge of the eighth circuit, written on the 25th day of last month. I shall not read the letter, as it is quite lengthy, but I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the letter of Judge Stone and also a typed statement of his setting forth the exact conditions in the eighth circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter and statement are as follows:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT, KANSAS CITY, MO., March 25, 1940.

HON. CARL A. HATCH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: I understand that the Senate has made an amendment to House bill 7079, providing for additional circuit and district judges, by striking out the bill after the enacting clause and substituting the Senate bill. My interest in this legislation is confined to the provisions in the two bills relating to circuit judges for the eighth circuit.

I have been on this court for more than 23 years, and I have been the senior judge for about half of that time. Before the division of this circuit, by the creation of the tenth circuit in 1929, the administration of the circuit was not a difficult matter, although we used district judges freely. The problem of men doing any kind of work effectively gets down to the amount of work and the manpower to do it properly. In the old eighth circuit this was not difficult since there was a surplus of manpower because, during that period, there were five relatively light districts where the judges therein could be used in other districts or upon the court of appeals. The division of the circuit left us only one light district and, therefore, a decided decrease in relative manpower, and at the same time the bulk of the work remained in the States forming the present eighth circuit. This situation created decided difficulties in administering the present circuit so as to keep the 10 districts and the circuit court effective.

Since the present circuit was formed there has never been a time when the five regular circuit judges could do the work of the court. Frequently district judges were called to sit upon the court because the circuit judges were not able to carry the load. There was one period, of about 2 years, when we used no district judges on the court because the five regular judges had the help of three retired circuit judges. One of those retired judges has died; another has not served for a year, and is totally incapacitated. Lately, the third judge has been able to give us only a very small amount of aid because his physical condition is such that he does not desire to sit away from Kansas City, his home, and because he wishes to lighten his work. This loss of help from retired judges has again necessitated the liberal use of district judges on the court. Thus it is quite evident that the five regular circuit judges have never been able to carry the load and cannot do it.

Unless the Congress sees fit to give the court additional help, we will be forced to continue the liberal use of district judges. Such use should not be made for two reasons: First, because cases decided by the circuit court of appeals should be determined only by circuit judges. About 90 percent of the cases decided by a court of appeals are final, and there is no way of reviewing them except through the discretionary writ of certiorari from the Supreme Court. Second, because every district judge in this circuit already has all he should be asked to do, and it is not right to put this additional burden upon them. Where district judges have to write opinions in the court of appeals, they must delay either their district work or the preparation of the opinions.

To give this circuit only one additional circuit judge will not meet the situation but only lessen the evils which at present exist. Even with one additional judge and the help we are now getting from Judge Van Valkenburgh (retired and almost 78 years old) I am convinced we will have to use district judges. When Judge Van Valkenburgh ceases work, we will have to use them somewhat more. As a further aggravation, the judge of the only relatively light district in the circuit has not been in good health for more than a year and can give little or no aid either on the circuit court or in helping out in other districts.

I am writing to you because I know you have given considerable thought and study to this matter of additional judges. I wish I had the opportunity of talking with you about this matter, so that I might try to meet any doubts you may have or answer any questions you might care to ask. Since I do not have this opportunity of having our minds meet, I am venturing to write you and to enclose an outline statement of the situation in this circuit, which I hope you may have time to consider. I trust that my thorough interest in this matter and my deep conviction that two judges are needed may excuse my troubling you at this length or at all.

With high respect and good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

KIMBROUGH L. STONE.

STATEMENT BY JUDGE KIMBROUGH STONE, SENIOR CIRCUIT JUDGE, EIGHTH CIRCUIT

The necessity for two additional circuit judges in the Eighth Circuit arises from three coacting influences which are (I) increase of work, (II) decrease in number of judges to do the increased work, and (III) method of doing work.

I. INCREASE OF WORK

The increase of work is caused both (a) by increase in number of cases and (b) by increased difficulty in character of cases.

Effects of number of cases and character of cases on judicial work

While the number of cases in a court has a direct bearing upon the work of the court, because each case must be separately examined and determined, yet the character of the cases is even more important. The difference between the effect of the number of cases and the effect of the character of cases arises from the time and the effort required to examine a particular case. If a case presents issues on points of law frequently before the court and has a comparatively small record, it will not require great and extended effort and time to read the record and to decide the issues. If a case presents new, unusual, or difficult law issues or has a long record, it requires, naturally, more effort and time to determine it. Where a case presents both new, unusual, or difficult law issues and also has a long record, the effort and time are, of course, still greater. Therefore, one difficult case or one having a long record, or one having both difficult issues and a long record, may require more effort and time than a dozen of the relatively lighter kind.

Let me illustrate the relative importance of number and of character of cases. All experienced appellate Federal judges know that it is the rare criminal case which requires much effort or time. This is so because the same kind of issues are presented in criminal appeals again and again (therefore the applicable law is familiar and fresh in the judges' minds) and the records are very rarely long. On the other hand, many civil cases present novel issues of law and many have long records.

Next, let us apply the above considerations of number and character of cases to the actual situation in this circuit.

(A) Increase in Number of Cases

The increase in number of cases for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, was about 8 percent above the average for the preceding 14 years. It was almost 14 percent above the number filed the preceding year. The increase in number of cases for the fiscal year 1939 over the year 1938 was over 7½ percent. There is every reasonable assurance that the number of cases in future years will increase—certainly there is no hope for a sustained decrease.

(B) Increase in Difficulty of Cases

The character of civil cases coming before a Federal court of appeals depends upon many factors. One of these factors is the kind of social conditions and businesses in the particular circuit. For example, the second circuit (except for Vermont, being the seaboard States of New York and Connecticut) will have a considerable number of admiralty cases which can be rather easily disposed of because the law is settled and the records not exceedingly long. On the other hand, the eighth circuit is located in the middle of the country with both large rural areas and also with large cities therein. This results in a wide diversity of kinds of civil cases coming on appeal in this circuit. This diversity is convincingly shown by the fact that, in 1938, over 47 percent of the cases filed in this court were not susceptible of classification under the rather detailed table of classes (15 classes) devised by the Department of Justice—this large percentage of cases had to be placed in the catch-all class called Miscellaneous. In 1939, the miscellaneous cases were almost 48 percent of the total cases—there being 17 classes.

(a) Effect of legislation: Another factor is recent legislation by Congress. Whenever Congress enacts a statute affecting many people in their mode of life or business the natural result is an increase in litigation. First there come attacks upon the validity of the act. If the act is sustained by the Supreme Court, there follows an extended period of tests as to the proper construction of and as to the application of the act. In the past few years Congress has enacted a more than usual number of such statutes, which are noticeably increasing the work of the court of appeals or of the judges therein. Examples of these are the creation of various administrative boards, the Chandler Bankruptcy Act, the new rules governing trials in district courts (authorized by Congress), and the act requiring three judges (one of whom must be a circuit judge) in all district court cases attacking the validity of an act of Congress.

Administrative boards: The acts creating the various administrative boards require direct reviews or enforcement of board orders to be brought direct in the proper circuit court of appeals. The action of these new administrative agencies is in new legal fields where there is little or no precedent and, therefore, where a very considerable burden is placed upon the courts of appeals in trying to construe and apply these new laws so as to carry out the intention of Congress.

In addition to this, the records in these review proceedings are nearly always very large. Rarely are they as little as 1,000 pages (except in reviews coming from the Board of Tax Appeals). I have on my desk now one such record of more than 4,000 pages. I am informed that two such reviews have been recently filed in this court wherein the records will exceed 20,000 pages in each case.

In most of these cases one point always urged is the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and order of the board or commission. Such an issue can be determined only by a careful reading of the entire record.

Last year 20 percent of the total cases filed in this court were reviews of administrative boards or commissions.

Chandler Bankruptcy Act: This new act (approved June 22, 1938, effective September 22, 1938) makes numerous changes in the Bankruptcy Act as theretofore existing. There can be no question but that these changes will result in much litigation extending over years until these changed provisions have received judicial interpretation.

In addition to this, the Chandler Act makes one change which is already being reflected in increasing litigation in the courts of appeals. Before the Chandler Act, appeals in bankruptcy matters were allowable by the district courts as of right only in certain described instances (secs. 24 and 25 of the act, secs. 47 and 48, U. S. C. A., title 11). In all other instances, allowance of such appeals was within the discretion of the courts of appeals and many appeals were denied. The Chandler Act gives appeals as of right except in the limited class of cases where the amount involved is $500 or less. Obviously, the number of appeals is being and will be increased.

New rules: The broad sweeping scope of these rules is stated (rule 1) as governing the procedure in the district courts "in all suits of a civil nature" with certain exceptions set out in rule 81. They make drastic changes in very many phases of procedure from the commencement of an action through to an appeal and also as to some phases of appellate procedure. Any experienced lawyer knows that there will be hundreds of appeals involving construction of these rules. Such result has followed the introduction of every code in a State. This effect is being felt already and will continue for many years—resulting in a definite increase of the number of appeals and of the work in the courts of appeals.

Three-judge cases: The act of August 24, 1937 (50 Stat. 752, U. S. C. A., title 28, sec. 280a), requires three judges—at least one of whom must be a circuit judge—to sit in all injunction cases involving constitutionality of acts of Congress. Cases under this act are not numerous but they are highly important and usually involve extended hearings for taking evidence. Each such case takes at least one circuit judge away from his regular appellate court duties—usually for some time—thus interfering with his disposition of appellate business.

(b) Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins (304 U. S. 64): This decision (April 25, 1938) has decidedly increased the work of the courts of appeals in circuits having several States; this circuit has seven States. Theretofore, many appeals involved applications of the so-called general law (defined by Mr. Justice Story in Swift v. Tyson (16 Pet. 1, in 1842)). In the nearly 100 years between the Swift case and the Erie case, this general law as to many recurring situations had been fairly well defined and, therefore, was not especially difficult of statement or application. Of course, no matter in what State an appeal might arise, the rule was the same. The Erie case has reversed all of that. The general law has, at least as to substantive law, disappeared. Now, the same issue (formerly subject to general law and governed by one rule) may come up in seven cases—one from each of the seven States in this circuit—and, instead of the easy statement and application of one rule to all, we must examine the law separately as to each case so as to ascertain and apply the law of the particular State from which the case came. Thus, until the entire field formerly covered by this general law is settled, the work on this character of appeals may be multiplied seven times, because we have seven States in this circuit. It is certain that our work of this kind will be affected every year for a number of years.

(c) Generally: In outlining the above particular matters which increase the work of the court of appeals of this circuit, I have not tried to mention every such consideration but only such as are rather outstanding. There are others. One of these only will be mentioned. While the number of appeals increases, the number of criminal appeals decreases. As said hereinbefore, criminal cases are, as a class, less difficult of examination and determination. Last year, fiscal year 1939, the criminal appeals in this circuit were less than one-third of the average for the preceding 4 years. Criminal appeals have tended to fall off since the criminal appeal rules were put in force by the Supreme Court in 1934. Those rules have much discouraged criminal appeals which were frivolous or for delay. The situation is that the less meritorious—and therefore easily disposed of—criminal appeals are disappearing while the total number of all kinds of appeals and reviews is increasing. The result is that a hundred appeals today require decidedly more time and effort than the same number did a few years ago.

The actual result is that the work of this court has materially increased in the last few years.

II. DECREASE IN JUDGES

In the past few years this court has been able to keep up with this additional work only because of the fortunate circumstance that we had additional temporary help. This help came through the valuable assistance of three experienced and able retired circuit judges. Judge Wilbur F. Booth retired on January 1, 1932; Judge Arba S. Van Valkenburgh, on May 1, 1933; Judge Charles B. Faris, on December 1, 1935.

We have now lost most of this assistance. Judge Faris died December 19, 1938. Judge Booth has not sat since September 1938 and will certainly not sit again because of defective hearing and other serious physical ailments—he will be 79 years old next August. Only Judge Van Valkenburgh remains. He does an excellent quality of work but sits only from one-third to one-half as much as a single active judge. How much longer he will want to help is problematical, as he will be 78 years old next August and is not in the best of physical health.

III. METHOD OF DOING WORK

(a) Choice of method: Wherever a court is made up of more than one judge and where more than one must sit in every case, there is a choice of method which affects both the rights of the litigants and speed of the work, and therefore the number of cases which can be disposed of within any given period of time. This choice is between doing the work properly or doing it quickly.

The same judges can turn out much more work if they want to sacrifice good, thorough work to speed. Some courts do just this thing. For example, there are courts of three or more judges where, at the adjournment of court for the day, the judges talk over for an hour or more the three to six cases heard that day. They reach a decision in each case, and the cases are assigned for opinions. Each judge then writes the opinions assigned to him. By the time these opinions get to the other judges (who have been busy writing the other opinions assigned to them) these other judges have more or less hazy remembrance of the cases they do not write. If an opinion reads well, they concur without more consideration. Such a method results, in essence, in a one-man decision. By this method more cases are disposed of, but the litigants have not had their rights because they have really not had the mature, careful consideration of each of the judges who sat. Thus the substantial rights of all of the litigants have been sacrificed for the sole end of speed.

Our method of work: The act of Congress creating the circuit courts of appeals provides that each of such courts "shall consist of three judges" (U. S. C. A., title 28, sec. 212). This court has always construed this language to mean that Congress would not have required three judges unless it intended that litigants should have the careful consideration and determination of each one of the three judges and that the judgment of the court should be the result of the real work of three men.

Our entire method is designed solely to get the careful consideration of each judge and therethrough to have every judgment of this court represent the best thought which three men—not just the thought of the one judge who might write the opinion—can bring to bear. To secure this result—sought by Congress—we have evolved the following method.

Our unit of work is our week during which the same three judges usually sit. (1) At the end of each day there is an informal discussion of the cases heard that day. This discussion has two purposes: first, to ascertain if the decision in any case is so clear that it needs no further consideration (this rarely occurs); and, second, to fix the oral argument in our minds. (2) Next, each judge independently investigates each case—reading the record and briefs—and prepares his written memorandum thereon. (3) When all three judges have prepared such memoranda, a conference is held. At this conference, memoranda are read and there is a full discussion as to how each case shall be decided, and as to the grounds for each decision. (4) The cases are then, for the first time, assigned for opinions—usually such assignments are made to the judge who seems to have the best and clearest grasp of a particular case (as shown by his memorandum and discussion during conference).

The above method absolutely secures the independent thought and investigation of each judge. These memoranda are usually quite complete and frequently are extended discussions of every point in the case necessary to be decided (I have one now on my desk of 24 typewritten pages of legal cap paper). Thus when the three judges gather for conference, each is thoroughly informed and prepared on each case and, therefore, can discuss it intelligently. The result is that every decision is the product of three minds which have investigated separately, and therefore discussed together every point presented by counsel. Through years of experience, this is the best method we have been able to develop to put into the decision the informed judgment of every judge who sat—a result intended by Congress and, therefore, one to which the litigants are entitled.

Clearly, this method involves an enormous amount of work. We could reduce our work by two-thirds if only the one judge who wrote the opinion made this thorough investigation. Also, opinions could be gotten out faster and more cases disposed of if we did not do the work this way. But such gain in dispatch of business would be at the sacrifice of good work. When Congress required three judges, it did not intend that two of them should be mere "yes men" and figureheads.

We have regarded it as our first and great duty to be as near right as possible. This is the basis of our method.

IV. NEED FOR TWO ADDITIONAL JUDGES

The net result of all of the above is that the court of appeals of this circuit has, for the past few years, had more work than the five active judges alone could possibly have done; that this work has been kept up to date only because of the help of the three retired circuit judges, and, later, by use of district judges. The help from retired circuit judges has now, in large part, finally ceased. Either the docket must fall behind, district judges must be used, or the court must have additional circuit judges to help do the work. The necessary manpower can come only from one of two sources: By use of district judges on the court or by additional circuit judges.

Use of district judges: There has been substantial objection by the bar to having the determination of appeals participated in by trial judges. This is not the place to discuss the advantages or disadvantages of such practice but I merely call attention to this attitude of the bar as an existing fact.

A more important thing is the practical situation in the circuit. That situation is that the district judges in this circuit have all they can do to look after the work in their own district courts, and some of them are overburdened. To place upon them the further work of service on the court of appeals is, obviously, unfair to them and to the litigants in their courts. While it may be better to have some districts fall behind rather than to have the court of appeals fall behind, yet this is but a choice between two evils, neither of which should be permitted and both of which can be avoided by the simple expedient of increasing the manpower of the court of appeals itself.

I have been a member of this court of appeals for more than 23 years and the senior judge for almost half of that time. During that period I think I have gained experience which is useful in estimating the situation of the appeal litigation in the circuit and in gaging the man force necessary to take proper care of that litigation. All of the present judges work hard and intelligently. They cannot do more than they are doing. I am certain that the court needs these two additional judges. I hope the Congress will see its way to provide them during this session, so that the work will not fall behind or the district courts be badly affected; either result is bound to affect litigants harmfully.

I will be happy to aid in any way in further understanding our problems.

Mr. HATCH. I will say that, in substance, rather than take the time to read the letter, Judge Stone very earnestly requests Congress to provide for two additional judges. From my personal acquaintance with Judge Stone and personal conversations I have had with him and the things he has told me personally and also in the letter as to the conditions in the district, I have no hesitancy in saying that, in my opinion, the eighth circuit does need two additional judges, and that the amendment should be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], in behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The amendment was agreed to.

PROHIBITION OF BALLOT-STUFFING AND OTHER EVIL POLITICAL PRACTICES IN NATIONAL ELECTIONS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, during the past 4 years much has been written, and more said, about pernicious political activities. Yet in the Halls of Congress I do not recall that one word has been spoken about the most pernicious practices of all. I refer to such vicious practices as falsifying the count, padding the registration lists, the use of repeaters, stuffing the ballot boxes, and sundry other devices which have been used by dishonest persons in various parts of the country to decide elections according to their desires.

On the eve of a Presidential election, the time is most opportune to bring these practices to the attention of Congress and the people.

In my humble opinion, more elections have been stolen by the election crooks than have ever been decided as a result of pernicious political activities on the part of petty State and Federal employees. We have acted on one through the so-called Hatch Act and Hatch Act amendments; so let us act on another.

The election irregularities, which might better be termed crimes, that have grown up in the United States are no new or recent phenomena, but they seem to be growing worse.

Mr. President, political thugs and election crooks must go in the United States. The people are already on the trail of these despoilers of liberty, and the days of the big bosses are limited. But, the people need help in the way of Federal legislation making these insidious practices felonies punishable by substantial sentences in prison.

I could spend several hours detailing the activities of the political thieves in various parts of the country, but this would be a review of that which is now too well known for comment here.

However, I shall digress briefly in my remarks to show you how things were handled in Kansas City, Mo.

According to the census of 1930, the population of Kansas City was 399,746. In 1936, the registration books of the city contained the names of 263,934 registrants. In fact, in the second ward of Kansas City, although the census shows that there were only 23,028 inhabitants in the ward, the registration books showed that there were 23,324 eligible voters in the same ward; and when the Pendergast machine needed this vote it certainly was cast.

In the summer of 1936 the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee of St. Louis and Missouri, in a State-wide drive against corruption in that State, published 600,000 copies of a newspaper containing photographs of two spots in Kansas City that are highly illuminating of the practices followed there. One photograph was of a vacant lot at 700 Main Street, Kansas City, from which 112 persons were registered, and the other of a residence at 912 Tracey Street, from which 141 persons were registered.

In St. Louis, immediately after the registrations for the August primary of 1936, the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee entered the picture, and exposed one of the most corrupt conditions in the entire Nation. As a result of the activities of the citizens' group and the St. Louis newspapers, headed by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Governor of the State was forced to discharge his bipartisan board of election commissioners. The Governor appointed a new board; and inside of 10 days a recheck of the registration books revealed the fact that the lists had been scandalously padded, and 46,393 of the ghost voters could not be found at their alleged residences.

The job done in Kansas City, Mo., where the leadership was taken by the civic-minded citizens and by newspapers like the Kansas City Star, and the job done in St. Louis by the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, deserve the commendation of all citizens, as well as the courageous attitude of the Federal judges in Missouri, and the able prosecution work of District Attorney Milligan.

I have just cited these as examples. I could very well tell you stories that have occurred in the machine-boss-controlled city of Chicago, where in the last election the Nash-Kelly machine once more ran rampant over decent citizenship. I could take you to New Jersey, to the Hague-controlled machine of Jersey City, for some more pernicious operations of the bosses, and also to the famous Crump system in Memphis, Tenn.

Oh, what a New Deal party we have today!

Oh, what great liberals we have—Hague, Kelly, Nash, Crump, Pendergast!

In order that the American people may have some control over this situation, I am introducing a bill which will give voters everywhere protection when their ballots are cast in any election for the office of President and Vice President and Members of the Senate and House. I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 3764) to prohibit ballot stuffing and other evil political practices in national elections was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any general or special election at which votes are cast for candidates for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession, any judge or clerk of any such election, or any other person, who willfully and knowingly receives and places in any ballot box, or aids, assists, or assents to the placing in any ballot box, any ballot, or paper purporting to be a ballot, which is not legally voted by a qualified voter at such election, or who illegally, willfully, and fraudulently abstracts, or aids in or assents to the abstraction, from any ballot box any legal ballot, or who in any manner willfully influences or attempts to influence any person to do any of the aforesaid acts, or to omit to do any lawful act required of him in relation to such general or special election, or who in any manner illegally, willfully, and fraudulently changes at attempts to change, or induces any other person to change or attempt to change, the true and lawful result of the election, by any act to be done, either before, at the time of, or after such election, by a wrong count of the ballot, by changing the true returns, or making a false return thereof, or by changing the figures of the returns after they are made up, either before or after they are duly made, in any other manner except in pursuance of law or the order of a court, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 2. In any such general or special election any person who may be authorized by law to receive, canvass, or count the poll books, tally lists, or election returns in any voting precinct or district authorized by law who willfully and knowingly receives, canvasses, or counts, or assists therein, any poll books, tally lists, or election returns which are fraudulent, forged, or counterfeited, or who falsely and fraudulently makes an incorrect and false account of an election return pertaining to the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of either House of Congress, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession, with intent to defeat a fair expression of the popular will, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 3. In any such general or special election, any person who votes more than once, either at the same or different place, or who knowingly casts more than one ballot, or who votes at such election knowing that he is not a qualified voter and is not entitled to vote, and any person who knowingly advises or procures any illegal vote to be cast at any such election, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 4. In any such general or special election in which balloting is by voting machines or a combination of voting machines and paper ballots the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act shall apply in the same manner and with the same force and effect as where the balloting is exclusively by paper ballots.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have in my hand copies of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and of the Missouri Nonpartisan News, with marked articles, which I ask to have printed as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles are as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of July 22, 1936]

WHOLESALE FRAUDS FOUND IN PRIMARY REGISTRATION IN CITY—GROSS PADDING IN REVISED AND CORRECTED LIST FOR AUGUST VOTE—56 ON BOOKS AS LIVING IN LONG-VACANT HOUSE; 154 OF 160 WHO GAVE HOTEL AS ADDRESS NOT RESIDENTS AND NOT KNOWN THERE—DEAD MEN'S NAMES ARE STILL ENROLLED—CHECK-UP IN SEVERAL WARDS FAILS TO FIND HUNDREDS OF PERSONS AT THE FACTORIES, LOFTS, AND FLOPHOUSES ENTERED AS THEIR ADDRESSES

Evidence of wholesale fraud in registration of city voters for the congressional, State, and local primary of August 4 has been found in the voting list of several wards by Paul O. Peters, director of the citizens' nonpartisan committee, and has been verified by the Post-Dispatch.

Peters' investigation grew out of his committee's fight against the Jefferson memorial river-front improvement for which a bond issue was voted at a special election recently, and which election the committee contended was carried by fraud.

RECORD REGISTRATION—394,774

The registration, 394,774, the final corrected result of the June 18 enrollment, is the largest ever recorded here. Checking by Post-Dispatch reporters which thus far has extended only to the fourth, fifth, and sixth wards, has not indicated the total volume of the fraud, but has shown the use of registration-padding methods like those which made a mockery of the ballot in St. Louis in the days of Butler's Indians a generation ago.

As it happens State Senator Mike Kinney, Democratic boss of the fifth ward, is in for the fight of his political career in the primary. Jimmy Miller, boss of the fourth ward, has declared war on Kinney and has brought out William Warren Burke as a candidate against him for the senatorial nomination.

VACANT STOREROOMS AND LOFTS

Vacant storerooms and lofts have been peopled with scores of imaginary voters in the wards mentioned, all of whose names have been placed on precinct lists, ready for "repeaters" to vote in the primary.

From No. 7 Market Street, in the fifth ward, first precinct, a two-story building unoccupied for a year past, and with no bed or other article of furniture in either the upstairs or the downstairs room, 56 names of supposed voters are registered, on the official list, printed since the June revision.

From 410 North Levee, in the fifth ward, second precinct, a two-story building with a saloon on the first floor, 137 names are registered on the "revised and corrected" list. A Post-Dispatch reporter who inspected the premises saw 10 cots on the second floor. There are also small buildings attached to No. 410, on the south, which might house not more than 20 persons.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FOUR NOT KNOWN AT ATLANTIC HOTEL

From the Atlantic Hotel, northeast corner of Fifteenth and Pine Streets, 160 voters are registered. A Post-Dispatch reporter took the list of voters registered from this hotel to Joseph H. Stuever, assistant manager, who said that only 6 of those registered resided at the hotel. The others were not known to him. This hotel is in the fourth precinct of Kinney's ward. A year ago, in the river-front memorial bond issue election, only 4 voters were registered from the Atlantic Hotel, but at that time Kinney was not running for reelection to the State senate.

STRIKING EXAMPLE IN SIXTH WARD

A striking example in the sixth ward, where John J. Moroney is the Democratic city committeeman, is at 8 South Second Street. Unoccupied for the past 5 months, according to the rental agents and the neighbors, 48 names are enrolled from there on the "revised and corrected" primary roll.

At other places where a few persons actually live, numbers are registered which it would be impossible to house in the places. These lists, in every case, have been approved by the precinct clerks of election, whose duty it is to make a canvass after the registration and report names of persons not found living at the places from which they are registered. When names are so reported, the election board must summon the persons to appear and prove their residence, otherwise their names are struck off the list.

TOM KEARNEY STILL REGISTERED

One way to pad registration is to add fictitious names to the rolls. Another way, equally effective, is to leave on the rolls names which were once rightfully there, but which should be struck off because of death or removal. There are indications that this method has figured in the padding of the St. Louis rolls.

Tom Kearney, widely known betting commissioner, died February 24. He had been registered from his handbook and cigar shop, 416 North Twelfth Street. The precinct clerks of election, in their canvass in June, should have learned of his death and should have reported it to the election board, which should have removed his name from the roll.

But the name of Thomas M. Kearney is still on the voting list at the Twelfth Street address.

A living person whose name is now on the books twice, through no fault of her own, is Mrs. Dora Dunkmann, 2219A Montgomery Street. Her name is registered from her present address in the eighteenth ward, tenth precinct, and from her former address, 1406 Dodier Street, in the third ward, tenth precinct. The June revision failed to remove her name, though she moved more than a year ago.

NOT MUCH RISK IN "REPEATING"

The election "repeaters" who vote the fictitious names at the primary will be violating the penal statutes, but they are not likely to consider themselves in any great danger. When the grand jury attempted to investigate charges of fraud in the 1934 primary, and sought to obtain the ballot boxes of two fourth-ward precincts, lawyers went to the State supreme court, applied for a writ of prohibition and obtained a temporary order which after 18 months, has not yet been dissolved. The court has given no indication as to when it intends to act on the case.

The present registration, largest on record, is more by 6,297 than that for the 1932 Presidential election. Heretofore, the number of registered voters has been largest at the Presidential election, and has declined thereafter, as supplementary registrations for local and off-year elections are held, until the next Presidential registration.

But in the registration of June 18, so many new names were added—97,564—and the excess of these additions over those struck from the rolls in the following canvass was so large, that there was a net addition of 45,642 to the number of voters. The 1932 Presidential enrollment was 388,477, the record up to that time, but now raised, at an intermediate registration, to 394,774.

MASS MEETING TOMORROW NIGHT

A mass meeting for the discussion of the registration frauds has been called for 7:30 o'clock tomorrow night, at Central Library, by the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee. Peters, director of the committee, said today to a Post-Dispatch reporter that he would invite candidates for the Democratic and Republican nominations for Governor, and members of the board of election commissioners, to attend. The election board is responsible for supervision of the registration.

The members of the election board, all appointed by Governor Park, are: Chairman, James A. Waechter, Democrat; secretary, Charles L. Moore, Republican; Joseph W. Hannauer, Democrat; and Stephen M. Wagner, Republican. The law requires appointment of members of both parties.

HEAVY PADDING

The precinct registration lists used in the bond issue election have been revised, not downward as is usually the case, but extensively padded, in the preprimary registration of last month. Comparison shows many houses are being credited with a larger content of voters than they had then.

The fourth ward, dominated by Justice of the Peace Jimmy Miller, gave a remarkably full and almost unanimous vote for the bonds in the most of its precincts. As told in the Post-Dispatch at the time, Governor Park induced William L. Igoe, president of the police board, and Miller to come out at the eleventh hour for the bonds, in spite of their hostility to Mayor Dickmann.

REGISTRATION OF PAST YEARS

The registration for Presidential elections, and for the primaries before such elections, since woman suffrage went into effect in 1920, has been:

For election, 1920	315,018
For primary, 1924	259,789
For election, 1924	303,150
For primary, 1928	267,125
For election, 1928	362,215
For primary, 1932	321,429
For election, 1932	388,477
For primary, 1936	394,774

The present registration is void after the primary, and the lists for the Presidential election, which will remain as basic for the next 4-year period, will be made up in a 4-day precinct registration, September 21–24; but if those who brought about the padding of the recent registration "get away with it," at the primary, nothing would be likely to prevent them from repeating the padding in the September registration for the November election.

HOW IT COULD BE DONE AGAIN

It would then be necessary for "repeaters," with lists of names, to go from precinct to precinct and register under different names. It would also be necessary, in the clerks' canvass after the registration, that someone vouch for all the names at each address, or that the clerks, failing to find any trace of the registrants, should still leave the names unquestioned on the lists.

With the names once on the lists, it is a routine election-day task for leaders to herd groups of repeaters from polling place to polling place, giving each a new name at each place, having them change coats and hats in transit, to confuse any who may thereafter try to identify them.

These tactics were common in the nineties and the early days of the present century, when the Democratic State administration used the police, election, and excise departments in the effort to control the city of St. Louis, which was normally Republican. The practices were carried so far that they disfranchised not only the Republicans but many Democrats not allied with the ruling faction of the party. The Folk boodle prosecutions and the election of Joseph W. Folk as Governor, called a halt on these practices, and in the succession of Democratic and Republican administrations which followed Folk, down to the present decade, there were only minor irregularities in registration and elections.

In recent years, with the growth of the Pendergast machine in Kansas City, and the success of its methods in running registrations and elections, the St. Louis politicians have seen a short cut to power, and the example of Jimmy Miller, in "voting 'em like a machine," has attracted attention.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of July 23, 1936]

SHUFFLING OF ELECTION JUDGES AIDED FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION IN FIFTH WARD—"SEE SENATOR KINNEY," ONE OF THEM WAILS WHEN QUESTIONED—MOVED FROM PRECINCT WHERE THEY KNEW THE PEOPLE TO STRANGE ONE WHERE 392 NEW NAMES WENT ON BOOKS, HALF FROM ONE ADDRESS—CLERK TELLS OF PERFUNCTORY CHECK—"THOSE WERE HOT DAYS," HE SAYS, BUT HE INQUIRED AT ATLANTIC HOTEL AND MUST HAVE BEEN TOLD THAT THE OFFICIAL LIST WAS ALL RIGHT

The Post-Dispatch is able today to indicate clearly how one of the biggest single cases in the wholesale fraudulent registration which the paper began exposing yesterday was worked. The story, told by election judges of what went on in the barber shop at 1423 Franklin Avenue last June 18, when 392 names were added to the poll books during 13 hours—nearly half of them from a single address—would be laughable if it were not for the corrupt character of that part of the transaction.

Briefly, the story is that at least two of the four election judges had been shifted to that polling place (fourth precinct, fifth ward), a precinct strange to them, and this shifting had been done by the board of election commissioners at the request of State Senator Michael Kinney, who is Democratic committeeman for the ward, and Fred Weissmann, the Republican committeeman.

There, while they were supposedly on watch against false registration, the names of phantom voters, 154 of them listed as residents of the Atlantic Hotel, Fifteenth and Pine Streets, were added to the poll books.

Ordinarily election judges are assigned to neighborhoods in which they are familiar, so that at least one of their number can identify through acquaintance anyone who appears to register or vote.

SEE SENATOR KINNEY

One of the judges, Leonard Bernstein, a clerk in the office of License Collector Fred A. Renick at city hall, when asked by a Post-Dispatch reporter how it happened that he was assigned on that registration day to a precinct where he knew none of the voters, responded:

"Oh, see Senator Kinney about that."

"What does he know about it? "

"I don't know," was Bernstein's answer, his manner indicating distress, "but go see him."

It was learned that Bernstein owed his city-hall job, his appointment to the $6-a-day job as election judge, and his assignment to the particular precinct in which he served last June 18 to Senator Kinney.

The election commissioner's record of Bernstein's appointment as an election judge in August 1932 bears the notation "Golden-Kinney." John Golden is Senator Kinney's handy man and proxy on the Democratic city committee. Tom J. Gannon, Democratic clerk for the election commissioners, in charge of Democratic precinct officials, told a Post-Dispatch reporter Bernstein and Robert F. Myers, the other Democratic election judge at the precinct where the Atlantic's phantoms registered, were chosen by Kinney. Myers lives at the St. Francis Hotel, 604 Chestnut Street, which is the voting address of Kinney and 177 other registered voters.

The election commissioners' clerk in charge of Republican precinct officials, Ross Halleck, likewise said it was the practice for committeemen of his party to choose the precinct officials and dictate their assignments. Weissmann's choices for the fourth precinct of his ward were Anton Becker, 722 Chestnut Street, and Frank Woznick, 914 North Eighteenth Street.

Becker was a temporary appointee. He had served last year in the registration preceding the bond-issue election at another precinct of the fifth ward, but never before at the fourth precinct.

Kinney needs reinforcements to aid in the political battle of his life in the primary election August 4, when he will seek renomination for the senate seat he has held since 1912.

Jimmy Miller, fourth ward Democratic boss, is out for Kinney's scalp, and has put forth as his candidate State Representative William Warren Burke. Fifteen of the precincts in the thirty-first senatorial district, which Kinney represents, are in the fourth ward, which Miller controls and, as he says himself, "votes like a machine."

WE DONT CHALLENGE ANYBODY

Bernstein was not concerned about his inability as an election judge to recognize any of those who registered at his precinct.

"We don't notice those things," he told the reporter. "We just follow the regulations, and we don't challenge anybody—just take down their names and addresses and let them sign the book. It is up to the clerks to check up to see if they are qualified voters."

It was pointed out to him that prior to June 18 the fourth precinct of the fifth ward, in which he served that day, had 515 registered voters, and that 392 names were added on June 18—nearly half of the new names from the Atlantic Hotel.

"Do you know how that can be explained?" the reporter asked. Bernstein said he did not.

"Did you have any curiosity at all about the 154 names registered from the Atlantic Hotel?"

"I knew there were a great many," he answered, "but I did not know who they were. You see, that was my first day in that precinct. I didn't know anybody there. I was taking the place of a sick man."

"Who?"

"I don't know."

Bernstein was asked then how he happened to be assigned to that precinct, and it was here that he referred the inquiry to Senator Kinney. He said Senator Kinney had got the job in the license collector's office for him.

By this time Bernstein was getting a bit skittish about answering questions; and when he was asked how long he had had the job, he said, "Oh, see Mr. Renick about that."

He was backing away from the counter in the license collector's office, where the interview took place, but another question brought him back. It was, "Can you say that you were present when those 154 names from the Atlantic Hotel were added?"

"I couldn't say that I was," he answered. "You see, we get 2 hours off for lunch. We go one at a time. I don't know what happened while I was at lunch."

"Well, do you recall any special activity there that day; anything that seemed unusual, in view of your previous experience as an election judge?"

"No; we don't pay any attention to things like that—just follow the regulations."

Bernstein, after the Post-Dispatch reporter had left the city hall, went off to confer with Senator Kinney. His room in the Maryland Hotel was unoccupied last night, and this morning he telephoned the chief clerk in the license collector's office to say that he was ill and would not report for work.

His fellow Democratic judge in the precinct, Myers, could not be reached at the St. Francis Hotel. The clerk said he had left town for a few days.

BECKER, TOO, STRANGE TO PRECINCT

Becker, one of the Republican judges, was seen by a reporter in the office of a small loan company in the International Building for which he is a collector. He, too, was in strange surroundings on that day when strange things happened in his precinct.

"I know very little about it," he said. "I have been a judge in the second precinct of the fifth ward for some time, but that day they transferred me to the fourth precinct, and I didn't know any of those fellows."

"Did anything happen that seemed unusual or aroused your curiosity?" "No; it was all routine to me."

On duty in the fourth precinct of the fifth ward last June 18 during the parade of the phantoms were, in addition to the four election judges, two clerks, William F. Casey, 4006 Dryden Avenue, a Democrat; and Edward A. Walsh, 1446 South Grand Boulevard, a Republican.

The clerks had the additional duty, on 2 days following the registration, of making a canvass of the precinct to make sure that there had been no fraudulent registrations. For this purpose they were furnished with slips bearing the names and addresses of all registered.

HOW CLERKS CHECKED UP

Walsh told a Post-Dispatch reporter he and Casey had gone around together, making the canvass. "And," he added, "I can tell you it was hot on those days."

Asked to tell what occurred when he and Casey visited the Atlantic Hotel, Walsh responded:

"Well, we walked up to the desk, and there was a man there who looked like the clerk. He said he was the clerk. I asked him if those men lived there, and he said yes."

Walsh said he had read aloud to the clerk the names on each of the slips.

"Do you recall that the clerk said anybody did not live there?"

"No; I don't," Walsh answered.

"Do you recall that he said they did?"

"He must have, or their names wouldn't be on the list now."

As the Post-Dispatch told exclusively yesterday, a reporter who showed the official list of 160 persons registered from the Atlantic Hotel as qualified voters to the assistant manager, Joseph H. Steuver, was told by Steuver that only 6 of those listed were residents of the hotel. The 6 included Steuver himself and the manager. The usual number of permanent guests, Steuver said, is 40 to 50.

FEWER THAN 100 NAMES CHALLENGED

Walsh said his best recollection was that fewer than 100 names in the entire precinct were challenged as a result of the canvass he and Casey had made after the registration.

Barber Frank Johnson recalled today that June 18 was an exceedingly busy day around his shop which served as the precinct registration place.

"Oh, sure," he said to a Post-Dispatch reporter, "there must have been 500 of them. They were sitting all around here"—with a sweep of his hand he indicated the walls of his four-chair shop—"and most of the day they were lined up for about 10 feet out on the sidewalk."

Johnson was a bit high on his estimate—actually 392 new names were added to the registration books in his precinct on that day—but he was certain that it was the busiest registration day in his experience. Party workers were bringing men and women to the shop in automobiles all day long, he said.

SENATOR KINNEY SAYS HE HAD NO HAND IN PLACING OF JUDGES

Senator Kinney, when seen by a reporter, admitted he knew Bernstein and confirmed what Bernstein said that he recommended Bernstein for a job at the city hall. But he professed total ignorance of everything else.

FEW VOTERS AT BIG DOWNTOWN HOTELS, MANY IN FIFTH WARD

Registration figures for downtown hotels, most of them in Senator Kinney's fifth ward, show a marked contrast between the small numbers enrolled from the larger and better-known hotels, and greater numbers from the lesser houses.

From Hotel Jefferson, 30 persons are registered; from the Statler, 9; from the American Hotel, 9; from the Lennox, 6; and from the Mayfair, 5. Other downtown houses show:

Laclede, 518 Chestnut Street, 303.
La Salle, 508 Chestnut, 128.
Marion Roe, 508 Pine, 79.
St. Charles, Ninth and St. Charles, 74.
Arlington, 715 Pine, 69.
Morgan, 403 Delmar Boulevard, 55.
Brevort, 412 Pine, 39.
Meramec, Twelfth and Pine, 38.

All the hotels named are in the fifth ward. Lodging and rooming houses in the adjoining sixth ward show the following registration figures:

New Atlantic Hotel, 911–911A Market Street, 95.
Lodging house, 819 Market, 70.
Boarding house, 601–601A South Broadway, 50.
Annex House, 615–615A Walnut, 50.

NO OFFICIAL ACT ON GROSS FRAUDS IN REGISTRATION—NOTHING DONE TO BRING GUILTY TO BOOK—CIRCUIT ATTORNEY WRITES LETTER TO JAMES A. WAECHTER

No official action has been taken thus far to identify and bring to trial any of the many persons who must be guilty of criminal participation in the wholesale registration frauds which the Post-Dispatch is exposing, the first reports of which were given in the first edition of yesterday's paper.

The only official notice taken of the exposé was in a letter written by Circuit Attorney Franklin Miller to James A. Waechter, chairman of the board of election commissioners, yesterday afternoon, in which Mr. Miller mentioned the reports in the Post-Dispatch, and said, "I assume these charges will be promptly investigated by the board."

"LEGAL" EVIDENCE OF FRAUD

He added that if "legal" evidence of fraud should be found, he would like to have such evidence submitted to him for presentation to the grand jury. In this connection he said the present grand jury would be in vacation during the month of August and that its term would expire and it would be discharged September 11.

The primary election at which the fraudulent names are intended to be voted will take place August 4.

The law permits the circuit attorney or the judge who empaneled the grand jury to call it into session at any time during its term regardless of recess or vacation, so that the present grand jury could be employed immediately and at any time or continuously up to September 11.

Grover W. Dalton, of Poplar Bluff, chairman of the Republican State committee, sent a telegram yesterday from St. Louis to Governor Park, calling on him to remove the entire board of election commissioners, Republican as well as Democratic members, all the Governor's appointees.

Dalton cited the Post-Dispatch's exposé of fraud and said the election board was responsible for "this distressing as well as reprehensible condition," and should be removed and replaced with "men or women who will speedily clean up this mess and restore honest and fair elections in St. Louis."

GOVERNOR PARK'S STATEMENT

Governor Park, after receiving Dalton's letter, said: "I wish to make an investigation of my own before I make any statement."

Jesse W. Barrett, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor, speaking last night before the Regular Fifth Ward Republican Club, at 2721 Mills Street, said:

"The total of phantom registrations in St. Louis runs into many thousands. It would easily be enough to decide a close election.

"This is a direct and vital challenge to every resident of St. Louis. It calls for immediate and thorough cooperation of all good citizens, regardless of party affiliations."

Barrett advocated formation of a nonpartisan committee to raise funds to investigate and combat the frauds, and to back prosecution of offenders.

MASS MEETING 7:30 TONIGHT

An opportunity for public expression on the registration frauds will be given by the mass meeting called for 7:30 o'clock tonight at Central Library, under auspices of the Citizens' Non-Partisan Committee. The committee, which was formed to oppose the Jefferson Memorial river-front improvement, has taken up a campaign against frauds affecting the ballot.

Paul O. Peters, director of the committee, who made charges of fraud in the bond-issue election of September 10 last, collected data at that time which has been used, in comparison with the new official lists of voters, in establishing the registration frauds.

Peters has received numerous letters of complaint and suggestion, in the fraud inquiry, at his home, 1819 Thurman Avenue.

MORE REGISTRATION FRAUDS FOUND AS INQUIRY EXTENDS TO SECOND, NINETEENTH, AND TWENTY-THIRD WARDS—AT LEAST 900 CASES OF PALPABLE PADDING—VOTE CORRUPTION IS NOT CONFINED TO DOWNTOWN PRECINCTS

Added evidences of fraud in the record-size registration for the August 4 primary are presented by the Post-Dispatch today following its disclosures yesterday of wholesale frauds in the fourth, fifth, and sixth wards.

Beside the downtown river wards named, indications are increasing that the padding of rolls occurred also outside the downtown area. The second, a northern river ward, and the nineteenth and twenty-third, central residence wards, afforded instances of irregularities similar to those shown in the fourth, fifth, and sixth.

Inquiry by Post-Dispatch reporters into the colonizing of fictitious or far-away voters in vacant buildings, or buildings with only a few actual occupants, has pointed to at least 900 cases of palpable fraud in the wards named.

PLACES TO BE INVESTIGATED

Among the places where the enrollments of voters are either obviously fraudulent or are plainly proper subjects for official investigation are:

No. 1101 Chestnut Street, downstairs vacant and locked, 21 registered; upstairs, 23 registered; clerk says they live there.

Broadway Hotel, 419 Wash Street, 57 registered; 11 not known to proprietor.

Pacific Hotel, 905 Market Street, 120 registered; management says they live there.

Princess Hotel, 14 North Eighteenth Street, 86 registered; only 25 of names recognized by management.

St. Charles Hotel, 902 St. Charles Street, 75 registered; only 2 names recognized by person in charge. Building has 18 rooms.

Y. M. C. A., 1528 Locust Street, 192 registered; only 54 now known to management as residing there. Some of the other names are those of former roomers; most of them are not known to the management. Management last spring sent list of permanent guests to election board; Lloyd L. Coon, residence hall manager, said no inquiry from precinct clerks to check the registration was received.

No. 1126A Pine Street, sixth ward, regular Democratic headquarters, 39 registered; management says they live there.

Erie Hotel, 218 South Fourth Street, 39 registered; management knows 23; says 3 of the others are dead.

No. 1020 North Eighth Street, 3 rooms, 34 registered; proprietor says all "come around" occasionally.

Vacant store, 1801 Washington Avenue, 12 registered; neighbors said some were former employees of a bus company, which had depot on premises up to June 1. Neighbors said Walter Jones, Negro porter, whose name was on list, died about 2 months ago.

De Luxe Motor Stages depot, 1805 Washington, 22 registered; 1 Negro porter actually lives there.

Tenement, 2125 Lucas Avenue, 17 registered; 2 known there; 1 name, that of Felix Nack, appears on list twice; he is not known there.

Flats, 2129 Lucas, 28 registered; 4 known there. Names not known include 2 William Lees.

Rooming house, 1808 Delmar Boulevard, 32 registered; 4 now live there; others are former lodgers.

Flat, 1919A Olive Street, 17 registered. Boy told reporter that only he and his grandparents lived there. A man contradicted this, saying others lived there and "work day and night."

Rooming house, 1925 Olive, 29 registered; 7 known there.

Chestnut Lodge, relief committee quarters, at 2207 Chestnut Street, 180 registered; 106 now live there.

Ozanam Shelter, 3225 Montgomery Street, 306 registered; many not now there.

Abernathy Apartments for Negroes, 1120 North Compton Avenue, 38 registered, 5 of whom have moved, according to janitor.

Rooming house at 4200 Page Boulevard, 18 registered; 4 have not lived at place for 8 months or more, and 1 is not known to landlady; 5 others do not live there, but at 4200W Page.

No. 7 Market Street, vacant 1 year, 56 persons registered.

No. 8 South Second Street, vacant 5 months, 48 registered.

No. 410 North Levee, 137 registered; accommodations visible for not more than 30.

Atlantic Hotel, 1431 Pine Street, 160 registered; only 6 known to assistant manager.

Nos. 1502–1502A Franklin Avenue, 72 registered; place known to police as a disorderly house.

Second Ward Democratic Club, in former police station at Ninth and Angelica Street, 20 registered; club manager says no one lives there.

The Page Boulevard rooming house is in the Twenty-third Ward, eleventh precinct. The Abernathy Apartments and Ozanam Shelter are in the nineteenth ward. The other places named, except for the second-ward clubhouse are in the fourth, fifth, and sixth wards.

The Democratic and Republican city committees have taken no official notice of the fraud exposures thus far.

Inflation of the registration, if not corrected before the primary, may affect important contests in both parties.

In the Democratic Party, Mayor Bernard F. Dickmann's fight for control of the city committee, and the counter-efforts of the anti-Dickmann part of the present committee, are well known. There is also a Republican contest, which has attracted less attention, but which will stimulate the use of all available voters.

G. O. P. CONTROL AT STAKE

Control of the Republican city committee is at issue between the present controlling group of committeemen, headed by Chairman Fred W. Pape, and a faction alined with Charles L. Moore, secretary and a Republican member of the board of election commissioners. This fight is particularly keen in the large twenty-fourth ward, in the southwest section of the city, and in the fifth and nineteenth, which have large Negro populations.

As recounted heretofore, State Senator Michael Kinney, Democratic boss of the fifth ward, is being fought for renomination by Justice of the Peace Jimmy Miller, fourth-ward boss. Miller has brought out State Representative William Warren Burke as a candidate for the senate against Kinney. Miller has shown remarkable control of the fourth-ward vote in past elections, and he now has more voting material to work with, the ward's registration having grown from 10,628 to 13,671.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of July 24, 1936]

DOZEN REPEATERS BUSY ALL DAY FALSIFYING ONE PRECINCT'S VOTING LIST—ELECTION JUDGE TELLS HOW IT WAS DONE IN THE FIFTH WARD—HOMELESS MEN PROVIDED WITH ADDRESSES, FOREIGN-BORN PUT ON BOOKS WITHOUT NATURALIZATION PAPERS IN "DEMOCRATIC FIELD DAY"—482 ADDED IN DAY; ANYONE WELCOME—SAM WEBER, REPUBLICAN OFFICIAL, HAVING BEEN FOREWARNED NOT TO "SEE TOO MUCH," WAS INTIMIDATED BY THE CONDUCT OF THE DEMOCRATIC JUDGES

The amazing inside story of the manner in which the registration list in the first precinct of the fifth ward was falsified last June 18 when dozens of repeaters came to register and returned to register again under other names was given to the Post-Dispatch today by Sam Weber, one of the Republican election judges who served in the precinct.

Some of the most flagrant frauds disclosed in the Post-Dispatch investigation of registration crookedness occurred in this precinct, the polling and registration place for which is in the basement of the historic old courthouse at Broadway and Market street.

The 56 phantom voters enrolled from the unfurnished, uninhabited, and abandoned building at 7 Market Street, mentioned previously in the Post-Dispatch, constitute only one group of fraudulent registrations in the precinct.

INTIMIDATED INTO SILENCE

Weber, a youthful attorney, serving for the first time as an election official, was overawed by the brazen corruptness of the proceedings. He started to demur at times, but was intimidated by the demeanor of older Democrat colleagues and refrained from effective protest.

When the Post-Dispatch sought him out, as one of the officials in charge of a precinct where the paper had exposed gross fraud in registration, he told his story willingly to rid his conscience of a disturbing recollection. He will gladly repeat his account at any official inquiry, he said.

The Democratic election judges who served with Weber that day were William Golden, whose address is given as 3 North Sixth street, and Lester Sutton, whose address is given as the St. Francis Hotel, 604 Chestnut street. That hotel is also the voting address of State Senator Michael Kinney, Democratic boss of the fifth ward.

NAMED AT KINNEY'S REQUEST

The judges were appointed at the instance of Senator Kinney, now engaged in the political fight of his life to obtain renomination for the seat in the Senate he has held for 24 years. Kinney is the Democratic city committeeman for the fifth ward, and the practice of the present Board of Election Commissioners has been to let each committeeman dictate the appointment of precinct election officials in his ward.

The Republican election judges were Weber and Robert J. Bergmann, 114A North Broadway, who were named by Fred Weissmann, Republican committeeman for the fifth ward.

WEBER'S EXPERIENCE AS JUDGE

"It was all very new to me," Weber related. "I was stopped at the entrance by a policeman, but when I told him I was to be one of the judges, he admitted me. Once inside I was asked by one of the Democratic judges if I was Sam Weber, and when I answered in the affirmative, he assigned me to a seat at a table and directed me to join the other Republican judge in writing the names and addresses of registrants on slips. These slips were to be used later by clerks in checking the registrants at the addresses given."

Weber's initiation into the technique of practical politics as currently conducted in the river wards of St. Louis had for its locale a dingy room in the northwest corner of the basement of the old courthouse.

Those who were to register descended a few stone steps, made their way through the refuse in an areaway and entered a small anteroom, equipped only with an old rolltop desk. Beyond a partition made of a mismated assortment of doors, panels and boards, there was a larger room, with a table in the center. Off in a corner, across the splintered floor, was a flat-top desk, and scattered about the room were a half-dozen folding chairs.

DECISIVELY OVERRULED

"I observed at a glance that the Democratic judges were in full possession of things," Weber continued. "I was not surprised later on when I ventured a suggestion that was promptly and decisively overruled. This was that I, as one of the two Republican judges, be allowed to work on one of the two books. I was politely but firmly told that I was doing a good job with the slips and not to worry about how the books were kept.

"It was plain from the attitude of those men that they would not be irritated by a mere Republican, and I suppose my Republican colleague, an elderly man, felt the same way about it. When I rose to challenge a man who had registered several times, my Republican friend nudged me with his knee under the table and gave me a glance that said it might be imprudent to protest.

"Moreover, it appeared the repeaters were on friendly terms with the Democratic judges, and as there were always several repeaters in the place, I kept my peace; but I looked upon the whole proceeding as a sad commentary on our system.

A DEMOCRATIC FIELD DAY

"We had customers the moment the doors were open, and from that moment until 5 minutes before the place closed, when a drove of about 25 swarmed upon us, the Democrats enjoyed a field day. I was dumfounded by that last sortie of the enemy, and so I surrendered to overwhelming numbers.

"After all had registered and we officials were left alone, the books were shoved at me and I was directed to sign them, as my duty, thereby vouching for the legality of the registration in that precinct. It was night; I was in the same spot, and that was no time and place to be contrary. I could not have safely done otherwise than sign those books, or at least I felt that way.

"Irregularity seemed to be the rule. At the very start a man registered, stepped outside, reentered and registered again. He did it a third time with such ease and authority that I rubbed my eyes to make sure I was awake. I saw more of that man during the day. He and a dozen others would register, each putting down a different name; go out for a few minutes, and return, to repeat the performance. That sort of thing went on all day.

ADDRESSES PROVIDED FOR HOMELESS

"But the grim proceeding was not without its spots of humor. A wretched drifter sauntered in and gave his name. When asked for an address he said he had no home.

"That was too bad, remarked one of the Democratic judges at the books. They would find a home for him. Would he like a nice place on the river front, or was he particular? Any old place he could hang his hat would do for him, and so he was given an address around Fourth and Broadway.

Another of about the same type entered and, after giving his name, apologetically remarked that he lived in North St. Louis. He was told that North St. Louis was far outside the first precinct of the fifth ward. The Democratic judges thereupon consulted the city precinct map. After some study they gave him an address within the precinct bounds. He was not particular, and so signed the book for the new home address they had given him.

FOREIGN-BORN REGISTRANTS

"Many of the registrants were born in other countries, and as I understand the regulations governing registration, they are obliged to show their naturalization papers; but this trifling detail did not bother the Democratic judges. True, they inquired for the naturalization papers, but when told they had been forgotten or misplaced, that was all right, and the point was not pressed. Indeed, everyone was welcome, and all who sought to have their names placed on the books as eligible voters were obligingly accommodated."

Weber went to lunch at 1 o'clock and was away from the place for an hour. He went out again for an hour at 7 p. m., to register in his own precinct. He said he does not know what took place in the first precinct during those 2 hours and had no curiosity in the matter at all.

"It was one and the same thing whether I was there or not, for all the influence I could bring to bear in behalf of an honest registration," Weber said. "It was a great day for the Democrats and they made the most of it, believe me."

LAST-MINUTE RUSH

The repeaters had thinned out as the closing hour approached and Weber assumed from this that they had done their worst, but he was mistaken, for at exactly 5 minutes of 9 o'clock there was a great hubbub outside and at least 25 men were quickly herded into the room and the doors closed.

Their names were as quickly taken and placed on the books and those who did not readily give a proper address, were given addresses within the precinct bounds.

It was a handy place to register, Weber commented. The officials were not at all particular and at no time indulged in embarrassing questions to the prospective voter.

There were 926 persons registered in that precinct before June 18. On the books today are the names of 1,408, showing that 482 were added in the 13 hours of Weber's first experience as an election judge.

In addition to the 56 added to the books and given the address of the vacant building at 7 Market Street, the Post-Dispatch has directed attention to the extraordinary heavy registration from cheap hotels and lodging houses in Kinney's fifth ward. At several of these establishments the managers and room clerks frankly admitted that far more were registered as voters than were permanent guests at their places.

DON'T SEE TOO MUCH

It was a very distressing experience for Weber, although friends whom he had told of his appointment as election judge had forewarned him of the necessity for being discreet. "Above all things," they cautioned him, "don't see too much."

But Weber saw and could not forget. He is 23 years old and lives at 2714 Goodfellow Boulevard.

PHANTOM TRAILS LEAD BACK TO ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

As the Post-Dispatch unfolds the ghost story of June 18 and its lists of phantom voters, more and more roads lead back, sometimes deviously, to the St. Francis Hotel, 604 Chestnut Street, the official residence of Senator Michael Kinney, whose power in the fifth ward is anything but a myth.

There the trail ends, pending the event that it is picked up by official authority.

Ordinarily John Golden, Senator Kinney's handy man, and lesser lights are much in evidence around Sixth and Chestnut, the political crossroads of Kinney's fifth ward, but for the time being they deny their presence to Post-Dispatch reporters.

Unavailable

Yesterday, as the Post-Dispatch related, it was Robert F. Myers, a Democratic election judge, who was "unavailable" at the St. Francis. The hotel clerk said he was out of town for a few days. Reporters had sought his contribution to the curious story of precinct 4, where 154 phantoms are registered from the Atlantic Hotel. The St. Francis is in the first precinct. The other Democratic judge for the fourth precinct lived almost as far away from the polling place, 1423 Franklin Avenue, as Myers. He was Leonard Bernstein of the Maryland Hotel, who referred questioners to Senator Kinney, and the record of whose appointment, in 1932, bears the notation, "Kinney-Golden."

The St. Francis' own precinct, the first, had ghosts of its own, as has been told.

Out or uncommunicative

The address of Lester Sutton, one of the Democratic judges for that precinct, was recorded as 604 Chestnut, the St. Francis.

An uncommunicative clerk said he lived there, but was "out," and intimated that he would continue to be "out" indefinitely.

The other Democratic judge in the first precinct was William Golden. His address was given as 3 North Sixth, a few doors south of the Sixth Street entrance of the St. Francis. Inquiry there was referred back to the St. Francis.

The clerk, previously asked for Myers, and then for Sutton, and a few minutes later for either of the Goldens—William or John—grew rapidly less communicative.

William Golden's address is shown on the registration books as also the address of John Golden, Sr.—junior registered from the St. Francis—and of 27 other voters, all good Democrats according to a plump blonde who met the reporter at the head of the stairs on his return visit. The place consists of a second-floor hallway with rooms on either side. The shingle for 50-cent lodging is hung out at the street door, which opens on the stairway.

No Republicans here

"Are you a Republican looking for votes?" she asked. "There are no Republicans here."

She was equally positive that "Mr. Golden's brother" was not in politics. If it was politics, it must be John Golden who was wanted, surely not William. No; neither was there; left not a half hour ago. Oh, my, no; they run the place, if that's what you mean, but they don't live here. Couldn't possibly give their home address to strangers; but—"Did you try the St. Francis?"

The patient denials of the hotel clerk were met, this time, by equally patient insistence that he inform the gentlemen not "available" of the reporters' search and allow them to decide for themselves whether they wished to remain "out." He said that he had and they did.

Clerk not sure he visited vacant abode of 56 phantoms

It happens that the Republican election clerk in the first precinct, fifth ward, Nathan Sherman, does not live at the St. Francis but at 1482 Laurel Street. There he told a Post-Dispatch reporter he was not at all sure that in the post-registration canvass he had visited the empty building, 7 Market Street, given as the address of 56 phantom voters.

His address on election commissioners' records remains as 1526 Franklin Avenue, where he used to work. He is an unemployed clerk, 25 years old.

It was the duty of Sherman, and of Harold Hancock, 1812 Franklin Avenue, the Democratic clerk, to canvass the precinct after the registration last June 18 to make certain that all those who were registered lived at the addresses which appeared in the poll books.

"We might have missed a few buildings," Sherman said when pressed for an explanation of his failure to discover and report the 56 fraudulent registrations at 7 Market Street.

"But I think I went there and saw a girl who told me all the names were O. K.," he added.

Pictures of the dilapidated building, both exterior and interior views, were shown to Sherman by the reporter. Sherman said he had no recollection of having been there.

"But you approved those 56 names?" the reporter asked.

"If they are on the books, I did," Sherman answered.

They are, beyond doubt, on the books.

JUDGE PUT IN STRANGE PRECINCT "TO GET MORE EXPERIENCE"

Fred Weissmann, Republican committeeman for the fifth ward, who recommended Anton Becker to be one of the election judges for the fourth precinct of that ward (where the Atlantic Hotel phantoms were registered), was asked how he happened to assign Becker to that particular precinct.

"He had served for me before," Weissmann said. "I always found him dependable."

"But never before in that precinct?" the reporter suggested. "Why did you assign him to that particular precinct?"

"Oh, I shifted him around to get more experience, I guess," Weissmann answered.

He was asked if he had received any suggestion from any Democratic source in selecting precinct election officials.

"Absolutely not," Weissmann answered.

Becker's address is given in the election commissioners' records as 1714A Franklin Avenue. That is Weissmann's address, also. Weissmann said Becker lived there, too. He was asked if they were related, and his answer was: "Not exactly."

RECORD OF FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION IN ONE PRECINCT OF THIRD WARD

In the tenth precinct of the third ward, a north St. Louis residential area, 602 persons are listed as registered voters. A house-to-house canvass of the precinct by the Post-Dispatch last Wednesday disclosed that 182 of the 602 names on the list, or 30.2 percent, are of persons not living at the addresses from which they are registered.

Of these 182, the survey showed that—

Seventy persons are not known by present residents at the addresses given in the registration or by neighbors;

One hundred and four persons formerly lived at the addresses for which they were listed, but have moved away at times ranging variously from several weeks to 4 years ago;

Three persons are listed twice from the same address;

Four persons are listed as living in buildings which have been torn down with the widening of North Fifteenth Street;

One person died in March 1935.

THIRTY PERCENT OF FRAUD IN REGISTRATION IN TYPICAL NORTH ST. LOUIS PRECINCT—TENTH OF THIRD WARD—HOUSE-TO-HOUSE CANVASS BY REPORTER ASCERTAINS DISCREPANCIES AS ELECTION BOARD'S PAID CLERKS SHOULD HAVE DONE—182 OF 602 ENROLLED NOT AT ADDRESSES—NEIGHBORS READILY GIVE ACCURATE INFORMATION ON PAST AND PRESENT WHEREABOUTS OF ABSENTEES AND WHEN THEY MOVED AWAY

The Post-Dispatch today adds a new chapter to the continuing story of wholesale fraud in the record-size registration for the primary of August 4. The locale is the tenth precinct of the third ward, a north St. Louis residence neighborhood, outside the downtown section in which most of the previous disclosures have centered.

A house-to-house check of the official "revised and corrected" registration list of the precinct was made Wednesday by a Post-Dispatch reporter, disclosing that 182 of the 602 registered voters, or 30.2 percent, are not living at the addresses printed in the election board's official list.

WHAT CLERKS SHOULD HAVE DONE

The Post-Dispatch reporter's task was exactly that given by law 1 month ago to two election clerks, one a Democrat, the other a Republican, in this precinct, as in all other precincts of the city. It is provided by law that prior to each primary election such a canvass of precincts shall be made to enable the board of election commissioners to purge the registration lists of all names of persons not entitled to vote.

The conditions disclosed in this precinct are typical of what might be found in any number of the 669 precincts in the city if a competent canvass and check were made by the election board.

SEVENTY OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-TWO NOT KNOWN

It was determined by the Post-Dispatch check that 70 of the 182 persons not residing in the precinct are unknown to the persons now living at the addresses given; that 104 have moved at widely varying times; that 7 are names listed twice, or listed for buildings now torn down; and that 1 voter died more than a year ago.

In general, the reporter had no difficulty in ascertaining the names and whereabouts of past or present residents. Frequently those of whom inquiries were made knew to the day when a family had moved and knew the exact or approximate present addresses of their erstwhile neighbors. Election clerks doing their work competently would find a similar canvass similarly easy. Only 1 or 2 days would be required for one man to canvass correctly any precinct in the city.

The third ward, in which this precinct lies, is bounded by the river, Branch Street on the north, West Florissant and North Twentieth Streets on the west, and Cass Avenue, Mullanphy, Chambers, Tyler, and Brooklyn Streets on the south. State Senator Joseph H. Brogan is Democratic leader in the ward, which forms a considerable part of the senatorial district where he is a candidate for reelection.

TENTH PRECINCT LARGE

The tenth precinct, including a fraction more than seven city blocks, is an area of large, multiple-family dwellings, most of which were built from 50 to 70 years ago. The buildings edge to the sidewalk, with no front yard, and are grouped so that five or six share a paved enclosure at the rear which serves as a common playground for the children and loitering place for the men and women.

Boundaries of the precinct are North Fourteenth Street on the east, Wright and Dodier Streets on the north, North Fifteenth Street on the west, and Warren Street on the south. From Warren to St. Louis Avenue, North Fourteenth is lined solidly with stores and other small business establishments, with flats on the second floor. The 1400 block on St. Louis Avenue is also largely commercial, with a handbook shop, a restaurant, the offices of a moving company, an oil station, an ice-cream parlor, and a shoe-repair shop.

DETAILS OF THE CANVASS

The reporter set forth at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, accompanied by William Sessinghaus, a notary public, who has lived at 1444 St. Louis Avenue, in the tenth precinct, for 22 years, and who was employed by the Post-Dispatch to assist the reporter because of his familiarity with persons and places in the district.

At 1410 Wright Street, the first address visited, Mrs. Maggie Rogers accounted for herself and four other Rogerses whom the election board listed at the place. George and Virgil were staying there but Clarence and Mary had moved 3 or 4 months ago to the 1300 block of North Market Street, she said. "And the address for us here ought to be 1410A, not 1400."

Next door at 1412 Wright Street, Margarite Losing, listed by the election board as living there, had moved away "some time ago."

Floyd Wilson, listed for the upstairs flat, moved over to Farrar Street a year and a half ago, a neighbor said. "I'm pretty sure it's 2591A Farrar."

LANDLORD CHECKS THE LIST

August Bockstruck was busy cleaning and papering several vacant flats which he owns at 1420 and 1422 Wright when the reporter called. He was amused and somewhat incensed that the registration list showed 22 voters for his property, which can accommodate 6 families, if another building in the rear is included.

"Let's see that list," he said. "Oma and Edwin Roseman moved out a month ago. Robert and Mildred Newhouse have been gone several weeks. I never heard of Joseph, Ann, and Clara Arnold. Elmer Sheppard went away last winter. How about the house where I live, 1424 Wright? Al and Virginia Alscheimer? Never heard of them."

It was at 1436A Wright that the reporter asked for Charles Rosenbeck. "He was my husband, but he died in March, a year and a half ago. In 1935 it was," Mrs. Rosenbeck said.

At 1436 Wright none of the residents had ever heard of Clarence, Ted, or Frances Huebner or of Richard Schere. Others in the block who were unknown to present residents or to neighbors were Albert Kolafa, listed for 1440 Wright; Jennie or Solomon Hayes, supposed to be at 1447; Joda Harris, at 1439A; Percey and Hazel Haile, listed at 1435; or Lewis Niemann, whom the official list placed at 1433 Wright.

THREE TOO MANY FULLERS

Mrs. Celeste Fuller, 1445 Wright Street, told the reporter she and her husband, Charles, were properly listed, but the three other Fullers named as residing there were neither relatives nor acquaintances. Stanley, Roy, and Cassie Fuller, of 1445 Wright Street, simply were not known to Celeste and Charles Fuller of the same address.

With Wright Street thoroughly canvassed the reporter paused for a computation. There were 123 names on the list for the street and 35 had been found to be persons not living on the street now. Fifteen, it was established, have moved; 19 were not known at all; and Mr. Rosenbeck was dead.

SEVERAL REMOVALS

The houses at 2829 and 2831 North Fourteenth Street have a common back yard and a woman who lives in one of the houses glanced over the registration list for those addresses. George and Della Mueller, registered from 2931, moved away last October, she said. Walter and Jean Vail and Ruth and Al Moore, all of whom were supposed to live there, too, had not lived anywhere in the neighborhood within the memory of the present inhabitants. Helen and Fred Schulte had moved away from 2829 North Fourteenth last year.

Likewise there were too many names listed for the house next door to the south. Henry, Flora, and Mary Myers once lived at 2827A North Fourteenth, but that was 2 years ago. Iva and Everett Hodge left No. 2827 last week.

Mrs. Mary Book has lived a long time at 2815 North Fourteenth and was a mine of information about her neighbors, past and present. Her own son, Bernard, was listed, but he married and moved over on Palm Street last spring. Gertrude Hilmich moved from 2807A North Fourteenth to University City last fall. Cornelia Wigge, once at 2809 North Fourteenth, left at that time, too, according to Mrs. Book. Others who had moved were Fred Legler, at 2809, Martin Diansic, 2811, and Mazie Lenhardt, 2813, the last two in 1934.

THREE MOVED, ONE NOT KNOWN

In the same block Stanley and Roman Dumbroski; William, James, Lottie, and Ruth Lester; Della and Joseph Thomas; and Millie Kalz were all said to have moved at varying times. Frank McCready, listed at 2817 North Fourteenth, was not known to anyone in the yard behind that address.

Last February, Lester and Alice Bates, who live at 2713 North Fourteenth, according to election commissioners' official list, moved to somewhere in the 2600 block of the same street, on the east side of the street, neighbors told the reporter. Farther on south on Fourteenth the reporter found that Clara Porterfield, Edward Neise, and Lillian Parsons were not known to the persons living at the addresses given for them on the registration list. William L. Newman, too, has moved from 2611 North Fourteenth.

For the three blocks of Fourteenth Street, on the west side of the street, 35 persons in all were evidently incorrectly listed as registered voters. Eight weren't known; 27 had moved away.

Sessinghaus, an elderly man who walked and climbed stairs with the reporter for 9 hours without complaint, found the names of Frank and Ruth Roxalaw, at 2824 Blair Avenue, quite familiar. He had assisted last September in canvassing the precinct after the river-front bond election and remembered that the persons had then been moved away for several months. It was the same story last Wednesday. Frank and Ruth Roxalaw were still gone.

FACTS ON BLAIR AVENUE

John and Ann Miles, listed for 2822 Blair Avenue, moved from that place a year ago, present residents said. It has been 3 years since Rose and Arthur Jackson lived at 2815 Blair; several years since Marie Grimel lived at the same address, and varying lengths of time since Charles Heidbrink, Marie Widemann, and Ted and Walter Schenk lived there, although the registration lists indicate that they all make their homes at the place now.

No one at 2718 Blair knew John or Caroline Ott, who were shown on the list as residing there, nor was Goldie Been known at 2720 Blair. Tim Hoffman and John Hanlon were said to have moved from 2715 Blair last autumn to the 1300 block of St. Louis Avenue. Frank Gerichten, who lives at 2709A Blair, was listed twice, on registration records, once by his real name and also as "Frank Gricton."

It was 2 years ago that William and Margaret Ahring moved from 2710A Blair, neighbors told the reporter, but their names still appear on the list. E. W. Kinney has been gone several months from 2710 Blair. Others departed from the street in that block are Joseph and Ellen Mills and James Medlin. The residents didn't know William Hennessy, recorded on the list as living at 2709A Blair, or Violet Scherer, listed as living in the rear at that address.

Ernest Loche and Robert Severs, registered from 2704 and 2706 Blair, respectively, are no longer at those places. Bertha and J. E. McCoy have been gone 6 months from 2610 (rear) Blair; John Henthorn has moved from 2610, and Frank and Gus Meyer have moved to Montgomery Street from 2608, according to persons in the neighborhood.

In the canvass of the precinct following the bond election last fall Annie Yearwood was found to have moved in April 1935 from 2612 Blair Avenue. Her name still appears on the registration list, but she has not returned to the address. Frank Rogers and William Clement have moved from 2609A Blair, but their names remain on the list after a year's absence.

Of the 131 names listed on Blair Avenue, 40 are of persons no longer living at the addresses given. Eleven are not known, 26 have moved, and 3 are listed twice. In the last category was James I. Hopkins, 2607 Blair, who was registered also as "F. Hopkins." He told the reporter, "There was some confusion over at the polls. I registered twice."

ON WARREN STREET

On Warren Street the reporter found that Henry, Agnes, and Walter Hubner, registered from 1409A, were not known by persons who had lived there 2 years. Dorothy Jordan had been gone for 2 years from 1411 Warren, and Marice Coleman, who was listed as living at the flat on the second floor at that address, had moved in January.

Others on the street who had moved away within the last year, according to persons living nearby, were Loretta Anderson, once at 1443; Emme Ellsworth, once at 1445A; Lloyd and Matilda Henderson and John Jobe, formerly of 1451; and Will and Matilda Stephenson, of 1457A. Their names remain on the official registration list.

Robert and Edith Glover are listed as residing at 1415 Warren, but it has been a year since they lived there. No one whom the reporter found knew Samuel and Jennie Gibson, registered from 1451 Warren, or Gus Barczykowski, listed at 1457A Warren. Others not known were Ruth Sutton, Mary Ruehl, Albert Henry, and Paul and Loretta Harder.

Computing the Warren Street survey, it was discovered 21 of the 60 persons listed were not known or were no longer residents.

FIFTEENTH STREET

On North Fifteenth Street, where several buildings have been razed to make way for the widening of the street, 11 of the 21 voters registered no longer make their homes there.

At 2608 North Fifteenth James and Iola Cates and Edward Eikmeier were said to have moved away a year ago. Pansy and Joseph Boyd were not known at that address although registered to vote from it. Adele Leiber has moved from 2818 North Fifteenth. Charles Schmidt was a stranger to Bernard Schmidt at 2822, where he was listed as living; nor did the Camerons, whom the reporter saw at the same address, know the Mazie Cameron whom the registration list had assigned to the place.

Harry Brueggeman, James Maher, and Gus Betyel are registered from 2810 North Fifteenth Street, but that building was hauled away stone by stone by the wreckers several months ago. The widened boulevard required its destruction.

Kate Miller's home at 1451 Montgomery Street has also been torn down but her registration from that address remains unchanged. Raymond Mueller, his former neighbors told the reporter, moved to the 3800 block of Garfield Avenue from 1446 Montgomery several months ago. His registration, too, is unchanged. Comparatively recently Richard and Fred Berner left 1440 Montgomery.

Adia Kochmann, listed as 1425 Montgomery, and Peter Bernard, 1427A Montgomery, are listed but not known to their neighbors. Others on the street—D. W. Potter, William Bennett, Delia Riti, John A. Martin, and Walter, Carroll, Pauline, and Myrtle Bishop—although registered, live there no longer.

The canvass was ended with a survey of St. Louis Avenue, from 1401 to 1454, and of Dodier Street, from 1405 to 1448. On St. Louis Avenue 76 voters were listed and all but 8 were found by the reporter. Only 1, Earl Glandt, registered from 1452A St. Louis, was unknown to other residents.

On Dodier Street was Dora Dunkman, listed at 1406. Her case was described in the Post-Dispatch Wednesday; her name also appears on the registration list in another ward to which she has moved. Of the 43 names listed for the street, 18 are of persons who, like Mrs. Dunkman, no longer live there. Eleven were not known in the neighborhood; 7 have moved away.

DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS ARE BOTH CAUGHT IN CORRUPT PRACTICES—ST. LOUIS SHOWS 46,398 GHOST VOTES ON BOOKS

Only the nonpartisans of Missouri are entitled to the credit which both Democrats and Republicans would like to claim in exposing the fraud and corruption which has existed in the registration and voting in St. Louis.

The story of how 46,393 "ghost voters" were chased into permanent oblivion is the story of the nonpartisan committee's superhuman fight against graft and corruption in St. Louis, a fight which was scoffed at and belittled by both Democratic and Republican politicians, but a fight which has earned the respect and gratitude of the average taxpaying citizen.

This fight started last June when the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee of St. Louis, organized to protest against a second memorial to Thomas Jefferson being built in downtown St. Louis at a cost to the taxpayers of $30,000,000.

In the special election for a bond issue on September 10 there was every indication of fraud and ballot-box stuffing on the part of the victors.

After an investigation, as early as October 1936, members of the committee publicly charged that fraud had been committed in the election of September 10.

To these charges both the board of election commissioners and the elected officials of the city adopted a disinterested attitude and dismissed the evidence at hand, with the thought that this was the customary wail of the losers. In early July of this year the city was brought to a full awakening by the charges of wholesale fraud, published by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, in connection with the registrations for the August 4 primary election. To this charge Chairman Waechter, of the board of election commissioners, said, "Same old stuff."

However, with the powerful Post-Dispatch publishing daily stories of additional frauds, Governor Park finally was forced to order a recheck of the registrations in the entire city of St. Louis.

This was made July 29 and 30 and by August 1 it was ascertained by the recheck that 46,393 of the registered votes could not be found at the addresses which they had given as their residences. Many of the registrations were from vacant stores, buildings, and apartments, and some even from vacant lots.

With all of this evidence of fraud at hand the Governor was still hesitant and allowed the old board of election commissioners to stay in office and to conduct the primary on August 4.

After the primary the old board also selected an entire new group of judges and clerks who were commissioned for a 4-year period.

Meanwhile, the Governor was besieged by the League of Women Voters and dozens of other civic organizations to discharge the board of election commissioners for incompetency in office. This he refused to do, so the citizens' nonpartisan committee turned over to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch added evidence of fraud and ballot-box stuffing in connection with the memorial bond issue election, and a new series of articles began to appear. After evidence had been published showing fraud in each of the 19 wards which gave a majority to the bond-issue proposal, the publication was interrupted by the summary action of the Governor in discharging the board by telegram on September 15.

The new board appointed by the Governor, consisting of Charles P. Williams, chairman, Arthur J. Freund, M. E. Singleton, and George L. Dyer, secretary, promptly engaged Miss Emma Bobb, a former member of the board, and placed her in charge of operations at their headquarters.

Following the registrations of September 21, 22, 23, and 24 and the canvass thereafter made by the clerks appointed by the discharged board, the new board ordered a recheck of each precinct by special deputy election commissioners drafted from the business and commercial houses of the city. These special deputies challenged 10,000 of the new registrants.

With over 400,000 names on the books in St. Louis and 260,000 or more registered in Kansas City, the fight for clean elections goes on. Not one Democrat nor one Republican can claim credit for helping the exposé made by the nonpartisan committee in St. Louis; neither have they contributed to the expenses of the investigations. The nonpartisan movement in Missouri is distinctive in that it moves by its own abilities and not by the grace of and with the money of politicians of any party. Motto: "Be nonpartisan—Vote for Botz."

FRAUD—FRAUD—FRAUD—NOW COMES KANSAS CITY

KANSAS CITY, MO., October 22.—(Special)—The theme song of Kansas City politics might well be taken from that old-time song, How Do You Like Your Oysters? The answer being, of course, "raw, raw, raw."

This will accurately describe the workings of the Pendergast machine—crude but raw.

Investigators for the Missouri nonpartisan committee, who have been working in Kansas City for several weeks, find it comparatively easy to find evidences of fraud and corruption which has escaped the bipartisan board of election commissioners appointed by Gov. Guy B. Park.

The only difficulty one runs into, in Kansas City, is finding someone who doesn't know of the fraud and padding which has made the boss-ridden metropolis of the Kaw the talk of the Nation.

For the benefit of those who are still gullible and unbelieving we print herewith photos of two widely separated locations in Kansas City, in which the registrations for the August 4 primary election tops the list for pure unadulterated fraud.

The June registration lists show 141 persons registered from here. This tops, by far, the St. Louis record of 56 registered from a vacant building at No. 7 Market Street, or the 136 registered from the shack at 410 North Levee Street.

St. Louis, with a new election board functioning, has made remarkable efforts to eliminate the "ghost vote" this November. Kansas City adopts the policy of watchful waiting, and does nothing to support the gallant fight being waged by a newly formed citizens' committee, headed by Col. Frederick E. Whitten, a soldier and lawyer, who has taken up the fight for clean politics in Missouri.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7079) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was about to express the hope that the Senate might recess now until Monday. I defer to the able leader on the Democratic side. I desire that we may quit now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought we were about to vote on the bill and get through with it.

Mr. McNARY My colleague from Kansas [Mr. REED] was occupied. I know that he has some further amendments to offer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McNARY. I yield; yes.

Mr. REED. I assure the majority leader that there is no chance of finishing the bill today.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that be the case, I have no desire to continue the session longer.

Mr. REED. I have eight other amendments which I propose to offer, and the consideration of each amendment will take from 20 to 30 minutes. There is no possible chance of finishing the bill today.

Mr. BARKLEY. How many other judges are provided for in the bill? There are only six; are there not?

Mr. ASHURST. Six district judges.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have already disposed of the circuit-judge controversy.

Mr. REED. I have not any doubt that the power of the majority can dispose of the rest of them in the same way that it disposed of this one; but that does not alter the fact that I have these amendments to offer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not understand how the Senator can have eight amendments when there are only six judges involved.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will take my word for it, I think the number is eight.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not disputing the Senator's word; but I suppose each amendment will be to strike out provision for a judge, and there are only six.

Mr. REED. There might be a motion to recommit, and there might be a motion for an investigation. There might be a number of things.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to hold the Senate in session longer if we cannot get a vote on the bill tonight.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the judicial conference recommended an additional judge for Kansas, possibly the Senator from Kansas may have in mind offering an amendment to provide an additional judge for that State.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would make seven.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. In order to make a correction necessitated by the amendment just adopted, providing two additional judges for the eighth circuit, I ask unanimous consent that in line 7, page 2, the word "two" be stricken out, and the word "three" inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I desire to ask the majority leader a question. Will it be agreeable for the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill dealing with the civil functions of the War Department immediately following the conclusion of the consideration of the pending bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was my purpose to have that done.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator will further yield, I should like to take just a moment to place in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, some data which may facilitate the consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, hearings held on House bill 8668 show that for the current year, 1940, the Chief of Engineers has $133,000,000 for flood-control purposes. The hearings further show that over a long period the damage caused by floods has averaged at least $100,000,000 a year.

The Chief of Engineers asked for the sum of $206,000,000 for flood-control work during the next fiscal year, 1941, but the Budget allowed only $70,000,000. Should only $70,000,000 be appropriated, the following things must happen:

First, many, if not all, projects under construction must be slowed down.

Second, few, if any, new projects may be started.

Third, many new projects of emergency nature must be delayed.

Fourth, the present personnel set-up of the Chief of Engineers must be reduced.

Evidence before the Appropriations Committee discloses strong support for increasing the $70,000,000 to $100,000,000. If the item for flood control is increased as much as $30,000,000, the Chief of Engineers will allocate the additional amount in accordance with the table shown on pages 94 and 95 of the report of the Senate committee hearings, as follows:

Tentative additional allocation of funds in the amount of $30,000,000 which can be profitably expended in the fiscal year 1941 for flood control, in addition to those listed within the Budget limitation of $70,000,000

In the event that the $70,000,000 carried in the bill as it passed the House for flood control is increased by $30,000,000, or the amount of $100,000,000 is appropriated for flood control, not only will additional sums be made available for many of the projects proposed to be carried on with funds from the $70,000,000 appropriated, but many new projects already authorized for construction will be started.

The break-down giving the names of the projects, together with the amount allocated to each project from the $70,000,000, is found on pages 90, 91, 92, and 93 of the hearings before the Senate subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and a similar break-down giving the names of the projects to receive additional funds and the new projects to be initiated with the additional $30,000,000 is found on pages 94 and 95 of the hearings.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our merciful Father, become unto us a supreme reality, then our lives may yield that inner unity which is the secret of peace and power. Unite us to Thee by a common task, by a humble devotion, and by the noblest aspirations which underlie all clear and high endeavor. Thou flawless one, come and dwell in the invisible sanctuaries of our souls. Suffuse our natures with patience, restraint, and with a trust enkindled by the spirit of our Lord and master. As the human conscience is a guide and whitely true that it turns to Thee, we pray keep us this day without blemish and free from stain. Arouse our souls to scale new heights of honor and sacrifice and may Thy will be done in all things. We beseech Thee for earthly peace; O let fears begin to vanish and let us hear the chimes of good will peal forth in this troubled and tragic hour of the world. Through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, 197 years ago tomorrow there was born in nearby Virginia the greatest humanitarian 19 centuries have produced since the great human God trod the hills of Nazareth.

I have highly resolved that every year as long as I live, in some form of public utterance, I will call attention in the best way my poor command of language will permit to the anniversary of Thomas Jefferson, not so much to render homage to Jefferson, although I worship his memory, as to direct attention to his philosophy and the blessings that would flow from it if it were intelligently and faithfully applied in shaping the destiny of our Republic. This year, as last, I have sought the privilege of paying my humble tribute in this Chamber.

When in these troubled times we search the Valhalla of the heavens for a guiding star we will find in Jefferson the great luminary that will light the way if we have the vision to see and the determination to follow.

We have wandered far from the course charted by this inspired man, but it is not too late to retrace our steps to safer ground, and that is what we should now be thinking of doing if his natal day has any meaning for us and for the world. We can do nothing better on this historic anniversary than to take stock of our wanderings from the Jeffersonian faith and reflect on how we can make our national conduct harmonize with his principles.

He was opposed to every form of international meddling. He incessantly preached the doctrine that America should keep out of Europe and Europe should keep out of America. Sword-rattling speeches of Cabinet ministers and others high in authority and secret manipulations of mysterious roving ambassadors would come under his emphatic ban if he were living today. He believed that America should so conduct itself that every nation on earth would be our friend.

It was never his thought that America should be the arsenal to furnish lethal instruments of death and destruction to other nations and if it be possible that from his high place in the vaulted skies he is cognizant of what is going on here, his soul must have sickened when it was announced the other day that one set of fighting powers is placing orders in American factories for a billion dollars of bombing planes to kill human beings by wholesale. He feared, and rightly so, that if we yield to the seduction of a vast and profitable war trade it would draw us ever closer to the yawning chasm of war, and who is there to say that that fear is not justified in the year of our Lord 1940?

Jefferson believed in strict economy in governmental affairs. He held that debt "leads to misery and decay." He favored a simple form of decentralized government, to conform to his theory that "the best government is the one that governs the least." What would he think, I wonder, of a national debt of $45,000,000,000 and a centralized bureaucracy so highly flowered that there are now a million persons on the departmental pay roll, the maximum number of Federal office holders and employees in our history?

He waged relentless warfare against every form of tyranny that enslaves the human spirit, but today we have the spectacle of one of our great political parties—the same thing might be said of the other one, too—fearing to nominate a man of a certain religious faith for President, lest to do so would court defeat in advance, so great a hold has bigotry on our national imagination.

WHEN DEMOCRACY WAS MURDERED

Jefferson had implicit faith in the people and the righteousness of their judgments, based on full information. If his spirit were hovering over the House of Representatives on January 10, 1938, it must have grieved bitterly when he saw how democracy was murdered in this Chamber, for it was on that day that a combination of our leaders, elected under the name and emblem of the Democratic Party which he founded, joined to prevent even the consideration of my resolution to give the people a right to vote on proposals to send our boys into the slaughter pens of foreign wars. Jefferson spent a long lifetime seeking to enlarge and extend the frontiers of democracy, and I know what he would think of such repressive tactics. What occurred here on that day was a sight to make the angels weep. It was a sorry and tragic spectacle in our American history, showing how far our leaders have departed from the faith of the great founder of democracy.

Oh, if there ever was a time when we should turn backward in solemn contemplation and reexamine the basic Jeffersonian philosophy on which this Nation was founded, that time is now!

Jefferson saw a vision of things as the Creator intended them to be. He saw the possibility of a society based on equal rights and opportunities, with its foundations laid in the brotherhood of man, capable of developing the highest form of manhood and womanhood and of ultimately ushering in the maximum of human happiness on earth, an order of which it might be said in the language of the old hymn: "This is heaven's borderland."

It is well for us now and then, and especially on these Jefferson anniversary occasions, to meditate on the basic philosophy on which this Nation was founded. That credo is expressed in the briefest possible compass in Jefferson's own words in the preamble of the Declaration of Independence:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

This is the very essence of the franchise of freedom. It is the cornerstone upon which was builded the magnificent temple of government called the United States of America. It came as a voice from heaven to the beleaguered, the downtrodden, and oppressed of every land. Freedom. Freedom of political action. Freedom of conscience.

Freedom from the whip of masters. Freedom to order one's life as one pleases provided he does no injustice to others. Equality of rights and opportunities. Oh, Jefferson had, indeed, spoken as if from the throne of God!

THE VISION OF JEFFERSON

To get a full appreciation of the beauty of his conception let us try to grasp the vision that was before him when he wrote the immortal declaration.

It is a vision of God the Architect, the loving Father of us all, creating a cosmic commonwealth of infinite beauty and making it ready for His children. Vast, fertile plains to yield the things that sustain life, great rivers that flow in majesty to the seas, cascades that dance and sparkle in the sunlight, mountain slopes that rise in towering grandeur to the very feet of the Creator. Vineyards and orange groves, and the sunshine and the shadow chasing each other over waving fields of wheat and corn. In the depths of the earth God deposited untold billions of tons of coal to warm the human family, in the waterfalls he placed power without limit to drive the wheels of commerce. All things that make for prosperity, welfare, and happiness of the human race are embraced in God's gift to man on the morning of creation.

It would be presumptuous to try to fathom the purposes of the Infinite, but right-thinking minds always have agreed, and always will agree, that God intended this gift as a great universal commonwealth to be shared by all of His children, spoke with divine authority when he declared that "all men and arguing from that premise, who can doubt that Jefferson are created equal" and when he enunciated his immortal doctrine of "equal rights to all; special privileges to none"? His was the voice of the seer who lives close to the eternal verities and draws his inspiration from the fountain of life.

He saw things as the Creator intended them to be. When I think of America I like to think of it as a great big family of 130,000,000 souls, a circle of equality, at whose table is always spread a feast of love and whosoever will may come. The beauty of this philosophy is that it fosters comradeship. It makes brothers of you and me and all of us. That was the ideal of Jefferson. That is the vision of government this marvelous man caught and put on canvas in the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights.

We know, if we stop to think and reason, that our present misfortunes are directly traceable in large measure to departure from the teachings of Jefferson. We can only trust that by retracing our steps and placing our Government in harmony with his precepts we may yet be able to salvage and make secure the future of America. To no holier task could we consecrate ourselves. We owe this duty no less to posterity than to our day and generation, for we are trustees of the future and hold in our protecting arms the children of countless generations yet unborn.

FROM OUT OF THE BACKGROUND OF HISTORY

Few of us there are who would not gladly die for our children. We want our sons to have every chance to acquire useful knowledge, to develop high ideals, to grow up to be clean, manly men and to live lives of service, so that when the end comes they may take their place among the stars by the side of the Creator. We want our daughters to have respectable clothes to wear at school and to have some of the advantages of culture, music, and art as they grow up, so that they will be altogether good and lovely when they reach womanhood's radiant bloom. And we want all of the children of all of the centuries to come to enjoy these unalloyed blessings.

With the love that fills our hearts for the children no less of the future than of today we should one and all regard ourselves as trustees under the will of Thomas Jefferson to do all within our power, as God gives us vision and strength, to keep the lanes of opportunity open to our children and our children's children to the most remote generation.

When a wayfarer wanders far out of the beaten road into the stony paths that lead to the jungles where death and destruction lurk, there is only one thing for him to do, and that is to retrace his steps to safety. That is what this Nation must do if it would live. From out of the background of history comes Thomas Jefferson to point the way. In him the image of God shines most brightly. Just as he held true to human rights in the beginning, he will not fail us now. Let us then reconsecrate ourselves at the feet of Jefferson and learn once more from him that we should cultivate friendly relations with all nations and entangling alliances with none; that we should esteem our fellow citizens not for what we can squeeze out of them by the rack and thumbscrew of special privilege but for what we can do for them to give them a larger part in life and to make them happy and contented. May this ideal of service grow until it fills all of America with its presence and takes possession of all of our hearts. In the language of Webster at Bunker Hill: "Let it arise until it meets the sun in his coming; until the first streaks of morning gild it and parting day lingers and plays upon its summit." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a report of the Farm Security Administration in reference to rehabilitation.

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a telegram from a constituent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter from the Stark Tri-County Building Trades Council.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by Richard A. Staderman, president of the American Good Government Society of Washington, D. C., the general counsel of which is Col. O. R. McGuire, chairman of the committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement on the sugar program in Puerto Rico that I made before the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico [Mr. PAGÁN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a comparison of the 7 pre-Roosevelt years contrasted with the 7 under the New Deal, so that the people of this country may get a picture of what the New Deal administration has been doing to them. This comes from the New York Sun. I think it would be very valuable if the public would realize what the New Deal has done. This does not say anything about the financial statement and if we were to include that, it would certainly enlighten the people so that they would know that a huge deficit is being piled up that the children of oncoming generations are going to be burdened with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

THE ROCKEFELLER CHOIR

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, it so happens that it was my lot to be born in the western half of the greatest State in the Union, Pennsylvania. Of course, you knew that without my mentioning the State. My home town happens to be Perryopolis. A suburb of my town happens to be the city of Pittsburgh. In the city of Pittsburgh we have the greatest educational institution in the world, the Cathedral of Learning. If you were to visit the Cathedral of Learning, it would do your heart and soul good. That great edifice has been dedicated to a philosophy that should be taught in a democracy. They do other things there besides mathematics, history, and so forth. They sing.

The Heinz Chapel a cappella choir, made up of University of Pittsburgh students, will sing over the National Broadcasting System, WMAL, today at 4 o'clock, and if you tune in at that time, you will be able to hear these 42 young men and women.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday it is proposed that a convention to set up the inter-American bank will be signed by representatives of the various nations, including the United States. I cannot in good conscience let this day go by without expressing to the House the grave fears I have regarding this project. It is proposed in this convention that the bank be controlled by an international board of directors and that it shall have access to the precious metal stocks of the various signatory nations on the same basis as their own governments. The possibility of shifting gold from one country to another by means of this bank might give its directors a very great power over the domestic currencies of the signatory nations. Congress must, as I understand it, grant a charter to this bank. But the convention to be signed agrees that the charter will be unchangeable except upon the request of the board of directors of the bank. At the very least this is something the Members of the House should study with the greatest care. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a recent release from Secretary Wallace on the Farm Credit Administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, relating to the Civil Aeronautics Authority: Appropriates $1,543,932 as proposed by the Senate instead of $1,659,194, as proposed by the House, for general administration; appropriates $469,222, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $519,222, as proposed by the House, for economic regulation; appropriates $2,406,520, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,420,000, as proposed by the House, for safety regulation; and provides a contract authorization for air-navigation-facility establishment of $2,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,500,000, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 8, 9, and 10, relating to the Civil Service Commission: Eliminates the language, inserted by the Senate, making $25,040 available for work heretofore performed by the Council of Personnel Administration; makes a reduction of $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, in the amount for salaries and expenses carried in the House bill; and transfers, as proposed by the Senate, the sum of $175,000 from the Veterans' Administration to the Civil Service Commission to enable the latter organization to pay the Veterans' Administration the cost of physical examinations of applicants for and employees in the Federal classified service and to place the burden of the appropriation on the Civil Service Commission instead of making it a charge upon Veterans' Administration funds.

On Nos. 11 and 12, relating to the Federal Communications Commission: Appropriates $2,051,340, as proposed by the Senate instead of $2,091,340, as proposed by the House, the reduction of $40,000 eliminating provision in the House bill for a radio-monitoring station in Alaska.

On Nos. 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27, relating to the Federal Works Agency: Makes a direct appropriation of $250,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of an allotment of $200,000 from funds of constituent units of the agency as proposed by the House, for the Office of the Administrator, and makes offsetting reductions on this account, as proposed by the Senate, totaling $100,000, in various amounts provided in the House bill for constituent units of the agency; appropriates $150,000, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, and $190,000, as proposed by the Senate, for equipment and furniture for the New York customhouse; and limits to $125,000, in the language proposed by the Senate, the amount for the informational and educational service of the United States Housing Authority, instead of $152,000, as proposed by the House, and $50,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 29 and 30, relating to the Maritime Commission: Appropriates $144,500,000, instead of $125,000,000, as proposed by the House, and $164,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, and makes a technical change in the text of the paragraph, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 31, 32, and 33, relating to the Veterans' Administration: Appropriates $101,228,240, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $101,430,240, as proposed by the House, for administrative, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services, a reduction of $175,000, which sum is transferred to the Civil Service Commission by Senate amendment No. 9 to enable the Commission to reimburse the Veterans' Administration for expenses of physical examinations of applicants for and employees in the Federal classified civil service; and changes the text of the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration so as to make it clear that the amounts used for aid to State or Territorial homes for those veterans eligible for admission to Veterans' Administration facilities for "domiciliary" care shall also include those veterans eligible for "hospital" care.

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following Senate amendments:

Nos. 1 and 2, relating to the appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board.

No. 28, amending the House limitation on the appropriation for contract payments to public-housing agencies by the United States Housing Authority so as to restrict the low-rent-housing projects financed by such Federal contributions to projects for tenants who are American citizens.

JED JOHNSON,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
JOE STARNES,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill, which is now before the House for consideration, insofar as the conference report proper is concerned, contains, I believe, nothing of a controversial nature. There will be probably 30 minutes' time used for some remarks by several gentlemen, but I do not believe there is anything in the report that is controversial. There are several amendments brought back by the conferees, technically in disagreement, but only as to one amendment is there any real disagreement among the conferees, and that is the amendment respecting the National Resources Planning Board, and that will come up later for discussion and a separate vote.

The bill as it stands is $1,120,243,528. It is $19,540,000 less than the bill as it passed the Senate. It is $74,460,945 less than the Budget estimates.

A number of interesting departments and bureaus are provided for in this bill, notably the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The Civil Aeronautics Authority was set up by the Congress for the purpose of having jurisdiction over civil aeronautics, as the name implies. While it has had some internal difficulties, some growing pains, so to speak—speaking only for myself—I would regret exceedingly to see anything happen to the present set-up of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I know of no reason why it should be combined with the Department of Commerce, and I sincerely hope that that will not happen.

I believe this important agency should have an opportunity to mature and to continue to render the important service which it is rendering to aviation. [Applause.] Especially is this true of the Safety Board, which, I understand, the proposed reorganization order abolishes entirely. I think it would be a great pity to have that happen, and I hope very much that both branches of the Congress will give very serious and mature thought to that suggestion before it permits such a thing to happen.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I agree with the gentleman in respect of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board; and may I be indulged for just a moment to say that at the time the reorganization bill was considered here I offered an amendment that the Civil Aeronautics Authority be exempt from any possible order of reorganization, since the Congress had so recently created it. Those in charge of that legislation opposed me, and assured Members there would be no effort to change the set-up of the C. A. A. I call the gentleman's attention further to the fact that we have only a few days ago completed a year of splendid service by the domestic air lines, with not a single fatality, and I think this is due in great degree to the Safety Board and Authority which were created by Congress. No move should be made now to go backward. We should oppose any plan which would weaken this fine program. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Another item in the conference report that I would like to mention briefly is the item of $25,040 for the Council on Personnel Administration, which goes out of the bill. The Council on Personnel Administration was set up by an Executive order to assist in coordinating the personnel functions of the various Government departments.

The House left out the item sent up by the Budget, the Senate inserted it in the bill, and it was left out in conference. After the matter was discussed it was the judgment, I believe, certainly of a majority of the conferees, that matters pertaining to a coordination of personnel functions might very properly be carried on by the Civil Service Commission under its general authority and that it was not necessary to carry a separate appropriation earmarked for that purpose.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, of anything else in the conference report that is of any particular interest. If there is, I should be very pleased briefly to try to answer if anyone wishes to ask me any questions.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the difference between the amount of the bill as sent over to the Senate originally and as brought back by the conferees?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The bill as it passed the House was $1,100,187,267. The Senate added about $40,000,000 or a little over $40,000,000.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virgina. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman does not mean to imply by his statement in reference to the Personnel Board that the committee favored the establishment of a personnel set-up throughout the Government service calling for the expenditure of $1,000,000 or more a year?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, the committee has definitely said it did not favor that, I will say to the gentleman. I was referring to this small group in the Civil Service Commission which is seeking to coordinate personnel functions.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman explain the meaning of amendment No. 28, amending the gentleman's limitation on the Housing Administration?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. As it passed the House the alien limitation on the United States Housing Authority seemed to be subject, perhaps, to the construction that no person who was not a citizen of the United States could occupy, even for a transitory period, a project of the United States Housing Authority. The amendment as brought back, if concurred in by the House, will mean that the United States Housing Authority cannot accept as a tenant any person who is not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the gentleman will yield further on that point, does that mean now that if the tenant is a citizen and a parent of the tenant happens not to be a citizen that family is not disqualified under this provision?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It means just what it says—he has to be a citizen to be a tenant of the property.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I want to ask the gentleman if the amendment relating to the National Resources Board, which is to come up on a separate vote, is not the feature of the bill which the House refused to appropriate for because the Resources Board had not been authorized by legislation, and when it went to the Senate the Senate put authority for the appropriation back in the bill, and that is the question that will be the issue when we vote on that matter.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is not just exactly as the gentleman has stated it. The Appropriations Committee did not report the item because it had not been authorized by law and it was not acted on in the House. As it has been reinserted by the Senate, it changes the functions of the National Resources Planning Board to quite an extent, as I shall explain fully when we get to that amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. Do I understand the gentleman to say that no occupant of any one of these houses can be an alien?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; I said just the reverse of that. I said that to be a tenant one must be a citizen.

Mr. BLOOM. But supposing the son is a citizen and he wants to have his father or mother occupy this house with him and they are not citizens. Can they not live with him?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not see why they could not.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Did the conferees make any provision for a tenant in the process of becoming a citizen?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They did not.

Mr. MAGNUSON. He must be a full citizen?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; before he can become a tenant.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the gentleman unintentionally made a mistake in the beginning of his remarks, if he will permit me to say so, wherein he said that the purpose of the President's reorganization was to abolish the Air Safety Board. I think the purpose is not to abolish it, although I agree with the gentleman that it should stay where it is, but the purpose is to permit the Civil Aeronautics Authority to take over the functions of the Safety Board.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Perhaps it is a distinction without a difference, but it does discontinue the separate entity of the Safety Board.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I said abolish it. Perhaps some other word would be better.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The functions of the Air Safety Board still continue.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; but to be carried on by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. It seems to me there is a substantial reason why that should be a separate, independent agency.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman will recall that during the hearings on his bill the Veterans' Administrator made a commitment that he proposed to correct the practice of requiring the employees of Federal facilities to be domiciled there, which required them to pay certain amounts from their salaries, regardless of whether they were married or not, or had a home close by the facility.

Practically every Member of the House is receiving letters in regard to this matter. General Hines has reiterated to me what he told the gentleman's committee. There is a bill before the committee of which I am the chairman that many Members want considered. Is there anything in this conference report or bill now that would prevent General Hines from carrying out his commitment which he made to the gentleman's committee and to my committee?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is nothing that would prevent him from doing it. I expect that he will do it. Of course, the bill has not yet become a law.

Mr. COCHRAN. I realize that, and I know by the gentleman's statement at the hearings he is anxious to have this matter adjusted.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We are just now winding it up.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am pleased to know there is nothing in the bill that would prevent it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I feel confident it will be done as soon as they can put it into operation administratively.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. As a member of the Reorganization Committee I am pleased with the hint the gentleman gave us. The gentleman said that he had not yet learned why this Civil Aeronautics Authority should undertake this. Yesterday it was said that it was for better administration; they feel that that Department should take care of the Budget, and maintaining procurement. Has it ever occurred to the gentleman that Mr. Hopkins is particularly informed on aeronautics?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not want to enter into the question of whether Mr. Hopkins knows anything about aeronautics or not, but from what I know of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, I do not think it ought to be put into the Department of Commerce.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman does not think that the procurement of what they think is needed should be handed to somebody who knows nothing about it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think it should stay where it is.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. With reference to the question asked by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], as the gentleman knows, I am the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. This question continually arises, and I think every Member of Congress will remember that these hospitals are built for the benefit of the inmates, the disabled veterans, who are compelled to go to them, and that General Hines ought not to have his hands tied so that he cannot keep these employees close enough to these hospitals to do the work and to meet the emergencies that may arise.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. The question was asked a little while ago as to the total carried in this bill as it came back from the Senate with $40,000,000 added to it. As a result of the conference report, is the amount raised or lowered?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is lowered about half in two. The bill is $39,500,000 less than as it passed the Senate.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. When this bill was in the House the gentleman from Virginia will recall that the House adopted an amendment establishing a reciprocal pay schedule to cover cost of hospitalizing employees of the various departments of the Federal Government when said employees are hospitalized in the facilities of the Veterans' Administration. Did the conferees agree to a change of language in the amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; it did.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. Did I understand the gentleman correctly in reply to the inquiry by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] that he and the other managers on the part of the House favored an appropriation for the National Resources Board?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMASON. You expect to contend for that when the amendment comes up?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman understood me to say that I did, and a majority of the conferees did. The minority members, I understand, do not.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What is the gentleman's understanding as to the authorization for the Maritime Commission with respect to commitments for new ships that we will be called upon to appropriate for next year?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman asked me that just before we took up this report. I do not know of any authority that the Maritime Commission has to make commitments which the Congress has not specifically given them, unless it might be some of the commitments that came to the Maritime Commission when they took over the commitments of the Shipping Board. I am not able to be very clear to the gentleman on that. If they have any authority to contract for vessels that we have not given them specifically, I do not know of it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I asked the gentleman because I thought there should be something in the RECORD about that. I will discuss the matter later.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am not quite clear on this amendment No. 28. I am afraid there will be much confusion on the part of many local housing authorities as to its interpretation. I think the gentleman would be rendering a great service for the purpose of clarity to explain it in detail.

In other words, how would it apply to a family, for instance, where the applicant is a citizen and his father is not? In other words, it amounts to a question of defining the word "tenant." If the tenant is a citizen and the parent or child of that tenant is not a citizen, is that family barred from occupying any premises under the Housing Authority?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would not think so. That is the answer I gave the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]. My answer is that they would not be barred.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, when the President submitted his Budget to the Congress he estimated that the deficit for this fiscal year that we are now in would run $3,932,000,000, $300,000,000 above the deficit for last year. Already the deficit is $300,000,000 above what it was a year ago. The income-tax receipts for the current fiscal year will be such that the revenues will be probably at least $200,000,000 above what was estimated in the Budget, but the deficiency appropriation estimates to be used in this fiscal year will probably run $300,000,000 more than was estimated at the time the Budget was submitted. For the next fiscal year the President estimated a deficit of $2,700,000,000, and I am unable to see, on the basis of the appropriations so far and current expenditures that we are being put up against as the result of deficiency appropriations, how we are going to get along with a deficit of only $2,700,000,000 in the fiscal year 1941 which begins the 1st of July next.

At the present time the national debt is $42,540,000,000. The increase, according to the Budget figures that were sent to us, by July 1, $1,300,000,000, would make a debt of $43,840,000,000. That would only leave $1,200,000,000 within the statutory debt limit of $45,000,000,000, to apply on the deficit that is set up for the next fiscal year.

I do not know to what extent the membership of the House and the people of the United States realize the seriousness of that situation. It means that unless some figures are juggled or unless we have paper money inflation, we are going to be in the position where we have to increase the debt limit by the 1st of January next beyond the $45,000,000,000 figure which now exists.

I feel that the attention of the House and the country should be called to this situation in a most emphatic manner. Let me say to you that in spite of the increase of $67,000,000 on the social security and labor bills that were in here, the House is below the Budget, currently, approximately to the tune of $300,000,000. In one bill now in conference, the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, there are Senate increases of $340,000,000 in one way or another. In other bills there are increases that will total, according to the best estimate I can give you, upward of $120,000,000.

It is of the utmost importance that we cut down these appropriation bills. The President recommended in his Budget estimate an increase in taxes totaling $460,000,000. Nothing has been done and nothing has been thought of along that line. The Appropriations Committee attempted to solve the problem by reducing appropriations, and, insofar as it has been able, it has followed that rule. I am sorry that this bill, as it comes from the Senate, carries an increase of almost $20,000,000 above the House figures. I do not blame the conferees, because they have done the best they could and have given us the best deal they could get. But I do feel that we have to cut down on these governmental activities, or we are going to have a very serious situation.

We are today appropriating money in these words:

> There is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,118,000,000.

There is no money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and there is not any money in the Treasury that is available for the operations of this bill that we have before us, nor is there prospect that there will be sufficient money there except by operations of inflation. Frankly, from my own standpoint, I feel that this House and the country must be aroused to the serious situation that confronts them. I feel that we must put the brakes on, we must realize that handing out money for different activities is not going to help the people if we break completely the financial structure of the country; and that is what we are doing right now when we pass this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I do not believe that there is a Representative in Congress more diligent in trying to keep down appropriations than the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. I ask the gentleman if in his study of the finances of the country and the realization that in the operation of the Government for the current fiscal year the administration has gone in the red $2,869,863,540.13 up until April 8, the gentleman in his conferences with the Senators or other members of the Appropriations Committee has been able to find the answer to the question, Where are we going to get the money to pay these bills if we continue the way we are going?

Mr. TABER. I have never received an answer to that question, I will say to the House. I have never heard that question put up to Senate conferees more forcibly than it was by the gentleman from Virginia, who brings in this report.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I presume the other members of the House have been impressed with the gentleman's statement as I have. I have been tremendously impressed. By some it may be said that what the gentleman has stated is partisan; but if there is anybody on the other side of the aisle, or anywhere in the House, who would rise now and dispute what the gentleman from New York has said, let him do so. Does the gentleman from New York know of any diversity of opinion that would in any way challenge what the gentleman has said?

Mr. TABER. I do not. I am not making a partisan statement. I am making a statement designed to make the membership of this House and the people of the country realize the seriousness of the situation facing the country. I am trying to awaken people to the situation and the realization that unless we stop appropriating money beyond the possibilities of revenue, beyond the authorizations for borrowing money, that we are facing nothing more nor less than inflation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think in our consideration of the national debt we have overlooked a very important item. Last year we increased the national debt limit by about $11,000,000,000. By taking the ceiling off the limit of bonded indebtedness we created a situation whereby the Treasury Department is authorized to obligate the Government to about $11,000,000,000 in addition to the debt limit. If the gentleman wants to get the true picture of the situation at the present time, he must add to the Treasury figures of forty-two-billion-odd dollars another $2,000,000,000 representing currency which has been issued beyond our currency needs during the last 5 or 6 years. In other words, the coined and issued currency of the Nation in circulation in 1933 was about $5,600,000,000, whereas at the present time it is about $7,500,000,000. For the first time in the history of the United States it has been thought necessary to increase the volume of circulating media at a time when prices were increasing. Therein lies the danger, and therein lies the intellectual dishonesty in respect to the debt limit. Instead of coming before us and honestly saying we must raise the debt limit, they are issuing currency, as the gentleman suggests, and accomplishing the same result by adding to the volume of the currency.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I cannot at this time.

What the gentleman from Michigan states is true.

It has been suggested that we are going to be able to salvage $700,000,000 out of Government corporations in the coming fiscal year. Let me say to you that there are no assets of Government corporations that can be turned into cash that will yield $700,000,000. The debts of these Government corporations today total $8,800,000,000; those that are guaranteed by the Government aggregate $5,700,000,000. In addition to the debt limit there are tremendous losses in some of these Government corporations at the present time. The salvage by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation on sales of real estate which it had to take over on mortgages averages only a little over 60 percent of the amount of the loans. This is a sorry picture. There are tremendous losses in places that are not taken into consideration in this set-up.

The United States Housing Authority has made guaranties of obligations which it must meet to pay gratuities to these housing authorities which total $1,600,000,000, and these have to be paid in the next 60 years so much a year.

There is a debt growing out of the issuance of silver certificates. They issue a silver certificate on the basis of an ounce, but in actual fact on only four-fifths of an ounce—silver which, if sold in the world market, would not be worth over 16 cents an ounce if the Government ceased to buy silver.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will listen, the gentleman will understand the situation. I cannot yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I wish to develop the question.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield. The gentleman will understand the situation if he listens.

That situation is a terrible one, and the Government is in debt to the tune of $1,800,000,000 on the silver proposition. Against this debt it has assets in the form of silver which would not sell for over 20 cents an ounce on today's market and which would not sell for more than 16 cents an ounce if the Government stopped buying the silver. The Government is forced to protect its interest in silver. This represents a poor situation.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that as the Congress approaches these items where it is asked to vote away the people's money, that the House, the body at the other end of the Capitol, and the people of the country will come to the conclusion that the Congress cannot continue to appropriate out of the Treasury money that is not there. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this minute to address the House.

Today is the anniversary of our beloved Speaker and I wish to extend my congratulations, and I know I extend the good wishes of the Member of this House to him. I sincerely hope that when he returns to his arduous duties as Speaker he will come back in the very best of health. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, laws are a good deal like ships. You launch them with a great deal of fanfare and rhetorical champagne and then forget about them. I have particular reference to the act under which we created the Maritime Commission and consolidated the maritime activities of this Government in 1936.
